At the close of the meeting at Baton Rouge, La., of which the Rev. A. J. Witherspoon gave our readers an account last week, five communicants were added to the church on profession of their faith; and five children and one adult were baptized.—Southern Presbyterian.

During the last three weeks the interior of Pine Street church has been undergoing repairs. It is expected that the stated services will be resumed next Sunday, when Dr. Rutherford, returned from a short visit to Kentucky, will occupy the pulpit.—St. Louis Presbyterian, 5th.

The Rev. L. E. Scott writes to the Central Presbyterian from Hampton, Va.: "A Presbyterian church was organized in the bounds of the East Hanover Presbytery last April at Hampton, by a committee appointed for the purpose, of which Rev. J. M. Rose was chairman, consisting of twelve members. At our communion on the first Sabbath in August two were added to our little band—one by certificate and one on profession of faith. I entered upon the work in this field on the second Sabbath in June last. Preach alternately at Hampton and Suffolk. We are making every effort to build a church edifice at Hampton. The importance of our little move here will appear when you bear in mind that this is the only (?) Presbyterian church regularly ministered to on the peninsula. We are much encouraged to go forward by the assurance that succor will be given us by friends. I have never seen such determination and zeal manifested in church enterprise as here. We are in great hope that several others who are much interested will join with us.

GENERAL.

Rev. John G. Whitfield of the N. C. Methodist Protestant Conference died at Enfield, N. C., on the 28th ulto., in the 69th year of his age.

Rev. W. S. Bynum, Episcopal minister of this place, has received and accepted a call to the rectorship of St. Paul's chapel in Winston.—Greensboro Central Protestant.

Rev. Dr. George B. Taylor is still an invalid at the Caldwell House at the White Sulphur Springs. His physician thinks he is suffering from accumulations of malaria, collected in his system while in Italy.—Staunton Vindicator.

Rev. Mr. Moser, a Lutheran minister residing near China Grove, is now a dangerous madman, and has to be kept from his wife and children for their safety. The insanity is the result of a serious spell of typhoid fever, and it is feared is incurable.

Rev. Dr. McAnally of the St. Louis Christian Advocate, on Sabbath, Aug. 31st, reached his semi-centennial as a minister. The St. Louis Presbyterian says: "After a ministry of fifty years the Doctor is still hale and full of work as pastor and editor and in occasional services in the regions roundabout. And so may it be for many a year to come."

Rev. Thomas E. Skinner was installed pastor of the First Baptist church of Raleigh, N. C., on Sabbath last, 31st ult. Rev. Dr. T. H. Pritchard delivered the address. Rev. Dr. T. H. Pritchard was installed as President of Wake Forest College. A large crowd attended. Addresses were delivered by Rev. A. C. Dixon, Rev. Dr. Skinner, Judge Merrimon and the President. The corner-stone of Wingate Hall was laid, Rev. Dr. Skinner delivering the address.

On Saturday last the debt which has been hanging over the Baptist church for eleven years was paid off in full. The cost of recent repairs to their property has been paid off in full also. We congratulate our Baptist friends on the happy state of their affairs, and trust a future of brightness, both temporal and spiritual, is opening before them. Mr. Carroll deserves great credit for his prudent management of church matters.—Lexington (Va.) Gazette.

The Africo-American Presbyterian reports, through its correspondents, revivals in several churches (colored) in North Carolina connected with the Northern Presbyterian Church. At Wilson five adults and three infants were baptized and seven persons received to membership; at Ebenezer church there were many inquirers, backsliders restored, and a delightful Christian feeling prevailing; at Bensalem with four baptisms and additions there was great and general interest; at Oakland church, on August 17th, with remarkably orderly proceedings, there were twenty-five hopeful conversions.

The Presbytery of A. R. church met on Monday at Amity church, Iredell county, Rev. W. B. Presly, pastor. The following ministers delivered sermons: Revs. C. B. Betts of Charleston, S. C.; W. W. Orr of Huntersville, N. C.; Dr. James Boyce of Due West, S. C.; E. E. Boyce of King's Mountain, N. C.; R. Lathan of Yorkville, S. C., and W. T. Waller of Charlotte. Presbytery was opened with a sermon by Rev. D. G. Caldwell. Rev. W. W. Orr was chosen moderator. Messrs. W. O. Cochrane and Horace Rabb each delivered a discourse preparatory to license. There were forty delegates present. Mr. Mason Pressly of Coddle Creek, son of Dr. Pressly, was received as a student of theology. J. L. Chalmers and R. M. Stevens also preached trial discourses. Horace Rabb and W. O. Cochrane were licensed. Rev. E. E. Boyce officiated. Steele Creek, Rev. J. C. Chalmers' church, was selected as the next place of meeting.—Southern Home.

Rev. Dr. Adiel Sherwood, a Baptist veteran, died in this city August 18th. Born at Fort Edward, New York, October 3d, 1791, he was nearly 88 years old. He was a minister for sixty-nine years, and forty years ago was noted for his power in revivals. He was also a scholar of eminence, as his "Notes on the New Testament" testifies. He was a guileless man, as singularly unobtrusive as he was unusually worthy. He lived a busy, useful life: he died the death of the righteous.—St. Louis Presbyterian.

NORTHERN.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Rev. Dr. John Armstrong of Fairfield, Iowa, died on August 13th, after an illness of two weeks.

Mrs. Thomas of Philadelphia has built a neat stone church at Kane, Pa., at a cost of $20,000 and presented it to the Presbyterian congregation.

The Board of Foreign Missions has under appointment to foreign fields Mrs. Johnson from Southern Illinois to Syria, Miss Matilda Cochrane for Monterey, Miss Susan Calhoun, who will remain a year here preparing for the work, and Miss Hartwell.

The Rev. Edwin Town, a member of the Presbytery of Newcastle, died of neuralgia of the heart, in Wilmington, Del., August 26th, in the 77th year of his age.

The First Presbyterian church at Saratoga, which is embarrassed by debt, has lately had friends to donate $6,500 conditional upon the amount of $12,000, which is needed, being raised.

The Memorial Presbyterian church of Brooklyn has doubled its membership since its present pastor was called, two years ago.

EPISCOPAL.

Rev. John A. Paddock, rector of St. Peter's church in New York city, is spoken of as the successor of Bishop Odenheimer of New Jersey.

The statistics of the Diocese of Pennsylvania are as follows, viz: Number of parishes 124, clergy 201, candidates for orders 28, baptisms during the last conventional year 3,599, of which 549 were adult, confirmations 1,559, communicants added 1,886, removed or died 937, present number of communicants 23,387, Sunday school teachers 2,683, Sunday school scholars 26,231, teachers of Bible classes 210, scholars in Bible classes 5,964, number of churches and chapels 137, value of church property $6,560,000.

The condition of the Episcopal Church in Nebraska is shown by the following statistics: Number of parishes 26, organized missions 25; unorganized missions 45, total of parishes and missions organized and unorganized 96, number of clergy 29, candidates for orders 3 educational institutions 2, professors and teachers 13, students 156, Sunday school teachers 184, Sunday school pupils 1,702, baptisms during the year 207, confirmations 140, present number of communicants 1,350. Contributions: for domestic and foreign missions $294 39, diocesan missions $1,022 46, parochial purposes $15,135 72; total of contributions $16,452 57. Value of churches, parsonages and institutions $182,308 11.

METHODIST.

An effort is making at Des Moines, the Episcopal residence of Bishop Andrews, of the Methodist Church, to raise $18,000, with which to purchase an exhibition building for an institution to be known as the Methodist University of Iowa. The owners of the building value it at $30,000, but offer it at $18,000, making the remaining $12,000 a gift. About $5,000 more will be needed to put the building in proper condition for use.

An exchanges says: Bishop Moore (colored) of the African Methodist Episcopal Zion church of America, that numbers about 200,000 members, is now in England raising funds in aid of Zion Hill Collegiate Institute of Middletown, Pa., and the Wesleyan University of Fayetteville, N. C.

The Rev. Moses How, a Methodist Episcopal clergyman of Portsmouth, N. H., is said to be the oldest preacher of any denomination in New England. He is ninety years old, and he began to preach sixty-five years ago.

The chapel expenditure of the Wesleyans of Great Britain has been increased from $1,230,500 to $2,168,500, and more than six million dollars have been spent in the payment of debts. In 1865 the Jubilee fund of $900,000, which had been collected during two years, was distributed; in 1879 the Thanksgiving fund has nearly reached that sum hardly a year after it was started.

BAPTIST.

By the will of the late George Mugway, of Salem county, N. J., the small farm on which he resided at the time of his death is given to the use of the First Baptist church of Salem. The farm, with the improvements thereon, is valued at about $3,000.

The Fourth avenue Baptist church in Pittsburgh, Pa., has subscribed and actually paid out for building, current expenses and benevolent objects over $85,000.

CONGREGATIONAL.

There are 22,775 Congregationalists in Ohio.

The average ministerial age of the 190 Congregational ministers in Maine, is twenty years; of the 52 who have no charge, thirty-four years; of the others fourteen years. Of the ordained ministers, six have been in the ministry from 51 to 64 years, average 56 years; twenty from 41 to 48 years, average 44; seventeen from 31 to 40 years, average 35, thirty-two from 21 to 30 years, average 26 years; forty-four from 11 to 20 years, average 15 years; seventy-one from 1 to 10 years, average 5.

DUTCH REFORMED.

The congregation of the First Reformed church, of Chicago, Ill., by a noble effort begun in last May, has relieved its property from debt. The largest subscription was one of $600, the next of $200, and after that some of $150, others $100, and a number ranging from $50 to $6. This is admirable liberality on the part of a church composed almost exclusively of laboring men, and one's admiration of their action is increased when he hears them saying: "The removal of this debt will enable us to help others more than we have been able to do for some years."

GENERAL.

Rev. Dr. Stuart Robinson was at Bismarck Grove, Kansas, last week, participating in the "church encampment." On the 30th ult., he lectured on "The Old Testament prophecies and history confirmed by discoveries in the East." The same day, in the afternoon, Gov. St. John and Hon. A. B. Jutmore delivered addresses on "Church and State," and Miss Merrill lectured on "Kindergarten and Infant class work."

"The scene at the Tabernacle," says a telegram, "has been enlivened and given an Oriental air by the introduction of the peculiar and gorgeous costumes of Egypt, Syria, Persia, Arabia, Turkey, Greece and Rome, by a company of twenty-five ladies and gentlemen, selected from the young people sojourning here."

A pleasing feature of the day has been the introduction of a beautiful model of a house in Jerusalem, with the manners and customs, modes of dress, salutations and ceremonies of the East, by Rev. J. S. Ostrander, D. D., of New York.

Nearly 600 camps are in the grove, and the attendance at the morning and evening sessions is generally large."—St. Louis Presbyterian.

ECLECTICISMS.

MISDIRECTED SYMPATHY.

United Presbyterian:

When a man is going on in a way of sin, or one that leads inevitably in that direction, it is a merciful Providence that arrests and turns him in the other direction. Very frequently people who are disposed to be sympathetic regret that some one has met with a financial loss, failing to see that this material misfortune will prove a high moral gain. His monetary stumbling was necessary to his spiritual safety and prosperity.

GOOD PREACHING.

Presbyterian Banner:

It is a grievous mistake to suppose that the people do not desire sermons carefully prepared. The more Scriptural and solid matter that can be put into them the more will they be valued. Abstruse speculations and the processes of elaborate learning are not wanted, but the results of the most devout study, set forth in the language of the people, freshly, vigorously and pointedly, are needed.

CHURCH PAPERS.

Christian Advocate:

For fifty years I have so watched the influence of church papers upon individual and family and church developments, that I am persuaded that no man is suited to the pastoral office who does not thoroughly canvass his congregation, and entreat, and exhort, and beg, and if necessary scold (a little) until every regular attendant upon his ministry, whether member or not, takes, or regularly borrows, one or more of our church periodicals, and a great many of our books. It pays every way, but especially in creating a conviction that contribution to church expenses is a duty.

REST VS. WORK.

New York Methodist:

We have often thought, during twenty-five years of steady work, that it would be a great pleasure to be perfectly free from engagements and duties for, say, three months. The other day we compared views with a friend who had reached what has always seemed to us an oasis of delights—he has no business and can rest! But, unfortunately, the green island in the desert of cares has one bad feature; you cannot see across it. So that all the pleasures of resting with no burden on one's back is taken away by anxiety about the future employment. Depend upon it, the true repose must be taken in your work; and happy is the man who can rest with his burdens strapped fast to his shoulders.

A FUNDAMENTAL ERROR.

Herald and Presbyter:

Many make as a plea against giving to missions the heavy tax to support the home church. To pay for our church privileges, they say, costs so much we have nothing extra to give for work outside. In this they are doubtless sincere. There is a great fundamental error here, which we wish to correct, if possible. The money we give to support the home church is not benevolent giving in any sense of the term. Indeed it is not giving in any sense, any more than is paying the school tax, or grocer's bill, or carpenter's bill. The fact is, the church is a necessity with us and our families as much as our school. We cannot get on without it. We would not bring up our children in a place where there are no churches, and church privileges.

THE SAFE MEDIUM.

Sunday Afternoon:

Who shall teach us the safe medium between fretfulness and apathy; between the eagerness that never rests and the sluggishness that never wakes? Complete resignation is not an unmixed good, for there are some things to which we ought not to be resigned, some mischiefs that we ought to mend and not to tolerate. We have seen men who were too well contented; there is a divine discontent that ought sometimes to invade and stir us all. Others again are always pushing, fuming, straining to achieve the impossible, to conquer the invincible; they never know the meaning of quiet or repose. Somewhere between these extremes of stress and stagnation there is a golden mean in which the divine impatience never degenerates into human restlessness, and the stupor of sinful sloth gives place to the peace of God.

A GREAT THING.

Presbyterian Journal:

The world is a mighty antagonist. It is as subtle as it is strong—more to be dreaded in its whispers to the heart's secret inclinations than in gross shapes of evil. And it is a great thing, by God's help and our own effort, to keep it in its place, and say to its eager pressure: "Thus far, and no farther." A great thing, oh merchant, to carry the clue of rectitude through the labyrinths of traffic, and to feel the woof of eternal sanctions crossing the warp of the daily interests. A great thing, oh politician, to withstand the fickle teachings of popularity, to scorn the palatable lie and keep God's signet upon your conscience. A great thing, oh man, whatever your condition, to resist the appeals of envy and revenge, of avarice and pleasure, and to feel that your life has higher ends than these. Strenuous must be the endeavor, but proportionately blessed is the victory of him who in the issues overcomes the world.

THE USE OF FLOWERS.

Methodist Recorder:

Flowers are created as coral insects create islands in the sea. The exquisite fabric is made visible by an adherence of atoms according to a divine law, as operative now as in the Eden morning. The living, sentient germs of the flower hear the secret trumpet sounds; and obedient to the command of the Supreme Intelligence, they arrange themselves in order, as really responsive to law as the soldiers who march and counter-march in the field-review. A rose is not an accident. It is a divine creation. It is an intelligent thought embodied. All the glories of the garden, and all the grandeurs of the summers, are processes of law, sentient, living entities, one answering to another, and all of them touched by the hand of God—grouped in order, harmoniously blended and poised in the visible universe of atoms, allegiant to the will of the Almighty. And as God moves upon the particles that answer His call by blooming out into flowers, so His volitions transform plant, animal, stone, star, and sun, and He can create the new heavens and the new earth.

WHY NOT?

Christian at Work:

Why should not the doctrine of the finiteness of punishment be tolerated and given place when held by ministers in churches commonly called Evangelical? For several reasons: let us enumerate two or three. First, the doctrine of eternal punishment, always held by the great body of Christians, is not weakened, but every way strengthened, by the Greek exegesis of the latest scholarship; that is to say, the fixed and regular meaning of aioneos remains both by etymology and usage Greek and Hellenistic, precisely "everlasting," as it always has: neither Moses Stuart nor Alexander Campbell have advanced an iota of proof in the other direction. Beyond all reasonable doubt the disciples understood aioneos to mean everlasting, for the Greek language has no other words more emphatic than aion, eternity, and aioneos, everlasting, to express endlessness. Again, the "limited" interpretation is born of the philosophy of an invertebrate goodishness and not of any want in Scripture; men wanted the Bible to teach the limitation of punishment, so they construed the Bible to meet their wishes. Again, if the text bearing on so prominent a doctrine may in response to a strong feeling be wrested to mean directly the opposite from what they express, so may any other doctrine, including that of the Trinity; and the "thus saith the Lord" becomes of not the slightest importance.

SECULAR MISCELLANY.

William H. Vanderbilt employs a small army of men—27,706.

A. H. Stephens did not publish his book, "War Between the States," for gain, but he has received $35,000 royalty on it.

Dr. Edward Warren, formerly of Lynchburg, Va., now of Paris, has received the decoration of the Legion of Honor.

Within forty miles around Steubenville, Ohio, six millions pounds of wool are raised. At an average of thirty-five cents per pound this will realize $2,100,000.

The first Javanese princes who ever visited England are at the Westminster Palace Hotel in London. They are Gondosiwoyo, Prince of Java, and his son, Radhen Mas Soenaryo.

England is the only European country which has not been officially invited to send military officers to witness the Russian military manœuvres, in which one hundred thousand troops will take part.

The Great Eastern as a meat-carrier between London and Texas will carry, so said, 2,000 head of cattle, or 36,000 sheep. Alterations necessary to be made to fit her for the business will cost $500,000.

The city of Paris is now directly connected by telegraph lines with 113 French towns. The new administration of the telegraph is in combination with the postoffice. A large increase in the number of dispatches is reported.

Mr. Potter, a member of the British Parliament, has undertaken a free trade mission to America. He is to lecture this fall at Chicago, Boston, New York and other trade centres on the fallacies of protectionism.

The latest news from Cashmere is less favorable. The drought continues and the corn crops are parched up. The condition is wretched beyond description. With timely rains a rice crop equal to half the average will be secured.

As an instance of how the business of canning fruit has grown, it is now said that more than five million cans of corn beef are packed annually in Maine and sold in every part of the world. The corn beef canned is found on the tables even in Norway.

During a heavy gale the captive balloon in Paris burst just after it had come down from an ascent. No one was hurt. The accident is attributed by the aeronauts to the sudden condensation of the hydrogen consequent on low temperature following the great heat.

Eighty farmers recently emigrated from Northern Yorkshire and Durham. They are of various classes, ranging from the tenant farmer upwards, and come hoping to find prosperity here. They can command a capital of from 2,500 to $3,000, and one group in copartnership have $6,000.

What will be, it is claimed, the largest telescope in the world has been contracted for by Sir Henry Bessemer. It will cost $220,000 and be mounted in a monster observatory now being constructed for it on Championhill in London. Henry Bessemer is the inventor of Bessemer steel and was knighted a few months ago.

The old Arctic discovery ship Resolute is rapidly disappearing under the hands of the shipbreakers at Chatham dockyard. The majority of her timbers are in a very decayed state, some of them being so rotten that they fall to pieces almost at the least touch.

A very large fish was captured at Mackinaw Mich., lately. It was about ten feet in length, and its weight is estimated at about four hundred pounds. It is perfectly transparent, and the action of the heart and other functional organs can be plainly seen.

Great Britain has about as many sheep as the United States and gets more wool. The number of sheep is about thirty-five million. This for a country about half as large as Texas, and possessing the highest priced lands in the world. The great service of the sheep is said to be in the manure; otherwise it is said they do not pay.

Russia and China are still far from arriving at an amicable settlement of the Kuldja difficulty, and war is regarded as imminent. The Chinese have over one hundred thousand men and one hundred guns, and as they are known to have been drilled after the European fashion, curiosity is excited to know whether the Russians will come out of the encounter victorious.

Dr. Phillips, of London, has recovered $35,000 in a suit against a railroad company for injuries received from an accident. This is one of the largest sums ever won by an individual under the circumstances, but Dr. Phillips is not happy. He claims that his expenses were over $5,000, his professional income $25,000, and that he was disabled sixteen months. He has appealed.

The marriage between King Alphonso of Spain and the Archduchess Marie Christine of Austria was supposed to have been settled. It was stated that November 28 would be fixed as the day of marriage and that a commission of Spanish grandees would escort the Queen elect from Vienna to Madrid, but the Spanish people are said to be very averse to the arrangement, and Spanish Kings are not omnipotent.

Ismail, the ex-Khedive of Egypt, if all accounts be true, provided against poverty when he retired from office. He is said to have taken $1,500,000 in cash from the treasury, and other property worth $18,000,000. He is since reported as about to sell his dinner-ware. He has one gold service worth two million dollars, and thirteen silver services which altogether aggregate two millions and thirteen hundred thousand. He will still have a service in carved ruolz for 100 persons, and another in rose crystal, to stock his cottage home.

It will require four years to complete the new Eddystone Lighthouse, and about $300,000. Its tower will be 132 feet high, and the light will be 130 feet above the highest spring tide. It is to rest on a solid granite foundation, the massive stones dovetailed together and keyed down firmly to the living rock; for 45 feet above this the tower will rise in solid masonry.

Two specimens of ourang-outang have been placed in the Jardin d'Acclimation, the older one having been captured, with others, at Borneo after a desperate chase, in the course of which eight natives lost their lives. The animals fell into an elephant trap, thirty feet deep, and were gradually reduced by hunger to a state of weakness, when they were garroted and shut up in a cage. The older one measured about five feet, and is said to be the largest ever brought to Europe.

For the second season the rats in the Deccan, India, are terrible. They overspread the country like locusts, and destroy crops to much the same extent. An exchange says: "So grave has become the aspect of affairs that a "rat committee" was appointed to inquire into the best means of disposing of these creatures. They went thoroughly into the question after the manner of committees in India, and their recommendations are carefully tabulated. The people are to be induced to turn out en masse and face the enemy, rewards are to be offered for dead rats, and, in fact the invasion is to be treated as a matter to be dealt with vigorously by the whole community."

The largest cultivated wheat farm on the globe is said to be the Grondin farm, not far from the town of Fargo, Dakota. It embraces some 40,000 acres, both government and railway land, and lies close to the Red river. Divided into four parts, it has dwellings, granaries, machine shops, elevators, stables for two hundred horses, and room for storing 1 000,000 bushels of grain. Besides the wheat farm, there is a stock farm of 20,000 acres. In seeding time 70 to 80 men are employed, and during harvest 250 to 300 men. Seeding begins about April 9th and continues through the month, and is done very systematically, the machines following one another around the field, some four rods apart. Cutting begins about August 8th and ends the fore part of September, succeeded by the thrashing, with eight steam thrashers—Banner.

NORTH CAROLINA HOME INSURANCE.—We call attention to the advertisement of the North Carolina Home Insurance Company, of Raleigh, N. C. This Company has been organized and before the public for ten years, during which time it has paid back to policy holders for losses, above $90,000. The Company does business in North Carolina alone and has in its directory some of the staunchest and best business men in the State. The Company always pays its losses promptly, and its business is conducted by skillful, efficient, expert underwriters. This staunch Company needs no praise at our hands, being so favorably known to our readers.

EDUCATION.

To the Chairmen of the Presbyterial Committees of Education:

Please bear in mind that application for aid to students must be made annually. The fact that a student was on our list last year makes no difference. If he wishes aid this year, application must be made by the Chairman of Education in his Presbytery. Brethren will also please state whether the student is in College, or in the Seminary. The undersigned has authority from the Committee to receive all students as beneficiaries for whom application is made in the regular way.

My postoffice address at present is Covington, Tenn., but letters addressed to me at Memphis will be forwarded. Quite a number of letters on the subject of Education have been addressed to Rev. Dr. Waddel, the former Secretary. Brethren will bear in mind that there has been a change of Secretaries.

E. M. RICHARDSON,
Secretary of Education.

Suddenly, at her home in Rahway, N. J., on Saturday, August 23d, HARRIET ELIZABETH, wife of Edward R. Stanly, formerly of Newbern, N. C.

Mrs. Stanly was a daughter of Isaac and Eliza Tull, of Lenoir county, N. C. Early in life she united with the Church. In 1854 she became a member of the Presbyterian church of Newbern, N. C., of which the writer was then pastor.

Mrs. Stanly's character was one of great firmness, united in a marked degree with quietness and gentleness. Faithful in all the duties of her own Christian life, and never compromising with the world in matters of religion. She was nevertheless gentle and forbearing respecting others. She was always to be found on the side of right and truth and holiness. Humble and cheerful, never unduly exalted, and never desponding. She performed well the duties of a quiet and useful life.

She was ever a warm friend of the poor. While sorely tried by repeated afflictions, she presented an example of cheerful resignation to the will of God, and knew how to sympathise with the sick and the unfortunate.

In her death her family sustains an irreparable loss—an affectionate companion and a loving, Christian mother. A large circle of friends are bereaved. The community lose the example of a sincere and humble Christian, and the Church of Christ on earth one of her most devoted and self-sacrificing members.

W.

Of diphtheria, in Gray's Creek township, September 2d, 1879, ELLEN ELIZABETH, daughter of Alexander and Susan E. Pate, age 2 years 3 months and 7 days.

Why should we mourn for those who die,
So young, so bright, so fair?
'Tis Jesus calls them to the sky
To live with him up there.

Then grieve not for your darling child,
Who now has gone before,
To greet you with a heavenly smile
When you reach that happy shore.

Yes, with out-stretched arms, she'll meet you,
Dear papa and mama,
Upon that bright and shining shore
Where you'll part—no, never more.

McK.

In this city, August the 4th, 1879, MARIAN ADRIAN, daughter of James and Sarah E. Bagley, aged 5 years, 10 months and 5 days.

After a painful season of sickness and suffering, endured with much patience, little Marian was called to that rest of which her sweet little voice often sang, "I'll soon be at home over there." A child of the covenant, she received careful training, and had early manifested a peculiar susceptibility of the truths of religion. She believed in prayer, loved to hear about Jesus, and to sing the hymns for children. She was much interested in the Sabbath School, punctual in her own attendance, and anxious to get her play-mates to accompany her. Although so young during the nine months she had been a Sabbath School scholar, she brought into the school nine new scholars. For her teacher, superintendent and pastor she always had a bright smile of affection and interest.

We miss her sweet form and bright ways. Her home is desolate, her friends are filled with sorrow, and her parents are heart-broken over the loss of their only child. Still "We sorrow not as those who have no hope." We know "our loss is her gain." Too sweet a flower for the uncongenial clime, she has been transplanted in God's garden above, where she will flourish in eternal spring-time. "She cannot come back to us, but we can go to her." God make this sorrow a great blessing to all concerned; by it draw us nearer to Him, and help us to say "The Lord giveth and the Lord hath taken away, blessed be the name of the Lord."

P.

In Yanceyville, N. C., on the 7th of August, 1879, ELLA WATT, infant daughter of Robert Roan, aged 5 months and 22 days.

The mother died, after a lingering illness, on the 6th of May, and the little babe was consecrated to God in baptism over its mother's coffin, and committed to the care of its grandparents (Col. and Mrs. Robert B. Watt.) God has now called it also to join its sainted mother above. It seemed to be left for a while to comfort those who, in the death of its mother, lost their last child, and then, its brief earthly mission done, to return to its mother's arms above. God gave it and God took it away, blessed be His name forever.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

Charlotte Institute.

THE next session begins September 10th, 1879, and ends June 8th, 1880.

No Institute ever made more rapid progress in securing the confidence and esteem of its patrons than this one during the past session. Before the end of the scholastic year the number of its pupils, attracted by the well-earned reputation of the school, increased to 117, exclusive of the adult ladies who availed themselves of the superior advantages here given in the departments of Music, Art, and Modern Languages. In no respect is this Institute inferior to any other first-class boarding-school in the Southern or Middle States. Such testimonials as will satisfy any one as to the high standard and thoroughness of the instruction here are published in the catalogue. These testimonials are peculiarly trustworthy, inasmuch as they are given by gentlemen engaged in teaching in well known schools and colleges of the highest grade, and who are therefore qualified to express an opinion in regard to educational institutions.

The total expense for the half session or term will be $125. This amount includes board, with washing, fuel, lights, furnished room and servants' attendance, tuition in all the English branches, Latin, with either French or German, Calisthenics, text books and stationery for school purposes. Pupils are not permitted to incur additional expense without permission of their parents. Parents are thus assured that their bills will not be greater than they expected.

Special arrangements and special terms for young ladies who wish to take only Music, Painting and Drawing, and Modern Languages, severally or collectively.

For further information address the Principal, Rev. WM. R. ATKINSON, Charlotte, N. C.

Under the care of the General Assembly.
Located at TUSKALOOSA, ALA.

THE FOURTH SESSION, of ten months, will commence on the 1st day of September next, under the instruction of Rev. D. C. Rankin, Professor, who has the best testimonials of fitness for the work, in his deep interest in the colored people and his past labors in their behalf, his ample scholarship, and his aptness to teach.

All the branches necessary to fit candidates for the Gospel Ministry will be taught. Some acquaintance with the early branches of English will be required for entrance. Candidates must come recommended by their Presbyteries or Committees of Education; and if of other denominations, must have similar credentials.

No charge for tuition. Board can be had on reasonable terms.

It does not interfere with cleaning the tubes.
It will not choke up, and requires no cleaning.
It requires no direct dampers to be opened when raising steam (dampers being objectionable. as they may be left open and allow sparks to escape)
It requires no water to extinguish sparks, which, by condensation, destroys the draft. Besides, when water is used, if neglected, the efficiency is destroyed by evaporation of the water, and the boiler is kept in a filthy condition.
It is simple and durable and can be relied upon.
It can be attached to any boiler.

FOR THE FAMILY.

Off for Boy-Land.

Ho! All aboard! A traveller
Sets sail from Baby-land!
Before my eyes there comes a blur,
But still I kiss my hand,
And try to smile as off he goes,
My bonny, winsome boy!
Yes, bon voyage! God only knows
How much I wish thee joy.

Oh tell me have ye heard of him?
He wore a sailor's hat
All silver-corded round the brim,
And—stranger e'en than that—
A wondrous suit of navy-blue,
With pockets deep and wide;
Oh, tell me, sailors, tell me true,
How fares he on the tide?

We've now no baby in the house;
'Twas but this very morn,
He doffed his dainty 'broidered blouse,
With skirts of snowy lawn;
And shook a mass of silken curls
From off his sunny brow;
They fretted him—"so like a girl's!
Mamma can have them now."

He owned a brand-new pocket book,
But that he could not find;
A knife and string was all he took;
What did he leave behind?
A heap of blocks with letters gay,
And here and there a toy;
I cannot pick them up to-day,
My heart is with my boy.

Ho! Ship ahoy! At Boyhood's town
Cast anchor strong and deep!
What tears upon this little gown
Weep not, but smile; for through the air
A merry message rings:
"Just sell it to the rag-man there!
I've done with baby things!"

—St. Nicholas.

"Patience."

"Mother," said Mary, "I can't make Henry put his figures as I tell him."

"Be patient, my dear, and do not speak so sharply."

"But he won't let me tell him how to put the figures, and he does not know how to do it himself," said Mary, very pettishly.

"Well, if Henry won't learn a lesson in figures suppose you try to teach him one in patience. This is hard to teach, and harder to learn than any lesson in figures, and perhaps when you have learned this the other will be easier to both."

Mary hung her head, for she felt that it was a shame to any little girl to be fretted by such a little thing, or indeed, by anything; and she began to think that perhaps she deserved to be blamed as well as Henry.

A fretful, impatient child makes himself and all about him very unhappy. Will you try to learn a lesson on patience?—Well Spring.

An Arab Village by Moonlight.

"Oscar walks on in front with our three Arabs; each man carries a long pole in his right hand and a lantern in his left; the dim, uncertain light of the latter casting weird shadows on our path, giving to the lissome Arab figure proportions almost gigantic, whilst the reflection of their long staves stretches far out into the darkness beyond. A great plain of sand surrounds us, we catch the dim outline of rocky hills in the distance, right and left, whilst over one crag, higher than the rest, the moon is rising slowly in the bright, cold glory peculiar to this Eastern atmosphere. 'Sinking ankle-deep in the sand, and then only emerging to be tripped up by a bit of brushwood, is apt to become monotonous,' as Oscar observes, adding, 'Glad the poor wretches have energy to cultivate anything, but I wish to goodness they would do it in a more convenient place. Not very encouraging to pay a visit to people who choke up their front drive with cabbages and bean stalks.' 'No, we can scarcely be said to have had a friendly welcome,' answers Rachel, with a little shiver; for by this time we are entering the deserted Arab village, and a perfect army of ill-conditioned, wolfish dogs set up a chorus of barks and howls to keep us away. The long poles do their work now. A few judicious strokes in their midst, and the wretched mongrels slink away, sulky and discomfited, and we are allowed to enter in peace. The bright moonlight falls on the low white roofs of the miserable Arab houses, or rather hovels; we pass in silence through narrow dirty lanes, shut in by high mud walls. Here and there a dog, more daring than the rest, greets us with a sleepy growl; but otherwise a death-like stillness prevails. No human being is visible. Our own individuality becomes almost oppressive, in the weird-like desolation around. The bright, clear moon shines down upon dirt and abomination of every sort, lighting it up with pitiless truth. Refuse, heaps of bean pods, cabbage stalks, broken pottery, and wisps of dirty straw lie about in reckless confusion. Every footstep brings fresh signs of squalor and misery. How hard and unlovely it must all seem in the daylight. But the shadows and the moonlight, and, above all, the strange, unnatural silence, give a touch of ghostlike poetry to the village now. 'It is like a city of the dead,' whispers Rachel, pressing closer to Elsa and me. The girl's face has a white, strange look about it in the moonlight. Oscar sees it also, and turns around to speak to her, but checks himself. The spirit of the place is upon us all. For a moment we stand in hushed silence, gazing on the ruin and desolation around us; then mechanically turn our steps onward. A few moments more we walk in single file through another narrow lane of hovels, and then emerge upon a large square, probably the native market place. Here a strange sight greets us. Rachel's city of the dead seems suddenly to have restored her victims. But can they be living, breathing human beings? Two long rows of cross-legged Arabs stretch from end to end of the square. They are seated in absolute silence upon the ground, smoking their long 'narghilehs.' Their white turbans and feet shod in bright red-and-yellow morocco slippers form the only points of color and relief to the dark, picturesque-looking rags that cover them with a sort of pathetic dignity no English rags could ever achieve. We pause for a moment watching the strange scene, hardly liking to venture down the narrow path between them. It seems almost like invading the solitude of a company of ghosts. But our Arabs have no such scruples, and the men themselves are utterly without curiosity, so far as we are concerned. They treat our presence with an absolute indifference which is almost humiliating. Not a single eye is raised to watch the 'Howadji,' and we walk through the curious, silent ranks, unnoticed and unmolested. I think we all breathe more freely when the last ghost-like couple has been left behind, and we find ourselves on the farther side of the village, with the open sand once more beneath our feet, the great black rocks above us, and far below the stretch of the shore, and the old Nile slumbering peacefully under the Eastern moon."—From "Egyptian Bonds," by Katherine Bates.

Shoemaking by Machinery.

Should some Rip Van Winkle of the past wake up from his long sleep and visit his old haunts once, in few respects would he find a greater alteration than in the employment of labor-saving machinery. Some idea of the use of such machinery may be gleaned from a few facts representing American industries. It is stated that in this country, on the simple article of shoe pegs and shoe peggers, there are 576 patents, and there are 2,000 of these patents on machinery. One class of machines last year sewed, it is estimated, forty-five million pairs of shoes, and another class pegged fifty-five million pairs. Ten men with the present machinery can make six hundred pairs of shoes a day; four hundred and sixty bushels of loose pegs are made in New England per day, and one cent's worth will peg four pairs of shoes. Two million shoe lasts were made in the United States last year, all turned out by machinery. What a change is this from the old days when a man would commence and finish a pair of boots by hand, taking as much time to make one pair as it now takes a man to make some dozens.—Christian at Work.

Ain't Pigs Strong.

I made up my mind once that they are. Or, rather, one of the flat-nosed, grunting brutes made up my mind for me. He fixed the idea in me. He made it stick. I have never changed my opinion from that day to this. I have never attempted since to argue with a pig on that subject.

You want to know how it was? Well I was a youngster, about as old perhaps, as some of you. I lived in Ninth street in New York. And I had lately got my arms into a roundabout, and my legs into boots. Stiff, shiny boots, with plenty of squeak in them, and with red tops and straps. Boots big enough for a young man full nine years of age. I have never been such a hero since—never been half as old or great a man—as when I mounted those boots. How I did stride and strut, and look down at them! There was no need of putting the best foot forward. I hadn't any foot that was not best. I pitied all poor unfortunates who knew nothing of the glory of new boots.

But about that pig. Ninth street, where I lived, was in those days at about the north end of the city—near the jumping-off place. In fact, within about ten rods of that same place. For between us and Tenth street there was a hill about half dug away, from the top of which we boys used to jump off down into the loose sand, and fill our shoes with sand, and go home with dirty stockings. Folks have lumbered up our play-ground since with big three story houses. But in those good old times boys could run right across from one street to the other, and pigs could wander at their own sweet wills.

I rather think I was just getting beaten at hop-scotch—and disgusted with the game, of course—when one of these bristly fellows came along the street, and a bright idea struck me. We would catch him and have a ride! That we would. What were pigs for, but to give a body a ride?

But the first thing was to catch him. Nothing easier than that. So into the house I darted, and pounced upon Bridget's clothes-line. Bran new, clean line, that Bridget didn't know any better than to hang shirts and collars and sheets on But it was just the thing to catch pigs with, as you shall see.

One end of the rope was made into a slip-noose, and the other end I got one of the fellows to tie around my waist. The plan was, you see, to lay down the noose in the street for piggy to "put his foot in it," and then for me to lean back in those new boots and pull him in. Capital plan. Sure to work to perfection. The other fellows would have been glad to hold the rope, and have some of the glory. But I couldn't allow it Not that there was not enough of it (of the glory, that is—not the rope) to go around and give every boy a share. But I wanted it all myself. It was enough for the rest of them to have the fun of looking on. And they began to think so themselves before long.

I said it was a capital plan, and sure to work. But somehow there was a hitch about it. No, not a hitch exactly; I wished there was, when operations had begun. But the plan didn't work, and a more disgusted urchin than I was you never saw in your life.

Piggy stepped into the noose; there was no trouble about that. And the noose slipped down tight around his leg. All right so far. But when the time came for the pulling in, pig, rope and boy all went in the wrong direction. It was highly improper. It was not down in the plan. I didn't approve of it. But there was no help for it. After that squealing brute I went, stumbling, sprawling up again, catching at every stoop-railing, shouting to the boys to hold him in, and discovering suddenly that friendship, in a selfish world, is but a hollow name. For I grieve to say that they stood and laughed and roared as if their sides would burst.

But a lamp-post that we passed soon proved a friend in need—a friend indeed. For, while piggy ran one side of it, I having no affection for him, and willing to part company, took the other. That brought him up all standing, for the lamp-post wouldn't budge. So he squealed and kicked and tugged till he worked his leg out of the noose, and left, without taking leave, for parts unknown. As for me, I wriggled out of the noose at my end of the rope, and tramped back home, dragging Bridget's clothes-line, a sadder and wiser youth. When I arrived there I marched into the parlor, where my big brothers were at a game of chess, and remarked to one of them, thoughtfully, "I tell you what, Bert, ain't pigs strong?"

And from that day to this, when I see a young man going into low, vile company, and boasting that he shall lead them—not they him; or putting himself into the noose of some brutish habit, thinking he can manage it and stop when he chooses, I feel like telling him, Take care! pigs are strong! Take care!—"Uncle Ned" in Congregationalist.

It is a humiliating confession to make—but geography is pitiless, and our national vainglory must bow to its degrees—that for four hours in every twenty-four the entire territory of the United States is deprived of sunshine. As the sun goes down on our farthest Aleutian island its morning rays are just lighting up the hill tops of the western coast of Ireland, and the breadth of the Atlantic lies between us and daylight. To our Fenian citizens this may be another and cogent reason for annexing the dear little isle of the harp and the shamrock; but until it is done the exultant cry of the Rocky Mountain Presbyterian, that the sun never sets on the United States, must be admitted to be a trifle exaggerated. It does set every day, and, paradoxically, four hours before it rises.

In the depth of our humiliation we may possibly console ourselves with the reflection that—though our British cousins can say with truth what we cannot—the sun really shines on the United States when it is up. We have to submit to four hours of sunlessness a day: England is lucky to get four hours of sunshine. So life has its compensations, and existence in the United States remains unendurable, though we do not (geographically speaking) make quite so great a spread as we thought.—Scientific American.

Discoveries in Babylon.

Antiquarians anticipate finding immense treasures of ancient literature in the libraries of Babylon which are now being discovered and await the spade of the excavator. About two-thirds of the Assyrian library of Assurbanipal, or Sardanapalus, the son of Esarhadon, has been secured, and is now in the British Museum. The books consist for the most part of small inscribed tablets of clay. The interest attached to their study cannot fail to be great, for by them we are brought into contact with men and women who lived in the days of old Hebrew kings and prophets, and even, it is supposed, as far back as the patriarchs. By a patient, diligent, and earnest band of scholars these are being deciphered; the variety and extent of the information gained is at present very imperfectly known. Strange to say, the literature of ancient Assyria was in a language distinct from that spoken by the people, a learned language of former times, understood by the literary men of the age, like the Latin of our own day. It is called the Accadian tongue. Its study was imperative on scholars, and acquired by the help of lexicons and grammars. From lectures recently delivered at the Royal institution by Rev. A. H. Sayce, we gain some elementary knowledge of the literature, which appears to have been very varied in its character. The historical documents bring unexpected but most valuable evidence of the accuracy of the Chronicle of the Old Testament. The religious literature is of course full of gross superstitions, but it is said that most of the mythological fables of ancient Greece, such as the labors of Hercules, the loin of Nemea, the bull of Crete, etc., are found there already. The Sabbath of the seventh day appears to have been observed with great strictness; even the monarch was forbidden to eat cooked meat, change his clothes, take medicine, or drive his chariot on that day. There are some astronomical observations which show considerable research, as, for example, one which speaks of spots on the sun. As Sir H. Layard once found a crystal lens in the ruins of Nineveh, it is probable that some rude form of instrument was known. Not the least singular discovery is a catalogue, compiled four thousand years ago, which directs the person wishing to consult any book to search out and write down the number and hand it in to the librarian.—United Presbyterian.

An Inch of Rain on the Atlantic.

In Lieutenant Maury's "Physical Geography of the Sea" there occurs a very remarkable passage, which may just now be found suggestive of a good many curious computations to those who have time and taste for arithmetical oddities. He endeavors to impart some idea of what is implied in "an inch of rain. The Atlantic Ocean, he says, presents an area of twenty-five millions of square miles, and supposing that a single inch of rain falls on a fifth part of this area, he computes that it would weigh three hundred and sixty thousand millions of tons. It might fall in a day or it might fall in an hour; but whatever the time, he points out the disturbance of the equilibrium of the ocean which such an immense weight at the first presentation of the idea, might be expected to exert. In addition to the bulk of water which, it is easy to believe, may sometimes pour down on any section of the Atlantic in the course of an hour or so, he further calculates the quantity of salt left behind when the water was drawn up in the form of vapor, and which might also be expected to exert a vast influence in disturbing the saline equilibrium of the sea. He finds that with the abstraction of three hundred and sixty thousand million tons of water, salt would be left behind to the amount of sixteen million tons, or somewhere about twice as much as all the ships in the world would carry as a cargo. If all the water the Mississippi discharges in the course of a year were taken up in one mighty measure and cast into the ocean at one effort, it would not make a greater disturbance in Neptune's "balance of power" than would the fall of rain supposed. The Atlantic must have had of late many an inch of rainfall over a fifth of its surface, and to a ready imagination Maury's startling figures will present a curious idea of the oceanic commotions that must all unobserved, have been occasioned by drops of rain.—London Weekly Review.

To Preserve Autumn Leaves.

Spread fresh the leaves and press them in a suitable dish, with alternate layers of fine sand, which is thoroughly dry and as hot as the hand can bear. When the sand has cooled they may be removed, smoothed under a hot iron, dipped for a moment in clear French spirit varnish, and allowed to dry in the air.

A Vegetable Curiosity.

A remarkable freak of vegetation has appeared in the grounds of R. B. Tatman, at Worcester, in the shape of a potato vine which bears tomatoes. It appears to be a mixture of the two vegetables, and is accounted for by the fact that a strong tomato vine from chance-sown seed grew in the same hill with the potatoes, and the pollen of the two plants became mixed. Unfortunately the vines were pulled up before the peculiarity of the growth was noticed. Some of our agriculturists may derive a valuable suggestion from this. As both the potato and the tomato are of the solanaceæ family, it is not impossible that one should be fertilized by the other, and a remarkable economy of labor might be effected if careful and scientific cultivation should produce a plant which should bear good potatoes at the roots and good tomatoes on the tops.—Springfield (Mass.) Union.

SECULAR NEWS.

A. B. Cornell, formerly Collector of Customs at New York city, has been nominated by the Republicans as their candidate for Governor of the State of New York.

The Chilians are much disappointed at the result of the war with Peru, and the ministry is in danger of assassination, especially since the loss of their iron clad Rimac. The rioters were fired upon and three killed.

A terrific gale at New Orleans and on the coast of the Gulf of Mexico, as also up the Mississippi river, prevailed on the 1st inst. Immense damage was done. Numbers of sugar houses and many other buildings were blown down. At Franklin the Roman Catholic church was destroyed. At New Orleans forty-five coal boats sunk. A steamer also sunk and the pilot was drowned. The Presbyterian church at Morgan City was blown down. From St. John the Baptist parish news comes that the orange crop is badly damaged, and the pecan trees stripped of their fruit. Sugar cane and rice are in a deplorable condition, leveled as close to the earth as if cut for the mills.

The Dick and Dillard law school at Greensboro has nineteen students. Judge Strong's school at Raleigh has fifteen.

At Thomasville Female College there will be eighty boarding scholars besides many local pupils.

The Wilmington Star states that the prospects for rice in the Cape Fear section are represented as very fine. On one plantation near Wilmington, the property of Col. S. L. Fremont, 108 acres will yield probably fifty bushels to the acre, and a portion of it probably sixty bushels to the acre.

The Howard Association of Memphis appeals for aid to benevolent persons throughout the country. Their funds are entirely exhausted, and unless help comes in, the Association will be compelled to relinquish their work, and abandon the sick and needy to their fate.

The Spanish government will send twenty thousand troops to Cuba to maintain tranquility. Seventy-eight deaths from yellow fever occurred at Havana week before last.

The British cotton circular represents a scarcity of raw cotton probable in Europe, and of course large prices in the opening season. But this will not do to depend on.

Cetowayo's powder magazine has been destroyed, and messengers from him offering to surrender on condition of the departure of all British troops, were told to inform the former Zulu chief that he was no longer king and must surrender unconditionally.

Funds have been raised in different places in behalf of Gen. Hood's orphan children. On the first day in Atlanta nearly $1,000 were raised. Inman, Doven & Co. telegraphed $250 to head the list. At Greensboro White Sulphur Springs $200 were collected.

INDIGESTION.

The main cause of nervousness is indigestion, and that is caused by weakness of the stomach. No one can have sound nerves and good health without using Hop Bitters to strengthen the stomach, purify the blood, and to keep the liver and kidneys active, to carry off all the poisonous and waste matter of the system. A MAN OF A THOUSAND.

A CONSUMPTIVE CURED.—When death was hourly expected, all remedies having failed, and Dr. H. James was experimenting with the many herbs of Calcutta, he accidentally made a preparation which cured his only child of Consumption. His child is now in this country, and enjoying the best of health. He has proved to the world that Consumption can be positively and permanently cured. The Doctor now gives this Recipe free, only asking that each remit two three cent stamps to pay expenses. This Herb also cures night-sweats, nausea at the stomach, and will break up a fresh cold in twenty-four hours; Address, CRADDOCK & CO., 1032 Race St., Philadelphia, naming this paper.

PREVENT YELLOW FEVER!

It has been well proved that prevention is better than cure. A very simple and effective preventative for Yellow Fever and other fevers has been found in BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTERS. They were used during last season in New Orleans very successfully. The common method of using them was to apply them over the stomach, changing them every week. They are one OF THE MOST ACTIVE ANTISEPTICS and seem to destroy the poison. One reason why they are of special value is that they stimulate the digestion, and thus enable the system to overcome the influence of the malarial poison. They are a cheap and almost certain preventative. Ask your physician about them. Benson's Capcine Plasters are a sure preventative and cure for chills and fever if worn as above. Price 25 cents.

COMMENTARIES ON THE OLD TESTAMENT AND PARTS OF IT.

NO. VI.

Dr. L. C. Vass, Newbern, N. C.:

Among European, especially German, commentators, Dr. Hengstenburg has always enjoyed the highest reputation. Besides his celebrated work, "Christology of the Old Testament," a commentary on the predictions of the Messiah, containing both critical and expository discussions of the Messianic prophecies of the Old Testament, he has written several elaborate works: on the Psalms, on Ezekiel, on Ecclesiastes, on the Gospel of John, and on the Apocalypse. The first named work is best known and has always had a deserved confidence, as well for the critical ability displayed, as for the sound evangelical tone which pervades the style of thought. It has been said that Dr. Alexander's work on the Psalms was first proposed as a translation of Hengstenberg, and then its purpose gave way to the plan adopted of writing an independent commentary. However this may have been, the two works are types of kindred modes of interpretation, and even the mental kindred of the writers. Dr. H. is a more diffuse writer and is fuller on matters of minute grammatical interpretation and verbal exegesis. At the same time, his exposition based on this critical work, is proportionately full. The interpretation of the Psalms, regarded as distinctly Messianic, is clear and decided. There is no failure in presenting, with a confidence sustained by the best laws of interpretation, the unfolding of God's purposes respecting His Son, and the mission and character of Him who was the "Desire of Israel" and the "Hope of a World." Recognizing the typical character and pictures of David, in not a few Psalms, which also point out the Messiah, the author yet urges the principle of interpreting others as direct prophecies. As has been done by Dr. Alexander, he endeavors to perform the work of explaining the Word of God, leaving to preachers the application of the truth thus unfolded in its practical bearing on the faith and on the conscience of readers. The other works on Ezekiel and on Ecclesiastes are well worthy of the careful examination of students.

Keil on the Old Testament, is evidently proposed to be extensive. A volume each is given to Genesis, Exodus and Leviticus. As the publication of the first was in 1858 and of the last in 1867, it is doubtful how long we may wait for the completion of the enterprise. Other volumes have possibly been published but have not come to hand. The author is very full in his introduction to Genesis presenting an account of the geological theory of the cosmogony, then (1857–8) most prevalent. His extreme views on this subject, however, did not prevent his writing a valuable critical exposition of the language of the books of Genesis, Exodus and Leviticus, in which the reader may find much profit. On the generally accepted Messianic interpretation of Genesis xlix: 10, he is not unhappy, nor can his conclusions, even on critical grounds, be accepted. If, however, he has erred, he has shown ability of a decided character. Perhaps, incidently, good may result to the cause of sound interpretation and sound biblical theology, from the fact that a writer of such eminent learning as Keil has not been successful in vindicating his interpretation at war with the positions of some of the most valuable contributions to the exposition of the Scriptures.

Keil and Delitzsch have now completed a critical exposition of the Old Testament, in about thirty octavo volumes. This work is, decidedly, one of the best specimens of the labors of a German mind. The criticism of the Hebrew text and the commentary which follows are valuable helps to the student, as well as creditable to the author. They evince no tendency to the views of Ralizch. On the contrary, they take the decided ground of accepting the paramount authority of those, confident that, ultimately fully developed and formulated proportions of science when reached, will sustain the interpretation which is demanded by grammatical and logical authorities. These volnmes are less voluminous than Lange; having avoided the plan of, at least, doubtful expediency, dividing the exposition into exegetical, dogmatical and practical, or homiletic portions. T. & T. Clark, of Edinburgh, have laid English speaking people under great obligations by publishing a translation of this work. Doubtless purchasers may obtain any volume or volumes which they may select. The portion assigned to the Psalms, is very full and of itself a valuable addition to a minister's library. They have also given an excellent commentary on the Epistle to the Hebrews, in two volumes, which with great critical acumen and fidelity to fundamental truth, provides an excellent aid to the student of this most valuable presentation of "Christ and Him crucified." Exceptions may be well taken to the rather dogmatical style and superficial discussion of the reasons for rejecting "testament" in ix: 15, 16, and substituting "covenant" or "dispensation" and for insisting that "eternal spirit" in ix: 14 can only denote our Lord's divine nature.

Cornelius Lapide (or as he called himself Cornelie Van Steen and, in French, Cornelie la Pierre,) was a Jesuit of the latter part of the seventeenth century. He wrote on the whole Bible. A notice of the work having been inadvertently omitted under its proper heading, of "commentaries on the whole Bible," is here introduced. He mainly expounds the Vulgate, but does not shun to discuss the words and constructions of the original language of the Bible, in doing which, he is full and generally judicious. The reader will find some of the best reasons for the accepted interpretation of Matt: xvi: 17, 18 but it is interesting to notice how the ingenious author, with all his reverence for antiquity, rather objects to the view of those fathers, which corresponds to what he terms the "Genevan." While some contend for the papal view of Peter's primacy among the apostles, they fail to recognize primacy of his successors. According even to Lapide, there would then appear no sure evidence that papal supremacy was "of the fathers." The work, for one of such size, (ten closely printed, thick quarto volumes) has had extensive circulation. At least three editions, though not entirely complete, were published in the last century, and two in this—one as late as 1858-'75.

Yours truly, B. M. SMITH.

GOETHE'S MODEL UNIVERSITY.

Goethe believed that in education every faculty of mind, body and soul should be cultivated with steady, systematic and gradual harmony. Is it not strange that, although his model university was delineated with so much minuteness in the 18th century, this 19th century, with all its achievements, has not yet realized his great ideal. I have not his book, Wilhelm Meister, before me this moment, but I will endeavor to speak from memory, the outlines of his description.

The father and son reach the university. It is a domain of marvellously beautiful land, with rich meadows and pastures, parks, groves and orchards—in short, a miniature kingdom, peopled with students. As Meister and his son accompanied by one of the fathers of the institution (called in Carlyle's translation an overseer), passed along the highway, the groups of students, engaged in various charming rural occupations, such as leading flocks, mowing meadows, orcharding, &c., salute them. These salntes are varied and curious, and performed with the precision of military manouvres. The younger students turn towards the "overseer," fold their arms across their breasts and look with smiling gratitude towards heaven. The next in order turn towards the officer in a similar manner, but instead of folded arms and eyes directed heavenward, they look cheerfully upon the ground and clasp their hands behind their backs. The third class, composed of the older students, on seeing the approach of the the overseer, spring into military line with their heads turned to the right and arms straight depending at each side. On asking the meaning of these various striking and beautiful postures and movements, Meister was informed that the students were required to keep their meaning a secret, as they found it added greatly to a youth's moral worth and dignity to learn to be able to keep a secret. He who blabs about everything becomes untrustworthy. But to him, as he was about to trust his son to their care, these things would be explained. They taught that the foundation of all moral and spiritual excellence lay in reverence. The various salutations teach them the duty of reverence—a three fold reverence. Reverence for God, the maker and giver of all, is shown by the folded arms and heavenward glance. Reverence for the earth, the scene of our labors and the store-house from which God feeds our bodies, is shown by the downward look and clasped hands. The third salutation, in which the students range themselves side by side, show our reverence for each other, our unity of action, our common brotherhood. Without union we can accomplish nothing. We reverence God, we reverence the earth upon which He has placed us, we reverence each other. Each of these principles is taught in "the Creed: the first article is Ethnic, and belongs to all nations; the second Christian, for those struggling with affliction and glorified in affliction; the third teaches an inspired communion of saints, that is, of man in the highest degree good and wise."

On the next day Wilhelm Meister is conducted through a stately and magnificent building, where a gallery of splendid paintings shows all the scenes depicted in the Old Testament, arranged in panels, and above and below in "socles and friezes" they had arranged the kindred subjects depicted in classic mythology, showing how profane history, like a shivered mirror, gives back distorted gleams of ancient truths. Thus, above the picture of Abraham entertaining the angels, Apollo is seen visiting the herdsmen of Admetus. Another splendid gallery gave the scenes of the New Testament, much softer and more beautiful in treatment than those in the Old Testament; but, to Meister's surprise, they ended with the Last Supper, instead of the Crucifixion. They informed him that the Crucifixion was reserved for the third series; that taught the greatest of spiritual truths. The gallery containing this series opened but once a year, and could not be shown at that time.

In passing again along the highway, Meister observed that now and then a solitary student made no salutation as the Overseer passed. He found these individuals were undergoing the severest punishment ever inflicted by the laws of the institution. They were declared unworthy to show reverence. If this punishment failed to effect a reformation, they were expelled as incorrigible. Music was taught in its highest perfection. Every form of picturesque labor was accompanied by singing. The various tasks were marked by songs peculiar to that particular employment. Sometimes a solo, sometimes a chorus, sometimes they sang together in alternating parts. Everything to cultivate the ear and eye was constantly around them, while their hours of study were given to the usual branches of knowledge taught in such institutions. Architecture was taught practically by the erection of costly and elegant buildings. In one of their halls a splendid group of statnary was seen, and as Meister entered, a number of students were engaged in copying this piece of statnary, some on paper and some on canvass. The superior called on a single student to describe in words the historic event portrayed before them by the chisel of the sculptor and the pencil of the painter. He obeyed, in words so eloquent and thrilling that the marble figures seemed to live and move under the vivifying effect of his magic tongue. This was one of their lessons in oratory.

On Meister's second visit, his son had been a year in the institution. He entered on a different side and passed through pastnre lands filled with horses. And "all at once the horizon darkens with a fierce cloud of dnst. At full gallop rushes forward a vast multitude of these noble animals, guided and held together by mounted keepers. The monstrous hurly-burly whirls past the traveler; a fair boy among the keepers looks at him in surprise, pulls in, leaps down and embraces his father." To Meister it looks as if his son were receiving the training of a young Arab or Kalmuck Tartar. And he asks if this savage occupation of feeding and training animals does not have the effect of making the youth "himself roughen into an animal?" They answer that they use by way of counterpoise, the softest and most elegant of accomplishments, poetry, oratory and music. "Your son has turned himself to Italian, and in the monotonous solitude of his herdsman life, you will hear him send forth many a dainty song, with exquisite feeling and taste." Wilhelm was surprised to find no provision made for teaching dramatic poetry; in their numerous edifices none seemed destined for theatrical purposes. He asked if this branch of human talent were entirely neglected. The reply was that, after mature consideration, they rejected the Drama. "It is not consistent with the truth and earnestness which should characterize a noble life." The combined arts appear to us like a family of sisters of whom the greater part inclined to good economy, but one is light-headed and desirous to appropriate and squander the whole goods of the household. The theatre is this wasteful sister; it has an ambiguous origin which in no case, whether as an art, a trade or amusement, it can wholly conceal."

I have given a very imperfect sketch of Goethe's ideal Institution. I hope some one who speaks clearer English than Carlyle, will translate the book in which it is found. It is so hard to follow Carlyle's turgid sentences, and get unclouded ideas therefrom. But one thing is certain: Goethe, with all his sins, points us out a nobler road to learning than any that has yet been trodden. It is a truly royal road, cultivating every faculty of mind and soul and body. No pale, diseased smokers and drinkers would come forth from such a mental empire. No men too weak to cope with the difficulties of life. The strong and skilful hand, the practical eye, the cultivated ear, the thoroughly trained and harmonious voice, the devout soul, the well-filled mind. Our Western wilds offer situations where all this beauty of landscape and fertility of soil is ready for one of Goethe's universities. A mere industrial school, where the poor student has the heavy task of providing his own board, is not the thing. He is too young and untrained to bear this premature burden. Still less do our ordinary collegiate institutions meet the wants of the nation. It is the nation that needs education, and not so much particular classes. We are becoming a nation of uneducated novel readers. The cheap publications at ten and fifteen cents each place these books within the reach of every individual. And the Christian philanthropist is waiting, with anxious suspense, to see what manner of national character is going to be developed by an education of simple and unadulterated novel-reading. They go from the primer to the novel, and this is the extent of their literary acquirements, in a vast majority of cases. Ill-health is the rule, a vigor us constitution the exception. Whatever makes a noble race of men and women is the only true civilization. Yet people labor under the strange hallucination that comforts, luxuries, and fashionable living constitute civilization. It is those things which make the downward stream which will lead us to national ruin. We are rocking ourselves to sleep in the rapids above the falls—the abyss is before us. H. M. I.

JESUS EVERYWHERE.

"Where is He that is born King of the Jews?" Matt. ii: 2. Where is He? In the manger, as a helpless infant. On the cross, as a sacrifice for sinners. On the cloud, ascending into heaven. On earth, invisibly partaking in the prayers of even two or three devontly gathered for His worship. At the right hand of the Father on the throne of universal providential sovereignty. On the throne of Christendom. On the throne of the Gentiles. On the throne of Israel. From every such view of His exaltation let us gather fresh assurance that the purpose and promises of God can never fail; that whatever clouds may hide the sky shall sooner or later be dispelled; that however long the rights of the Redeemer may appear to be relinquished, or denied, or in abeyance, they shall yet be openly asserted and universally acknowledged; that He who was born to reign; that His dominion shall be endless; that the very things which seem to threaten its execution shall eventually further it. If even the apostasy and casting off of Israel, the chosen race with whom the church of old appeared to be identified, did not prevent its continued existence and progressive growth until the present hour, what disaffection or resistance, personal or national, can now arrest its onward march to universal empire? No! let Bethlehem and Calvary, and Christ and Paradise, and Christendom and Jewry all bear witness that what He was born to bring about must come to pass; the day, though distant, shall arrive when the kingdoms of the world are to become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of His Christ; and when the joint hallelujah of angels and men, of the Church on earth and of the Church in heaven, of Jews and Gentiles, shall proclaim the final and eternal answer to the question, "Where is He that is born King of the Jews?"—J. Addison Alexander.

COARSENESS.

Any lack of refinement in one's manner, or any inciviility in one's ordinary personal address, ought certainly to be a matter of regret to the person whose daily life displays such a defect. But it is by no means uncommon for men and women to think, or to pretend to think, that rudeness of manner and neglect of the courtesies of life are evidences of a strong character; and that a coarse and uncivil habit of speech is an admirable proof that the speaker is a "plain, blunt man," who is above shams and pretences.

Now, while coarseness may exist along with strength of character and righteousness of life, it is always a blemish to them, and never a help. It is, of course, true that refinement is not righteousness, and that a rude and ignorant saint is always better in the sight of God's sight, if not in man's, than a refined and intellectual sinner. But that is not the question at issue. The only point concerning which one ought to think, is the question whether a lack of graciousness in character and courtesy in manner, is in itself a good thing or a bad thing. Unfortunately, there is too common a tendency to confuse this question by considering it along with totally irrelevant matters. Badness is sometimes polished; goodness is sometimes rough; therefore, illogically concludes the hasty reasoner, anxious to excuse his own coarseness, rude strength is better than courteous strength. This shallow argument finds plenty of acceptance, because it is a great deal easier for most people to be thoughtlessly coarse than to be studiously gentle; and so they conclude that it is a matter of little moment whether their manners are attractive or not.

Every one who is trying to lead a good life, should also try to lead a winsome and courteous life. By abandoning gentleness of disposition and graciousness of word and deed, he throws away a means of growth and an effective weapon. Coarse Christians little know how often they play into the enemy's hands. It is almost always a grave mistake, in a matter of manners, or in any other matter, to try to put yourself on other people's level. If you are trying to do right, the chances are that, by adopting a coarse manner of speech or action, you will degrade yourself, both in your own eyes and in those of him whom you are trying to reach, and yet will fail in the good you seek. Rude and rough people are ready to excuse themselves for their own coarseness; but, after all, they despise it in those who are striving to instruct and help them.

Cleanness and brightness and winsomeness, in thought and word and deed and manner and material surroundings, are always ready to help what is good. Coarseness and dinginess and ugliness are evils that must sometimes be endured, but ought never to be defended as virtues in themselves. If a bad man lacks refinement, his manners are of a piece with his morals. But for a good man to be common in tastes, ungrammatical in speech, repulsive in personal appearance, and rude in conduct, is a proof that he is willing to put his goodness to a very severe test in the eyes of the world; and that he does not find, from his reading of the Old Testament and the New, that God desires that all things be done decently and in order.—S. S. Times.

CHRISTIAN FELLOWSHIP.

It is a mistake to suppose that Christian fellowship is in the keeping of certain sects, and can only be had by those to whom they disperse it. The fellowship that is doled out, officially, by an organization, is of very little consequence. The faithful and loving disciple of Christ will not fail of friendship; good men will love him for his Master's sake, and the recognition of those who can see no goodness that does not bear their own denominational trade mark he can do very well without.—Sunday Afternoon.

The London Missionary Society has received a telegram from Aden announcing the death of Rev. Dr. Mullens, at Mpwapwa, in Central Africa, on July 10. Dr. Mullens was the foreign secretary of the London Missionary Society, and left England a few months ago to aid in establishing a mission on Lake Tanganyika. He was for many years a missionary in India, and since his return to England has more than once undertaken long foreign tours in connection with the work of the London Missionary Society.

FOR JESUS.

We have made a great advance in the Christian life when in all our work, whether general or specific, we are able to say we have done it all for Jesus. We profess, of course, to do it all for Him; but in that, as in other things, there is an unhappy gap between the profession and the practice, and, closely examining our hearts and trying the springs of our activities by appropriate tests, we conclude that very often, instead of having set the Lord before us, we have acted for ourselves. That absorbing love of Christ which will constrain us to act for him, and him alone, is too seldom a practical Christian possession.

A Christian is occupying his place in the church, giving a creditable attention to its interests, and winning for himself a name for fidelity and good conduct. He is interested in the work of his congregation, prays and labors for its prosperity, gives money to support the ministry, and helps on with the various objects and schemes it fosters, exhibiting all the while a spirit, a steady devotion, which is above criticism. Surely he is doing all for Jesus. Without question he is animated by the one controlling consideration—a wish to honor the Master and build up His kingdom, for His sake. And yet after all, perhaps, if the truth were known, he is actuated by some desire or consideration that is much less worthy. He may be thinking only of securing his own personal safety, as if he would buy heaven at the price of a mere mechanical consecration. He may be under the influence of a desire to keep up appearances and carry himself creditably in society, or he may be moved by the pride which will constrain him to foster the church where he has his membership, as a rival enterprise for which he is in part responsible.

A minister preaches the Gospel faithfully. He is a good student, an earnest laboror in the field, and according to current measurement he is esteemed as rigidly filling the place to which he is appointed. Every candid judgment respecting him is that he is doing all for the Master's sake. To him Jesus is all. In the spirit of Paul, he is counting all thing but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ. But in him, notwithstanding the good appearances, there may be the fatal fault. Perhaps he is but an ambitious worker for the work's sake, or for the sake of what it will temporarily produce. Probably he is acting under the prompting of emulation, or is thus displaying one form of his personal self-seeking; or, at best, possibly he is only preaching, teaching and working in the interests of society and the temporal well-being of his fellowmen. He is not moved, in soul and action, and by the "woe is me" solemnity, to act upon the real principle—for Jesus sake.

It is easy to deceive ourselves in these matters, and we cannot spend too much care in seeking to overcome carnal temptations and reach the right aim and position. If in eating and drinking we are to do all for the glory of God, how much more shall the larger "whatsoever" be performed under the same rule! If the commonest service rendered to a man is to be done as "unto the Lord," how much more important is it that our religious life and work shall be free from everything that is less than consecrated to him and his praise! Let us seek to have our hearts filled with his love, so that we may be able to feel that our acts, words, thoughts, influence—that they will all be for Jesus!—United Presbyterian.

DR. CHALMERS.

Chalmers was Principal of the University and Professor of Theology and Divinity proper. He was also royal chaplain for Scotland, and subject to the order of the Queen to preach at any time or place that the royal will might determine. He was the Jupiter Tonans of Scotland at that time, and the Magnus Apollo of the evangelical party for over a quarter of a century. He at once molded and led the best minds of Scotland. The country was ripe for such a movement as the disruption of 1843, and that condition of public sentiment in the nation and in the Church of John Knox was the direct result of Chalmers' teaching, alike in the rostrum and the pulpit. When he preached he preached like an angel from heaven. When he lectured to his students he always spoke as a man who was groping his way into the hearts as well as the heads of his hearers. His views had so thoroughly permeated the whole country that the Honorable Fox Maule (afterward Lord Panmure) in the House of Commons, warned the nobles of England against a measure which might result in the disruption of the National Church of Scotland, using these words: "I tell England, and I tell the civilized world, that if this Parliament shall hazard a disruption in our national Kirk, nine-tenths of the intelligence and piety will go out of the Church, simply because it is the movement of Thomas Chalmers;" and Lord Panmure's prediction was verified by the disruption of 1843.

In the rostrum, as in the pulpit, Chalmers read closely. His manner was rather awkward, his dialect very broad Fifeshire, and his voice by no means sweet or well toned, yet not harsh nor disagreeable. His eye was mellow, yet the very symbol of earnestness, purity and sincerity. When he became intensely interested in his topic or theme, his eye was the most expressive and overpowering organ of his whole head. It looked as though his brain was on fire, and his soul—his whole soul—aglow. As he swung back and forward in the rostrum, and the big thoughts rolled out of his great soul, the one hundred and thirty-four students who sat at his feet, and fifty or sixty amateur students in the gallery, were at times electrified. Old hoary-headed scholars and sages would look down from the gallery, and the embryo divines of Scotland and Ireland would look up—while both would feel literally spellbound by some of his magic sentences. The pens of the students would unconsciously fall on their note books, and after one of Chalmers' avalanche of thought, there would be a moment's pause, a still, breathless silence in the class room, then an audible utterance almost unconscious, but always earnest and unaffected, of approbation. —Dr. R. Irvine, in Frank Leslie's Sunday Magazine.

THE RELIGION OF THE ARMY.

A somewhat curious Parliamentary return has recently been printed. It occurred to Major O'Beirne, the member for County Leitrim, that it would be interesting to know to what religious denomination each man in the army belonged; and the return now before us gives this information with respect to all men serving at home on the 1st of September last. From this it would appear that the army consists of 62,860 members of the Church of England (or men who choose to call themselves such), 7,125 Presbyterians, 3,985 "other Protestants," and 20,872 Roman Catholics. The proportion of men wearing good-conduct badges is somewhat in favor of the Church of England, while the Presbyterians claim a larger percentage of men holding certificates of education than any other sect. The Household Cavalry, the Grenadier and Coldstream Guards, and the 52nd Light Infantry, are the most conspicuous regiments for the number of Churchmen in their ranks, while in the Scots Greys and the 93d and 79th Highlanders the number of Presbyterians predominate. The Roman Catholics are equally to be found in the Irish regiments, the 4th (Royal Irish) Dragoon Guards and the 18th (Royal Irish) Infantry standing at the head of the list, while the 47th Lancashire and the 103d and 104th—two of the Old East India Company's regiments—show a large proportion. The 41st (the Welsh) regiment has the largest number of Dissenters in the Infantry, and in the Cavalry, for some unascertained reason, the 21st Hussars show the strongest muster of "other Protestants." Of the non-commissioned officers throughout the army, about 70 per cent. belong to the Church of England, 9 are Presbyterians, 5 Dissenters and 16 Roman Catholics; and to show how nearly the religion of the men corresponds to their nationality, it may be stated that 73 per cent. are English, 9 per cent. Scottish, and 18 per cent. Irish.—London Weekly Review.

DINING OUT.

We, of the Presbyterian Church, sometimes make very fine points upon ourselves. We examine our own literature and Sabbath school requisites, and by the aid of powerful magnifiers, compare them with the issues of private and other publishing houses, and a fancied shadow of a shade of favorable difference in quality or price, will sometimes decide the scale, and put the text-books and literature, even of denominations other than our own, into the schools, and so cut the young people off from contact and sympathy with their own Church. As well might we decide to dine regularly at Mrs. Brown's because we imagine the dinners are a shade better than those at home, or to spend our evenings at the house of Mrs. Smith, because Mrs. Smith and the little Smiths are possibly more congenial than one's own wife and children. Let us sustain our own Church, our own Boards, our own Sabbath schools department and literature, just as we conserve our own homes and fireside. For Presbyterians, these instrumentalities are certainly superior to any others. Let us avail ourselves of them, and thus promote for them that strength and efficacy which alone can give the highest excellence and the widest success.—Westminster Teacher.

"NEVERTHELESS."

Be sure and put this word after all your prayers. We are apt to pray thoughtfully as to our wants, but thoughtlessly as to God's intentions. The pressure of our necessities makes us imperious. Our prayers are full of unconscious dictation. We map out the Divine duty; we dig channels through which he is commanded to flow. We give direction even to the Infinite Director. This is wild praying. This piety run to license. This is the height of self-assertion. When you are in trouble, pray. When you have some heavy cross to bear, so heavy that you shrink from the bearing, pray. When some cup is pressed to your lips, of such bitterness that your soul shudders and shrinks at the thought of drinking it, pray. But after you have prayed, when the cry of agonized entreaty has gone out of you, and risen like a wail into heaven, add nevertheless. "If it be possible let this cup pass from me; nevertheless, not my will, but thine be done."

IT NEVER DIES.

Philosophy has sometimes forgotten God; a great people never did. The skepticism of the last century could not uproot Christianity, because it lives in the hearts of the millions. Do you think that infidelity is spreading? Christianity never lived in the hearts of so many millions as at the present moment. The forms under which it is professed may decay, or they, like all that is the work of man's hands, are subject to the changes of moral beings; but the spirit of truth is incorruptible; it may be developed, illustrated and applied; it never can die; it never can decline. No truth can pass away. The flame is undying, though generations disappear. Wherever moral truth has started into being, humanity claims and guards the bequest.—Banner.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

FOREIGN.

There are in Edinburgh five Baptist churches, three open and two closed, comprising some 2,000 members.

The Waldensian Church numbers only thirty-nine congregations, but maintains evangelists in seven different parts of the world, and in the Transvaal in South Africa its mission among the Magwamba is maintained at a cost of £1,000 a year.

A lady at Florence has just presented to the Swedenborgen Church at Kensington three bass relievo sculptures by Flaxman—in fact, the very works by which he secured his election as a Royal Academician. Flaxman himself was a member of what is called the New Church.

Rev. H. J. Pace, for many years priest in charge of St. Helen's Roman Catholic Mission at Ongar, Essex, has joined the Church of England. The reason for this step is stated to be Mr. Pace's inability to accept the recent additions—notably the dogma of infallibility—to the Roman doctrines. Mr. Pace is now a layman, and has recently married.

Messrs. Comber and Grenfell, two English Baptists, have been exploring up the Congo. They visited San Salvador, the capital of the Congo country, and were received in a friendly manner. They also went on to Tungwa, where they visited Saba, the king of Makuta. Tungwa, 300 miles from the coast, is an irregular cluster of some 200 houses, which no European had entered before, and the missionaries pronounce it the prettiest town they have seen in Africa.

A singular project has made some progress in France. In the belief that an era of religious persecution is at hand, a number of Roman Catholics and Royalists have united in a scheme for seeking liberty to uphold the Roman Catholic faith by fleeing to the Island of Papua, where they contemplate establishing a monarchy under M. de Brenil, the Marquis de Roys. The vessel has been purchased and provisioned for this expedition, and is now at Flushing.

Arrangements are being made for the holding of an All-World Sunday school Convention in London next year, in connection with the Raikes Centenary. The Church of England Sunday school Institute and the Wesleyan and Old Bailey Sunday school Unions have the matter principally in charge. It is intended to hold services in St. Paul's Cathedral, the City Road Chapel and Mr. Spurgeon's Tabernacle. Mass meetings will be held in Albert Hall and elsewhere.

The sacred functions which fall upon sea officers in long voyages include some of the most solemn ordinances of religion. Not only have they to conduct Divine worship with their crews but they are often the only visitors of the sick and dying, whilst they have frequently to baptize infants and bury the dead. As a large portion of the lives of seamen are spent out of the United Kingdom they are greatly dependent upon their officers for religious instruction. The Missions to Seamen Society, 11 Buckingham st., Strand, W. C., has just issued the conditions for a prize essay on "Lay Work in the Merchant Navy," for which £25 will be given.

From Africa we learn of the confirmation of Mrs. Lightourn, the chief of Fallangia, who has become a warm patroness of the mission work at Rio Pongo, which she once forbade. Thirty-two adults, freed slaves, landed by Her Majesty's ship Thesis, have been baptized at Trorelma. From Asia we hear of considerable numbers of converts being baptized in China and India. At Poonah some sisters from Wantage are carrying on very successfully an orphanage and industrial school. The Bishop of Colombo has delivered a very conciliatory charge, the missionaris of the Church Missionary Society being present, and has formed a standing council. A site for a cathedral has been secured.

The Emperor of Russia has written to the Pope, taking advantage of an opening made by some communications made to him through the Prince of Bulgaria. In this letter the Emperor declares his readiness to make peace with the Roman Catholic Church in Poland. The Sultan has also written to the Pope, stating his desire to leave full liberty to the Roman Catholic Church in his dominions, and to preserve good relations with the Vatican. Four prelates will be created cardinals, and several bishops will be appointed at the consistory to be held next month, but the hats will not then be conferred upon the new cardinals, nor upon those created during the last few months, this ceremony being postponed until the consistory to be held just before Christmas.

A number of ex-officers and soldiers of the late Pontifical Zouaves, together with some others in Belgium, have, it is stated, gone to Central Africa to devote themselves to the propagation of the Roman Catholic faith among the natives. News has been received in Courtrai, whence they started some time since, that they had a good passage as far as Aden, and expected to reach Zanzibar on the 27th July, where they will probably remain for a month. Their caravan is to be divided into three sections, the first consisting of Captain Van Oost, Lieutenant Verhaet, Father Moinet, three other priests, and a friar, is to proceed beyond Lake Tanganyika, to found a mission in Manyeuma Land. The second, under a father and two Scotchman, is to go beyond the Victoria Nyanza; and the third, consisting of MM. Loosveldt and d'Hoop, and two or three priests, to form a station not far from Tabora.

Queen Victoria, as supreme head of the Established Presbyterian Church of Scotland, gave her imprimatur a few years ago to the measure for the abolition of the patronage of church livings in her dominions north of the Tweed. Her Majesty, as supreme head of the Prelatic Church established in England and the Isle of Wight, and as a noble woman who takes a close and neighborly interest in the affairs of those who are immediately about her Court, is probably at the present moment unpleasantly cognizant of the scandal of the sale of patronage at the gates of one of her own estates. There appears in Thursday's Times an offer to the highest bidder of the next presentation to the rectory of Wootton, "beautifully situate," as the advertisement tells us, between Cowes and Ryde, in the Isle of Wight. Woottoon is altogether a desirable place, which justifies all the praise the advertiser bestows upon it. There is a small, ancient church for the use of the people on Sundays, and there is a good modern residence for the parson all the year round. The tithes have been commuted at £111, which is not a large sum, but there is a charming pendicle to this stipend in a glebe extending to about 176 acres. To a man with an easy conscience and long purse, who desires to enjoy the pleasures of this life, and possibly earn the occasional privilege of Royal countenance, consistently with the manifestation of a dilletante interest in eternal things, the modern residence and extensive glebe of Wootton offers excellent attractions, and the next presentation to the living ought to fetch a long price in the market. The duties are probably light, since the population numbers only eighty.

SABBATH LAWS.

The question, now perhaps the most prominent before the country, at least that which is most momentous in view of the consequences to result from its determination, is: Shall we have a Christian Sabbath? The subject is under very general discussion, and is treated from various standpoints.

That the observance of the Sabbath in cessation from labor, is in strict accord with a law of nature which requires periodical rest as essential to bodily health and mental vigor, is supported by the testimony of the most eminent physicians the world over, and can hardly be seriously called in question from any quarter. But this is not more than remotely involved as a point on which the people of this country, particularly in our cities, are called to discuss the question. It is claimed that the laws requiring cessation from secular business, interfere with freedom of conscience, by imposing upon the people a religious observance to which they are averse. We are the farthest from upholding anything which would use civil force to insure the performance of religious duty, and we believe that Christian men should be careful in their advocacy of laws to prevent Sabbath desecration, to separate the questions of religious observance and civil expediency. The matter of conscience does not enter into the consideration of the question whether the liquor saloons shall be opened upon the Sabbath, or the factories shall be worked, or the railroad trains shall be run. No one's conscience is violated in requiring him to refrain from these things. The Sabbath laws as civil institutions—though they are founded, as are all just laws, upon Scriptural teaching—are designed to conserve public morality and promote the well being of society. They are intended to insure to every man the privilege of worshiping God, though they do not compel him to do so. They step in between the struggling toiler for bread and the exacting taskmaster, to stay the injustice. But they do more—yes, they recognize, if you will, that Christianity is superior to Paganism; that the civilization of the present is infinitely to be preferred to the barbarism of the past; and they interpose an insuperable obstacle to the retrograding into utter infidelity and atheism. The plea of liberty urged against Sabbatarian laws can with equal force be urged against all laws. Laws are enacted against the carrying of concealed weapons. Is complaint made against such laws as an infraction of liberty? Does not every one quietly acquiesce in consideration of the necessity of preserving the peace of society?

What is aimed at by those who would subvert the present laws requiring Sabbath observance is, in its fullest scope, to usher in a reign of license. The notorious Bennett, now justly undergoing his punishment for circulating obscene matters in the mails, is a champion of the anti-Sabbatarians. This wretch was, until arrested by the hand of the law, the editor of a notorious sheet published in the interest of vice. Robert J. Ingersoll, the notorious infidel, James Parton, Elizur Wright and others of what is called the National League, are doing their utmost to break down all religion. They strike their deadliest blows at the Sabbatarian laws. Right well they may, for those laws are the outposts which must be carried before they march as conquerors over every other bulwark of civil and religious freedom. The friends of morality and religion cannot sit supinely and permit these anarchists to work their destructive ends. The public conscience must be aroused. The National League claims 150 auxiliary leagues in different parts of the country. Even in Baltimore a league is to be established, and soon in every city of note throughout the country the seeds of this enemy to all good will be sown broadcast.

The plea, as always with all such measures, will be for the privilege of Sabbath enjoyment, and, strange to say, they will call to their aid such nominal Christians as profess to believe in a Sabbath of recreation, in opposition, as they would claim, to a Puritanical Sabbath. But God's laws are not to be trifled with. If we give up the holy observance of the Sabbath, and find our own pleasure in that day, soon the exaction of labor will follow, and the periodical season of rest will be known no more.

A writer in the United Presbyterian pictures the observance of the Lord's Day in Scotland:

"In the cities the quiet of the Sabbath is very marked. In the earlier hours of the day scarce any one is seen upon the streets, but when the church bells begin to call their worshiping assemblies, immediately the streets begin to teem with life. Great crowds of people, of all sizes and ages, which fill the streets, not only on the sidewalks but in the roadway as well, from all parts, are seen gathering to the house of God. Edinburgh has long been famous for her great churches and ministers. While the multitudes of this great city of over two hundred thousand inhabitants seek the house of God, not a street car is run and few carriages are driven."

This where the Sabbath is regarded as a day to be kept holy to the Lord. Contrast this with the following notes of a traveler in Germany, where what are called liberal views prevail:

"In going to church Sabbath morning we have passed fields where women were patiently hoeing endless rows of potatoes, often with children two or three years old clinging to their skirts, swaying about in the loose soil, and crying to be taken up. So much for Sabbath morning in Germany."

And again:

"We have counted thirty women in one grain field binding sheaves. The early morning of the day, 'so calm, so bright,' had called them to their labor, and as we saw them the setting sun was throwing its slant rays athwart the weary faces."

Let us hold fast to our Sabbaths, and thus resist the beginnings of an evil, the ultimate results of which it would beggar language to describe.

THE BOOK OF CHURCH ORDER.

It is highly important that all the officers, and it would be well that the unofficial members, of our churches should secure copies of the Book of Church Order adopted by the late General Assembly.

We call special attention now to the change of representation in Presbytery. The new order is that "the Presbytery consists of all the ministers and one Ruling Elder from each church within a certain district."

By another change only communicating members are entitled to vote for the pastor or any church officer.

The Book of Church Order can be obtained from J. L. Shotwell, Agent of the Committee of Publication at Richmond, Va., or of the St. Louis Publishing Company.

THE AFGHAN WAR.

England finds herself again involved in a war with Afghan. The murder of the British Embassy and its retainers demands retributive justice, and Great Britain of all nations answers fully such demands. Latest advices state that the revolt against the Ameer, who is the protege of Great Britain, is becoming general. A holy war is being preached throughout Afghanistan. The Viceroy professes to be assured of speedy success in suppressing the revolt, but such assurances are not to be relied upon. Russia is charged with having instituted, at least with fomenting the disturbance, but there seems to be no evidence to substantiate the charge.

DR. CHARLES PHILLIPS.

Publication of the following resolutions, which were crowded out previously, is due to Rev. Dr. Phillips.

They were unanimously adopted by the Trustees of the University of North Carolina, on the occasion of his resignation:

WHEREAS, The Rev. Charles Phillips, D. D., has tendered to the Board of Trustees his resignation of the Chair of Mathematics at the University of North Carolina, and the same having been accepted, therefore, be it

Resolved, That by his long and useful connection with, and services in our University, in which he received its highest honors as a student, and successively filled the offices of tutor and Professor, and was associated as colleague and companion with those eminent men, Swain, Mitchell and the elder Phillips, and on whose shoulders the Trustees with so much propriety placed the mantle of his learned and venerable father, immediately after his sudden death; by his manly and earnest efforts to re-organise that institution on the broad principles of an elective University, as demanded by public necessity, and by his intelligent zeal and co-operation as a citizen, in and out of the institution, in the support of the cause of general education, and sound morals, Rev. Chas. Phillips, D. D., has endeared himself to the Board of Trustees of the University, its Faculty, its students, and the intelligent citizens of the State, and we therefore deem it due alike to him and to ourselves to express in this manner our sincere regret at the separation. The more so as it has been caused by long and continued bad health; and to assure him of our deep sympathy in his suffering and afflictions, of our continued interest in his welfare, and of our desire for his restoration to health.

Resolved, further, That President Battle be instructed to tender to Dr. Phillips the use and occupation of the house and lot now occupied by him, free of rent, until the same shall be needed by the University.

Resolved, further, That the Secretary of the Board furnish Dr. Phillips with a copy of these resolutions at an early day.

DEATHS OF MINISTERS.

We clip from the Southern Presbyterian:

DEATH OF THE REV. DR. N. A. PRATT.

The patriarch of the Synod of Georgia, our venerated and beloved father and brother, Dr. Nathanael Alpheus Pratt, of Roswell, Cobb Co., has passed from earth to the saints' everlasting rest. So quick and quiet was the passage, that it may be called a translation. "He walked with God; and he was not; for God took him." His months of weariness, but not of pain or restlessness, were closed at early twilight, on the 30th of August, 1879.

Dr. Pratt preached his last sermon on Sabbath the 16th of last March. Four days after, on the 20th, he was attacked with paralysis of body and voice. He rallied sufficiently to walk about his house and premises, and to ride out occasionally. But his articulation continued to be very imperfect, allowing only occasional words. After two months, there was a gradual yet perceptible decline of strength. Last Friday, the 29th of August, Brother Buttolph was sent for to be with him in his closing hours. After entering the chamber where "the good man was about to meet his fate," and after an affectionate welcome, he said to Dr. Pratt, "I trust all is peace with you." Dr. Pratt, to the joy of all present, responded, "All is peace!" The next day he rallied sufficiently to go from his chamber into his porch, but seemed to be restless. He was taken back to his chamber, and passed away in a moment, just as his son, Dr. Pratt, Jr., was preparing to place him in bed.

The Rev. Messrs. Buttolph and Jones, having been sent for to conduct the funeral, reached Roswell on Sabbath afternoon. On Monday morning, Sept. 1st, at 10 o'clock, the solemn services were conducted by the above ministers, assisted by a highly esteemed brother of the Methodist Church South, the Rev. Mr. Kofer, the resident minister, who had been very attentive to Dr. Pratt. It was an occasion of the deepest solemnity and tenderness. An overwhelming congregation (some coming ten miles) filled the church. The factories and all places of business were closed. All ages, conditions and denominations, gathered in tender love and deference to him, the holy man of God, who had gone in and out before them for more than thirty-nine years. Mingled emotions thrilled that crowded assembly: thankfulness, that they had known and listened so long to a minister so able, so consistent, so faithful to God and man, a living demonstration of the gospel he proclaimed; tears and keen sorrow, at the fact that they should see his face no more, and never more listen to that voice so sweet in leading the songs of Zion, so tender and truthful, alike to saint and sinner. And, as devout men bore him to his burial, the very heavens seemed to sympathize, and mingled their torrents with the tears of the people, who marched on unmindful of the copious showers. We laid the aged pastor to rest amidst four generations who had been under his ministry, to wait the coming of that last day for which all other days are made.

A better, purer man, a more devoted subdued child of God, a more consecrated minister, we have never known. Eighty-three years and six months a sojourner on the earth; fifty-six years an embassador for Christ; for many years a husband most devoted, a father and grand-father most tender and faithful. He could have said: "I have wronged no man; I have corrupted no man; I have defrauded no man. I have coveted no man's silver or gold. I owe no man anything but love. I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith: henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day: and not to me only, but unto them also that love his appearing."

DEATH OF DR. WARDLAW.

Rev. T. D. Wardlaw, one of the most distinguished Presbyterian ministers in Tennessee, died at Shelbyville, Friday, August 22, at the age of about 55 or 60 years. He was born in Ireland, and was regarded as one of the most accomplished and highly educated ministers in his Church, and was one of the ripest scholars in Tennessee. He was for a long time pastor of the Presbyterian church in Clarksville, and a Professor in the college at that place. On account of his pronounced Southern views during the war, he was silenced from preaching by the Federal authorities. He thereupon went to New York, studied medicine, and graduated as an M. D.

He was pastor of several churches in Pennsylvania, Kentucky and Tennessee. In character he was modest and reserved with strangers; with those he knew, frank and gifted with a mild, genial humor, which was like May sunshine. In the pulpit he was too metaphysical to be popular, and yet he won, even upon the mass of hearers, by his clear demonstrations and his solid logic. Not a pulpit orator, he was not excelled as a pulpit reasoner. His learning was vast, but so deftly used that it appeared as patch work in his sermons or conversation. His work was from it. It was not used as reasoning. As a close and constant friend, a true man, a genial companion, simple and unostentatious as a child in his intercourse, and as inflexible as a rock in the right, none who have ever known will ever forget him.—Nashville American.

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

We invite the attention of our readers to the article of "H. M. I." on our first page. It will be found pleasant and suggestive. The concluding remarks are especially to be commended for their sound practical character.

Statistics of the Internal Revenue Bureau show that this country produced 15,000,000 gallons more of spirituous liquors this year than last, and besides imported, in excess of former years, 4,434,455 gallons. What a terrible amount of vice and ignorance, crime and suffering are involved in the above fact.

The Churchman revives again in its last issue, the old oft-refuted calumny that John Calvin regretted his lack of prelatic ordination. He was never ordained at all, except by his institutes says the Churchman, and heartily approved of prelacy, alleging that the Presbytery of the Continental Reformers was the result of necessity, not of choice. And the same old garbled and distorted and disjointed and misquoted extracts are adduced in proof of the same illogical conclusions. Dr. Samuel Miller once persuaded Dr. Bowden that these conclusions were rash and unlearned. But they will pass for learning with the readers of the Churchman, and with that the Churchman will be satisfied. It is easy to believe what one wishes were true—even in defiance of all history.

Mr. J. H. Mills, Superintendent of the Orphan Asylum at Oxford, N. C., to his August statement appends the following remarks:

August closed with 138 orphans in attendance, and many others asking admission. The new building, though delayed for want of lumber, will be occupied, at least in part, by the middle of September, and we shall then feel at liberty to increase the number of children.

The absence of the Superintendent during most of the month of August prevented prompt replies to the inquiries of many correspondents.

Persons desiring orphans should describe such as they want, state distinctly what they will require of them, and then what they will do for them. It is needless to write and ask "what do you require?" Do not send us any list of references, as we always write to somebody else.

Generally postmasters and mail agents are kind to the orphans. But a good man, Mr. D. A. Sugg, of Radiance Lodge, No. 132, sent the orphans $7 60 by mail, and it seems to have been lost on the way. There must be somewhere between Snow Hill and Oxford, a man mean enough to rob an orphan. Among all Mr. Wesley's illustrations of human depravity there is none equal to this.

We are uneasy about our people. They are so prosperous that many have forgotten the orphans. It may be necessary that afflictions shall be in mercy sent.

A very great sanitary improvement has been inaugurated in New York city by the establishment of free baths. The Christian Union says of it: A very great, but little commented on, sanitary improvement in this city has been the establishments of free baths, largely patronized by laboring men and their families. The baths are opened at 5 o'clock in the morning, at which long files are patiently awaiting admission, and, in order to be in time, some of the bathers sleep all night in their neighborhood on trucks and piles of lumber. On Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays they belong to the women; on Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays to the men. Each bather is allowed twenty minutes, after which the police can eject him—if he can be caught. In a week 110,000 women and girls, and 161,000 men and boys took advantage of these free bathing places, which at times were so crowded as only to allow eight square feet to each bather. Whether these baths are justly or unjustly denounced as sources of disease, tainted as they are with garbage and sewage, flowing in from the tainted rivers, the throngs who resort to them plainly show the need of some such means of refreshment for the bodies of tenement-house dwellers in the hot months, and indicate the necessity for better provision for cleanliness throughout the year. In nearly all the large towns of England a cold plunge, shower or swim may be obtained for a penny, and for four cents a hot bath, in public establishments, built by the municipalities or local boards of health, but self-supporting thereafter at these moderate charges.

A series of very interesting articles recently appeared in the Raleigh Observer on the subject of Cooking Schools. They are from the pen of Mrs. Helen Campbell, who has charge of the cooking department of Peace Institute at Raleigh. The only school of the kind in the South is the one above mentioned, and there very few in this country. Mrs. Campbell has been attending the lectures of Mrs. Corson who has charge of the Cooking School in New York city, and who has become quite celebrated in her management of that institution. We are impressed with the opinion that Mrs. Campbell is as described, a lady of fine attainments, but must think she was carried away with enthusiasm in stating that the economy practiced by the French in their cuisine "is the key to their wonderful recuperation after an exhausting war, and a cruelly enormous ransom." Yet it may have been one of the factors to that astounding result, for all know that the largest expenditures in ordinary living are in supplies for the table.

As one of the matter-of-fact toilers for existence, we wish abundant success to anything that will fit our daughters for preparing the daintiest dishes and the most healthful at the least possible cost.

The Observer says:

"The stockholders of Peace Institute have had erected during the vacation a most convenient and commodious building for the use of pupils in this department, and it will be ready for occupancy in a few days. It is the intention of Mrs. Campbell and the Principals, to extend the advantages of the school and to form classes for ladies of the city, who desire to avail themselves of the opportunity thus offered of learning cooking in all its branches as taught in the New York schools."

We learn that Peace Institute opened with prospects of a full session, and that there are now about eighty names on the roll.

While there is so much Sabbath desecration to deplore, it is pleasant to have the following to note gleaned from exchanges:

"In Paris thirty-five years ago stores of all kinds were open on Sabbath morning. Now large establishments are closed, and only a few of the smaller are open. In Italy, too, labor is far less general on Sabbath than formerly."

It is well known that Wick is one of the great centres of the herring fishing enterprise in Scotland. As many as 1,200 boats have been employed at this port during one season, although from want of success in recent years that number has been reduced by one-half. Each boat is manned by five or six hands, forming a total of several thousands of additional population in the fishing season. Last week many hundreds of these hardy toilers of the sea landed at Scrabster Pier, Thurso, from Stornoway, en route for the Wick and east coast fishing. An interesting scene was presented on Sabbath in the field back of the Royal Hotel, Thurso. Several hundreds were landed on that morning, and it appears that veneration for the Sabbath prevented these men from proceeding further on their journey, and they made the roadsides or any better place of shelter their home until Monday dawned. A short religious service was held by the men amongst themselves, reading from the Gaelic Scriptures, and prayer and praise from the Gaelic psalms. Seated on the grass, with heads uncovered, and a reverential expression on every face, the proceedings were very impressive.

The latest religious intelligence received from Rome by the Freeman's Journal of New York, by cable dispatch, is the announcement that Right Rev. F. X. Leroy, hitherto Bishop of Natchitoches, has been made Administrator of the Arch-diocese of New Orleans, with the right of succession as Archbishop.

Rev. Mark S. Gross, priest of Wilmington, N. C., has been appointed Vicar Apostolic of North Carolina.

The following which we copy with pleasure from the Southwestern Presbyterian is self-explanatory:

CHARLOTTE INSTITUTE,
Charlotte, N. C., Sept. 6, 1879.

Mr. Editor:—Reading your words of sympathy for General Hood's bereaved family, I have resolved to express my own by offering to any of his daughters, as soon as she may be old enough, all the advantages of the Charlotte Institute from the time she may enter until she shall have completed the whole course; this offer including every expense which can be incurred in the way of board and tuition, leaving to any other friend to incur only the expense of clothing.

Respectfully,
WM. R. ATKINSON,
Principal of Charlotte Institute.

NEWS NOTES.

We specially invite news from all quarters for this column.

A protracted meeting at Mooresville Presbyterian church commences to-night. The pastor will be assisted by Rev. Dr. Mattoon, of Biddle Institute, Charlotte, and Rev. Mr. Chester, of Castanea Grove.—Iredell Gazette, Sept. 12th.

UNITY CHURCH, CONCORD PRESBYTERY.

Dear Brother: Dr. Robert Nall has been preaching at Unity twice a day, 9 o'clock A. M. and 7.30 P. M., since the 5th inst. Interest, deep at the beginning, is continually increasing. God's people revived, sinners awakened, some rejoicing in hope. Results hereafter.

Yours, &c.,
R. W. BOYD.

Woodleaf, N. C., Sept. 12.

Rev. J. R. Wilson, pastor of the First Presbyterian church, Wilmington, N. C., expects to return to fill his pulpit on the first Sabbath in October. The next regular communion in this church will be observed on the second Sabbath.

Rev. P. R. Law, in charge of the churches of Pittsboro and Haywood, in Orange Presbytery, has been offered a vacation of one month. We hope the rest, much needed by him, will be fully secured and that he can return fully invigorated.

The fall term of Davidson College will commence to-morrow, 18th inst. A friend informs us that all of the professors are on the ground, except Prof. Sampson, who will doubtless be at the opening.

MONROE CHURCH, MECKLENBURG PRESBYTERY.

The Monroe Presbyterian church, Rev. R. A. Miller, pastor, on last Sabbath received into membership three persons by certificate and two upon examination. On Thursday night previous, one elder, Mr. S. R. Williamson, was elected and ordained. At the same time Dr. J. E. Traywick and Mr. Randolph Myres, who had been previously ordained to the diaconate, were elected deacons of this church.

We learn that the pastor is greatly encouraged in his work, and we add that his labors have been indefatigable and his conduct of the charge most judicious.

We published the good news of a revival in Steele Creek church last week. Now with pleasure we give details furnished by Rev. John Douglas, the pastor:

"We would not seem either vainglorious or ungrateful for distinguishing blessings conferred. But as our own hearts have been made glad, we joyfully tell to others what a great work the Lord hath done among us, how His people have been revived and what numbers have been added to the church. On the 28th of August last, we commenced at Steele Creek church the usual services connected with our fall sacramental season, beginning Thursday morning, to continue over to the Sabbath. A kind Providence seemed to arrange everything for our convenience and comfort, and for the advancement of His own good work. We had clear and mild days, with bright and lovely nights. He sent us workmen who need not be ashamed, rightly dividing the word, and giving to each a portion in season. The pastor was assisted through the whole meeting by Revs. J. Lowry Wilson and George A. Trenholm, and part of the time by Rev. F. L. Leeper, all from Bethel Presbytery, S. C. These brethren labored earnestly and most acceptably—not with enticing words, but the demonstration of the Spirit. The minds of the people had previously been prepared for a good time and were anxiously expecting it. 'They were all waiting for him,' like Elijah's servant, from the commencement of the services; they went to the top of the mountains to look for the promised and descending blessing. As an earnest of what was in reserve, four persons came forward at the beginning of the meeting and were received into the communion of the church. From that time the attendance was daily increased and the attention undivided. Each one looked as if it was good to be there, and all as if they had come there to get good. There were three services a day, at least, two during the day and one at night. With it all, there was no appearance of fagging or indication of weariness. You could see the up-turned eyes and the extended neck. The preaching was free from high-sounding words or exciting appeals to the fears or passions of men: it was earnest, persuasive and convincing. Every sermon was apparently preached as if the speaker felt he had specially been commissioned to deliver it. What was most encouraging in this work, it appeared to begin at the house of God: Christians were first revived—seemed to realize the worth of prayer, no longer "slow of speech," but prevalent in prayer. Day after day our large house was filled with attentive hearers nearly to its utmost capacity. On Sabbath there could not have been much short of fourteen hundred attentive hearers in the house and around the house. Yet, during the whole service, the most perfect order and close attention were observed and paid. The night services were quite as well observed as those of the day. The exercises closed on Monday at noon, very much to the regret of a full and weeping congregation. Never before have we witnessed or realized such a scene as was exhibited in our closing, parting act. It was not ministers and people weeping apart, but all weeping together; "for each other flowed the sympathising tear." Long will the names of these faithful brethren be remembered in Steele Creek church as ointment poured forth. During the meeting twenty-two persons were added to the church on a profession of their faith in Christ—a few weeks previous four others had been added by certificate—making twenty-six in all. And we have reason to believe there are others still who wish to know what they must do to be saved.

"'Bless the Lord, O my soul, and all that is within me; bless His holy name, (bless Him for what our eyes have seen and our ears have heard,) who crowneth us with His loving-kindness and tender mercies.'"

We closed yesterday, at Alamance church, a meeting which lasted six days. The occasion was our fall communion. We had a refreshing season. Brother Miller, of Madison, preached seven sermons, which for logical simplicity and clearness of style, richness of Gospel matter, and the sweet earnestness and unction with which they were delivered, were very models of pulpit eloquence. These were followed by four discourses by Dr. Smith, of Greensboro, who preached with his usual and well-known clearness and power. The Holy Spirit was with us, and out of twenty-six persons who attended the inquiry meetings, about half that number are indulging in a hope in Christ, in some bright, in others less assured."

W. B. T.

Alamance church, since her organization, in 1753, has occupied successively three houses of worship, and is now occupying, and will soon have completed her fourth. The time appointed for the dedication of this building is Saturday, the 18th of October, during the meeting of Orange Presbytery, whose sessions are to begin at Alamance church on the 16th. The Rev. C. H. Wiley has been invited, and has given his consent to deliver a historical sketch and preach the dedication sermon. And the session hereby cordially invites the children of this old mother church, especially all ministers of the Gospel, wherever scattered, without respect to denomination, who have gone forth from her bosom at various times, and are laboring in different parts of the great field, to meet us in re-union on this occasion, which we hope to make a pleasant one to all.

Few churches, if any, have a history more interesting and eventful than that of Alamance. Standing on the door steps of the old fane more than a century ago, and turning the ear eastward, one might have heard distinctly the crash of conflict in which blood first flowed in the cause of American freedom, for the battle of the Regulation is no myth. And a few years later, from the same sacred threshold, and looking toward the west, or in the direction of Guilford Court House, the booming of another battle, in which the same cause was virtually decided, might also have met the ear. And if the listener were a member of the congregation that worshipped in that house, how must his heart have thrilled to know that many dear ones, ministers, elders and brethren, were in or near the deadly strife. When it is remembered in what times this old church was planted, in the midst of what surroundings it grew, what was the character of the flock that worshiped here, and of the shepherds who fed it, (the first two pastorates covering one hundred years) and who and how many were the ministers sent forth in each successive generation to preach the Gospel of Christ, the story of Alamance will not be without interest whether to the patriot or to the Christian. On the day appointed that story will be told, if the Lord permits, in fitting terms, and the listeners will no doubt be many.

PRESBYTERIAL MEETINGS.

The Presbytery of Atlanta met at Smyrna church on the 28th of August. Rev. Dr. J. H. Martin was chosen moderator. Rev. Dr. J. T. Leftwich was dismissed to the Presbytery of Baltimore. Mr. J. F. McLelland was licensed to preach the Gospel. A Presbyterial Committee on the Sabbath was appointed, consisting of Rev. J. N. Bradshaw, Rev. F. McMurray and Elder D. A. Thompson. Rev. A. A. Jones, colored, formerly a member of Knox Presbytery, was received under the direction and care of the Presbytery. Mr. Geo. W. Scott was elected Treasurer of Presbytery. Rev. D. Fraser, D. D., was appointed temporary evangelist to visit the feeble and vacant churches, the different members of Presbytery being appointed to fill his pulpit during his absence. The Committee on Missions were authorized to secure the services of Rev. N. Bachman of Tennessee as evangelist. The following resolution was adopted:

"Resolved, That Presbytery has heard with pleasure the report of the Board of Trustees of Davidson College, and would express our gratification at the prosperity and continued usefulness of the College, and that we heartily recommend this institution to the favor and patronage of the members of our churches."

Presbytery adjourned to meet at Griffin on Wednesday before the third Sabbath in April next, at 7½ o'clock p. m.

Presbytery of Potosi met at Bellevue church August 24th. Eight churches were not represented by elders. All the ministers were present. The Water Valley church, consisting of 13 members, organized on the 24th of May last, was received under the care of Presbytery and its name enrolled. Rev. James V. Worsham was received from the Presbytery of South Carolina. The following report on Sunday schools and Publication was adopted:

"The Committee on Sunday schools and Publication respectfully report that they have duly considered the recommendation of the Assembly on the subject of colportage and Sunday school administration, page 48 of Minutes, and do not see the way clear to recommend any action at present. We earnestly recommend to all churches and Sabbath schools the Earnest Worker, the Children's Friend and the Lesson Papers published by our Committee."

Rev. Wm. McCarty was dismissed to the Presbytery of Palmyra. During the session Rev. A. W. Milster was installed pastor of Bellevue church. Spring meeting will be held in Brazeau, April 22d, next.

A called meeting of the Presbytery of Central Texas was held at Waco on 3d instant. The relation of Rev. W. S. Johnson to the Presbytery as Evangelist was dissolved, and thanks returned to him for his services. Mr. R. A. Robinson was received as a candidate for the Gospel ministry. A committee was appointed to organize a church in Williamson county, if the way be clear, and Rev. Messrs. G. R. Waddell and O. F. Rogers of the Presbytery of Western Texas were authorized and requested to organize a church at Coleman City, if the way be clear.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

Easy Lessons in Popular Science, and Hand Book and Pictorial Chart: Combining the conversational, catechetical, blackboard and object plans, with maps, illustrations, &c., by James Monteith, author of school geographies. $1, postpaid. 1879. From A. S. Barnes & Co., N. Y. This is a most admirable book for primary instruction in our schools. With numerous and excellent illustrations and outline maps, it pleasantly and clearly introduces to the scholar a vast amount of useful information concerning what he sees about him and what he would see if he traveled. Ocean currents, dock and ship building, waterfalls, canals and locks, bridges, trees and plants, mines and mining, lighthouses, birds, animals and insects are some of the subjects treated. All these subjects are combined with exercises in spelling, writing and reviews, so as to fix each lesson in the mind.

The Country and the Government: By Rgt. Hon. W. E. Gladstone, M. P. 10 cents. A. S. Barnes & Co., New York. 1879. This is a reproduction in Barnes' Series" of Gladstone's articles in the Nineteenth Century, and will give an intelligent grasp of the living questions before the English Ministry.

The Summer and its Diseases: By James C. Wilson, D. D., physician to the Philadelphia Hospital, lecturer in Jefferson Medical College, &c. 50 cents. 1879. Lindsay & Blakiston, Philadelphia. This is the third of the series of "American Health Primers," and, like its predecessors, is packed with most useful, popular information as to summer fevers, colds, diarrhœa, sunstroke, the skin in summer, &c.

The Sanitarian for August and September, 1879. A monthly magazine devoted to the preservation of health, mental and physical culture. $3 a year. A. N. Bell, M. D., editor; T. P. Corbally, M. D., associate editor. These are two marked numbers. We call attention to papers on "Outdoor Life," "Yellow Fever Infection" and "The Town Pump," and in September to the discussion by Dr. Allen of the "Education of girls, as connected with their growth and physical development," and Liernur's "New system for keeping cities clean," commended by Dr. Lanng of New Orleans, with many valuable notes in the Editor's Table.

The Primary Teacher's Monthly: Evangelical and undenominational. Mrs. W. F. Crafts, editor. September, 1879. 60 cents a year. The Western Sunday School Publishing Co., Chicago, Ill.

The Earnest Worker: September, 1879. 60 cents a year. Presbyterian Committee of Publication, Richmond, Va. The exposition this month is by Rev. Wm. Dinwiddie of Alexandria, Va.

We have received from the American Temperance House, J. S. Ogilvie, publisher, 29 Rose street, New York, two popular concert exercises for Sabbath schools and juvenile organizations, by Mrs. E. H. Thompson: No. 1. "The Christian's Journey," 16 pages; No. 2. "The Story of Redeeming Love," 16 pages, at 6 cents each, or 60 cents per dozen. They are composed of selections from Scripture and hymns, conveniently distributed.

Messrs. Charles Scribner's Sons send us notices of several new books for October, viz: the concluding volumes of Mr. Gladstone's Essays, Mrs. Burnett's Haworth, The Gracchi, Marius and Sulla, by A. H. Beesly, the latest addition to "Epochs of Ancient History," and the republication of the Memoir of S. S. Prentiss, for sometime out of print, and Jules Verne's History of Exploration and Travel. Froude's Cæsar has reached its sixth edition.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

SOUTHERN.

PRESBYTERIAN.

The Southern Presbyterian states that Rev. T. D. Wardlaw, of Shelbyville, died on 30th of August.

Rev. I N. Campbell has accepted a call from Union church, Lexington Presbytery. His post-office will be Parnassus, Augusta county, Va.—Central Presbyterian.

The congregation of Montgomery City, Mo., not only granted Rev. W. E. Burke a month's respite, but also furnished a handsome little sum of money in addition.

An attempt was made on Saturday night last to burn the church, but the effort was hindered by the direct agency of the God of Providence.—P., in Southwestern Presbyterian.

The Presbyterian church at Columbus, Miss., voted by a small majority to call Rev. C. A. Chichester to the pastorate, but no steps were taken at the meeting at which it was done to prosecute the call.

At a recent two days' meeting at Providence church, (Presbytery of Mississippi) there were eight hopeful accessions to the communion, and its spiritual strength greatly revived. The pastor, Rev. A. McCallum, was assisted by Rev. D. A. Planck.

A meeting of ten days' continuance at Rector Chapel, in the Presbytery of Western Texas, was closed on the 31st ult. Fourteen persons were added to the church on examination and five by letter. Rev. R. C. Garrason is the pastor. Rev. R. E. Sherrill, Rev. W. E. Caldwell and licentiate Porter McCurdy preached.

The Macon Telegraph learns that Rev. Donald McQueen, of South Carolina, has been invited to fill the pulpit of the Presbyterian church at Milledgeville, and will begin his pastoral relations on the third Sabbath of this month. Mr. McQueen is a son of the genial and big-souled Rev. Donald McQueen, D. D., of Sumter, S. C., and is said to be a very promising young divine.

The St. Louis Presbyterian says: A note from Troy, Ky., brings us the good news that the church there, of which Rev. W. J. Lapsley is pastor, has just enjoyed a refreshing. Rev. Dr. J. L. McKee, of Danville, was with Mr. Lapsley, and preached the Gospel with great earnestness, simplicity and power. Sixteen persons confessed Christ. This accession makes the number of those who have been added to the church during Mr. Lapsley's three years' ministry, about forty, and the total number of members at present about one hundred and seventy.

The late storm, which destroyed the Presbyterian church of Morgan City, La., and the Catholic church at Franklin, as heretofore noticed, also blew down the neat little Presbyterian church at Centreville. The tower of the Presbyterian church at Thibadeaux was blown off, and the plastering much damaged. Much loss was experienced by churches of other denominations. The Methodist church at Jeanerette was badly damaged, the Episcopal church at Franklin was unroofed, and the Catholic church at Centreville blown down. The dining room of the residence of Rev. C. M. Atkinson was lifted from its foundation and carried about six feet.

Rev. James Wilson writes to the Texas Presbyterian from Macy, August 25th: "We have recently had Rev. Dr. Byers with us at Wheelock and had a profitable meeting; added two families of Wheelock to our church, and four young persons. Three of these were our baptized children the other five had no previous connection with the Presbyterian Church. One of the families are English Episcopal, and on renewed profession, in the absence of evangelical Episcopacy, and after observation of modes of worship here, gave us there preference and seem to go heartily with us. The other family come to us on profession, and their preference as expressed for our church was our holding, in its integrity, the promise "to you and to your children."

Weatherford Presbyterian Church, as we learn from Rev. W. S. Johnson reporting to the Texas Presbyterian, has had many difficulties to contend against, but has pushed bravely forward. Hardly a communion season has passed since Rev. L. B. Chaney took charge of the church, without several members being added; at the last communion, three members were received, two on certificate, and one on examination. The membership has now reached 56. The Sabbath school and prayer meeting are kept up, and as far as I could judge, the members seem to be devoted to the church and pastor, and anxiously laboring for its prosperity. To their credit it can be said that, though they have had heavy expenses in trying to support their pastor and repair their church, they have contributed liberally to all the benevolent schemes of our General Assembly. They do not seem to be any poorer on account of it, and the blessing of God seems to be resting on them.

A correspondent of the Southern Presbyterian writes from Eatonton, Ga.: "Our church in Eatonton has been without regular preaching since last December, and is now longing for regular services. I write this, hoping it will meet the eye of some one of our ministers who may be seeking new fields of labor, and open correspondence with us. We have the use of a good building, the Union church, for one-half the time, but have no manse. We have about thirty-five communicants, and many children who would, with proper training, come in to strengthen us. We can raise four hundred dollars, and we think that by a union with one of the neighboring churches we could support a man with small family. Our church stands high, and a great future is before us, if the Good Shepherd sends us an under-shepherd who will gather us together and break unto us the bread of life. The Rev. R. Milner has kindly visited us twice this summer, riding fifty miles so do so, and will preach to us again on the second Sabbaths in September and October. This good man seems to be untiring in his work for the Master. Waiting and watching, I am yours in Christ."

A correspondent of the Southwestern Presbyterian writes to that paper under date of September 5th: The Presbyterian church at Bladon Springs, Ala., is one of the weak and vacant churches of the Presbytery of South Alabama. It has been in existence not more than seven or eight years.

A meeting was recently held there, conducted by one of the brethren of the Presbytery sent to visit them. The church was much encouraged and revived through the power of the Word and Spirit of God. Six were added on profession of their faith. Three of them were men—heads of families, bringing two households into full union and communion with the church—the parents becoming members, and the children being baptized. The rest were young people, in whom all felt the deepest interest. Some seven or eight others manifested a serious concern. But the meeting lasted only four days, including the fifth Sunday of August, and was then unavoidably brought to a close, our Methodist brethren continuing the preaching a few nights longer.

It is very desirable that this little church should be regularly supplied. Bladon Springs is a delightful resort, with unsurpassed mineral waters.

Rev. S. F. Tenney writes to the Southern Presbyterian, of his work in Eastern Texas: "I

...are to report that by direction of Presbytery I visited recently the town of Orange, in Orange county, where we have a small church, organized last year. I found Orange a flourishing place of probably 1,500 or 2,000 inhabitants. Many of the residences are very comfortable and tasteful in appearance. The people are intelligent and refined in their manners. Though there are but few members of the Presbyterian church, yet a good many families of non-professors were brought up under Presbyterian influences, and prefer the Presbyterian Church. A very desirable building lot has been given for building a Presbyterian church, and the lumber for building has also been offered. The town is improving quite rapidly, and is likely to improve much more when the trains run through, connecting Houston and New Orleans, which it is said will take place in a few months. Seven or eight large steam saw-mills and shingle-mills are in constant operation, shipping an immense quantity of lumber by rail to Western Texas, and by the river and gulf to Southwestern Texas and to Mexico. Beaumont, a town on the Sabine River, (Orange is on the Sabine), is some twenty or thirty miles distant from Orange by rail. It is also a lumber town, and is improving rapidly. We have a few Presbyterians there, but no organization. These two places, and perhaps one or two other points along the railroad, could be supplied by the same minister for the present. The prospect for the growth of our Church at these points seems very inviting. We greatly need a faithful and energetic minister for that field, and he ought to be on the ground soon. A young man, or one with a small family, could probably be supported there. Any minister who may read this and be willing to go to that field, may learn further particulars by corresponding with me."

The latest and most valuable work on finances, and the profitable use of surplus funds by corporations, capitalists or those of lesser means, has just been issued by Messrs. ITHAMAR DIBBELL & CO. ... Broad Street, New York. Complimentary copies furnished those interested in finance or investments, and to all others, on receipt of 25 cents.

SECULAR MISCELLANY.

The number of recruits to be drawn for the Russian army this year is fixed at 218,000.

Harvard College has a Chinese professor. He is forty years of age, "slender and well dressed," and has brought his wife and six children to live in Cambridge.

American manufacturers have the order for the object glass for the Pulkowa, Russia, telescope. The diameter of the lens is to be thirty inches, and the price to be paid is $... The metal work and mounting will probably cost as much more. The largest object glass in the world at present is only twenty-six and one-fourth inches in diameter.

Two cadet engineers from the Annapolis Naval Academy will be admitted to the Royal Naval College at Greenwich, England, next month. They will be the first Americans who have entered and studied in that institution.

Captain Eads, who successfully completed the great jetties below New Orleans, is a small, rather fragile-looking man. A peculiar pallor of his skin and a very quiet manner make him seem even smaller than he is; but he has a very thoughtful and determined face, like a man who has the utmost confidence in himself, and knows how to wait.

The late storm on the coast is said to have caused damage to the sugar crop to the extent of 500,000 hogsheads. The falling off in molasses will be 100,000 barrels. It is estimated that on the lowlands of Mississippi the aggregate destruction of cotton will amount to 250,000 bales. Loss in machinery, sugar houses, buildings, fences, &c., is reckoned at $...,000.

Tennyson's brother changed his name to Turner in order to inherit an income of $... a year. He left no children and Tennyson can now get the estate on the same terms; but he will not accept the condition.

The Southern Home says of the appointment of Judge Gilmer: Governor Jarvis has appointed Col. John A. Gilmer, of Greensboro', Judge of the Fifth District in the place of Judge Kerr, deceased. This is probably the most popular selection that could have been made in the district for Mr. Gilmer stands well as a lawyer, and the people have the most implicit confidence in his fairness and integrity. Judge Gilmer is probably the youngest Judge in the State. He was a gallant soldier during the war and is badly crippled. He has represented his county several times since the war in the State Senate and made a most acceptable public servant.

Jay Gould has again contributed $5,000 to the Memphis sufferers. The Pittsburg Relief Association sent $1,000.

The last King of the Montauk Indians is dead. King Stephen Pharaoh, as he was lately called, having died recently. Of late years the tribe herded cattle for their neighbors of Easthampton, around the fresh banks of Kongonock Lake. Pharaoh died in a windswept cabin all alone by the pond. His title was worn not quite in vain, since the tribe he governed have really a right of occupancy on their promontory on Long Island, a right which Judge Dykman decides must be looked upon as an encumbrance to real title. The King expressed a wish to see Sag Harbor before he died, and was driven thither while in an expiring state, and succumbed on his return that evening.

Messrs. Polk, Miller & Co:

GENTLEMEN:—Please send me another bottle of your "Vest Pocket Cure" for Dyspepsia. I have tried the trial bottle, and have no hesitation in saying I believe it superior to anything known to the public.

W. A. GREGG, Stated Clerk.

It Seems Impossible.

That a remedy made of such common, simple plants as Hops, Buchu, Mandrake, Dandelion, &c., should make so many and such marvelous and wonderful cures as Hop Bitters do, but when old and young, rich and poor, Pastor and Doctor, Lawyer and Editor all testify to having been cured by them, you must believe and try them yourself, and doubt no longer. See other column.

HALE'S WEEKLY.—Mr. Peter M. Hale announces that in Raleigh, N. C., he will publish a weekly paper after the 7th day of October next. The advertisement will give further information. "Hale" is a household word in North Carolina journalism, and Mr. P. M. Hale, as editor of the Raleigh Observer, did not permit the prestige acquired from his father's fame to be lowered. We feel assured that the Weekly will achieve success.

"It is well with the child."

The deceased was a valuable member of the community in which he lived. He was strictly just in his dealings, and benevolent in disposition. Though modest and retiring, yet his qualities were seen, appreciated, and won the respect of all. What he did was in a quiet way and for the good it might accomplish. He was a regular attendant at church, though having never connected himself with it. He contributed liberally to its support and seemed to manifest much interest in its workings and advancement. He leaves a widow to mourn his loss. May the Heavenly Father comfort and sustain her in this affliction.

At his home, near Hawfields Church, on Friday, September 5th, DAVID WHITE KERR, in his 61st year. He was a ruling elder in the Hawfields Church. Opened Sabbath school, of which he was Superintendent, and his Bible class, on the last Sabbath in August, and was laid to rest at the same church on the next Sabbath.

EDUCATION.

To the Chairmen of the Presbyterial Committees of Education:

Please bear in mind that application for aid to students must be made annually. The fact that a student was on our list last year makes no difference. If he wishes aid this year, application must be made by the Chairman of Education in his Presbytery. Brethren will also please state whether the student is in College, or in the Seminary. The undersigned has authority from the Committee to receive all students as beneficiaries for whom application is made in the regular way.

My postoffice address at present is Covington, Tenn., but letters addressed to me at Memphis will be forwarded. Quite a number of letters on the subject of Education have been addressed to Rev. Dr. Waddel, the former Secretary. Brethren will bear in mind that there has been a change of Secretaries.

E. M. RICHARDSON, Secretary of Education.

The American Agriculturist will be sent one year, gratis, to any one sending us two new subscribers at $2.65.

NOTICE.

Romulus M. Johnston, Esq., agent of the Goldsboro Messenger, is authorized to receive and receipt for any money due us for old or new subscriptions. Our friends will oblige us by paying promptly. We will welcome any new subscribers.

Col. John L. Brown, at Charlotte, N. C., and Messrs. J. D. McNeely, at Salisbury; J. D. Williams, Fayetteville; W. S. Moore, Greensboro, N. C.; will receive and receipt for any subscriptions to this paper. The checks of these and many other agents, on their local banks of deposit, will be cashed here, without discount, and save expense of postal order or registration.

Mr. McNeely is Agent for the Missionary also.

TO AGENTS.

It will not be practicable to write to each one of the Agents of the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN, and ask them to continue their exertions. We now make the general request, and take occasion to thank them and all other friends for the disinterested kindness so fully and so constantly manifested in the past.

THE MAP OF PALESTINE.

We have sent out this map quite extensively, and it has, we believe, given universal satisfaction; at least, no complaints have been made, and many have expressed hearty appreciation.

It is 28x42 inches in size and sold by publishers at $1 00.

We furnish gratis with one new subscriber at $2 65.

THE MINUTES OF GENERAL ASSEMBLY

HALE'S WEEKLY.

ON TUESDAY, the 7th day of October, 1879, and in the City of Raleigh, the undersigned will commence the publication of Hale's Weekly, A North Carolina Democratic Newspaper.

These four words convey all that a column of Prospectus could tell: the good of the State; the success of the Party which is the life of the State and the country; the publication of all the news; these the objects proposed. That he can do the last and contribute to the first and second, the subscriber does not affect to doubt. The people have set their seal of approval upon his past and he does not doubt the future.

HALE'S WEEKLY will be printed from new and beautiful type and on fair white paper. The price will be $2 per annum. No name will go upon its mail books without payment, and no paper will be sent after expiration of the time paid for.

P. M. HALE.

THE FOURTH SESSION, of ten months, will commence on the 1st day of September next, under the instruction of Rev. D. C. Rankin, Professor, who has the best testimonials of fitness for the work, in his deep interest in the colored people and his past labors in their behalf, his ample scholarship, and his aptness to teach.

All the branches necessary to fit candidates for the Gospel Ministry will be taught. Some acquaintance with the early branches of English will be required for entrance. Candidates must come recommended by their Presbyteries or Committees of Education; and if of other denominations, must have similar credentials.

No charge for tuition. Board can be had on reasonable terms.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

Charlotte Institute.

THE next session begins September 10th, 1879, and ends June 8th, 1880.

No Institute ever made more rapid progress in securing the confidence and esteem of its patrons than this one during the past session. Before the end of the scholastic year the number of its pupils, attracted by the well-earned reputation of the school, increased to 117, exclusive of the adult ladies who availed themselves of the superior advantages here given in the departments of Music, Art, and Modern Languages. In no respect is this Institute inferior to any other first-class boarding-school in the Southern or Middle States. Such testimonials as will satisfy an one as to the high standard and thoroughness of the instruction here are published in the catalogue. These testimonials are peculiarly trustworthy, inasmuch as they are given by gentlemen engaged in teaching in well known schools and colleges of the highest grade, and who are therefore qualified to express an opinion in regard to educational institutions.

The total expense for the half session or term will be $125. This amount includes board, with washing, fuel, lights, furnished room and servants' attendance, tuition in all the English branches, Latin, with either French or German, Calisthenics, text-books and stationery for school purposes. Pupils are not permitted to incur additional expense without permission of their parents. Parents are thus assured that their bills will not be greater than they expected.

Special arrangements and special terms for young ladies who wish to take only Music, Painting and Drawing, and Modern Languages, severally or collectively.

For further information address the Principal, Rev. WM. R. ATKINSON, Charlotte, N. C.

It does not destroy the draft.
It does not interfere with cleaning the tubes.
It will not choke up, and requires no cleaning.
It requires no direct dampers to be opened when raising steam (dampers being objectionable. as they may be left open and allow sparks to escape)
It requires no water to extinguish sparks, which, by condensation, destroys the draft. Besides, when water is used, if neglected, the efficiency is destroyed by evaporation of the water, and the boiler is kept in a filthy condition.
It is simple and durable and can be relied upon.
It can be attached to any boiler.
No planter should be without one of them. Insurance companies will insure gins and barns where the Talbott Engines and Spark-Arresters are used at same rate as charged for water or horse-power.

THE BUFFALO LITHIA WATERS,

For Affections of the Kidneys and Bladder.

RELIEF OF INFLAMMATION AND ULCERATION OF THE BLADDER.

AFTER THE LIFE OF THE PATIENT HAS BEEN DESPAIRED OF BY HIS MEDICAL ATTENDANT.

[Extract from Letter of Dr. T. B. Greer, of Rocky Mount, Franklin county, Va., of June 3, 1876.]

"I have recently had occasion to try the 'Lithia Water' in a case of Inflamation and Ulceration of the Bladder, caused by the retention of urine, the result of stricture of twenty years standing. I had exhausted all of the resources, both of experience and authority, and when my patient commenced the use of it, had no hope of his recovery. He has been using the water five weeks, with results so favorable that he now has every prospect of complete recovery, and without some unexpected change in his condition, will be on his feet in a short time. The effects of the water in this case have been marvelous. For the sake of humanity I shall keep a record of the case, and report to you as it advances."

In a subsequent communication Dr. Greer, referring to the above case, says:

"In the case of 'Inflamation and Ulceration of the Bladder,' heretofore reported, the patient recovered, and I attribute the recovery entirely to the Lithia Water."

STONE.

CASE OF MR. C. WOLFFE, OF POINT COUPEE PARISH, LA.

POINT COUPEE PARISH, LA., April 2, 1878.

MR. THOMAS F. GOODE, Proprietor Buffalo Lithia Springs, Va.:

Two years ago I began to suffer with a severe and constant pain in my kidneys, which was soon followed by violent attacks, averaging about two a week, causing excruciating agony, from which I was frequently relieved by the discharge of stone of from four to six grains in weight: at other times by the passage of smaller stones, and sometimes by sand in considerable quantities.

I sought, but in vain, the best medical assistance, and as the result of this state of things, I was reduced to such a condition that my medical advisers told me frankly that I had nothing to hope from remedies; that my condition was a hopeless one, and I looked to death alone for a termination of a miserable existence. Mr. J. L. Lyons, a druggist of New Orleans, about six months ago, advised me to try the Buffalo Lithia Water, Spring No. 2, which I did. About a week after I commenced the use of it I had an attack of less than usual severity, in which I passed two small stones, one of which I placed in a tumbler of the water, and in about three hours found it dissolved to fine powder. That gave me confidence, and I determined to persevere in its use. I have had no attack whatever since, nor has there been any discharge of stone or sand.

The pain in my kidneys has entirely disappeared; my weight, which had been greatly reduced, I have fully regained, and my general health has been entirely restored. I very cheerfully acknowledge my indebtedness to the Buffalo Lithia Water for my life, and the comfort which I now enjoy.

Respectfully, C. WOLFFE.

Statement of Mr. J. L. Lyons, Wholesale Druggist and Importer, 42 and 44, corner Granvier and Camp sts., New Orleans, La.

NEW ORLEANS, LA., April 5, 1878.

I am personally cognizant of the truthfulness of the foregoing statement of Mr. C. Wolffe, who is one of our best citizens.

A PHILOSOPHIC PEDDLER.

It was on the way to Saratoga, by way of boat, in the latter part of the month of September, that I met the subject of this sketch. The "season, at the great watering place was over, and there were very few travelers. After supper, toward nine o'clock in the evening, I took a fancy to wander around the lower deck to take a look at the machinery and listen to the playing of a not very tuneful harp. Going forward, amidst a maze of merchandise of every description, I found myself among the "steerage" or "deck" passengers, who, for a very small fare, can take the journey to Albany, and are allowed to sleep on the boxes and bags in the forward part of the boat. There were nearly a score of persons, about equally divided between German and Irish, and they were nearly all asleep. Turning to come back, my attention was arrested by a man who was evidently one of the deck passengers, but removed at some distance from them. He was seated on a box near one of the lights and reading a book. He asked me the time, and that led to quite a lengthy conversation between us, which, leaving out my questions and much that is irrelevant, let me epitomize thus:

"Yes, sir, I'm a peddler—I might say, sir, a traveling peddler; for I'm 'ere to-day, and no one knows where to-morrow. You think I'm a Jew, perhaps, because you find most peddlers who come to your house to be Jews. Well, you are only partly right. I was born in England; my mother was a Jewess, my father was an Englishman; and, as you see, I have what a 'nmerons friend o' mine calls, 'an 'Ebraic cast o' beauty,' and, as you 'ave ears to 'ear, you may detect, once in a while, but not hoften, that my haiches are not quite regular. Always been a peddler? Bless you, I should 'ope not. My father were a tradesman in the old country. He kept a kind of a notion store, where you could buy most anything and heverything. We were not by any means well-to-do. It's a poor country to rise in, as you know, sir. You've got to be born risen. We all had to work, my mother and my brother (who got tired of the 'ole thing and ran hoff to Haustralia, and we never heerd from him since), and I ran of errands, and carried bundles, and made myself, as the sayin' goes, 'generally useful.' My father was not a colleg-bred man, but he was a great reader. He read hanything and heverything all the time he could spare; and, between me and you, sir, he were much better fitted to keep a book-stall than a notion store, of which he didn't 'ave much notion, anyhow. He was a quiet man, wrapped hup in 'is hown thoughts, though very gentle and kind and good to all about 'im. He taught me to read, which I learned to do quite quick, and I would 'ave been as great a reader as he if I had had the chance, but I din't.

"Well, my father died, and that brought about terrible changes. My mother took on awful, for, you see, she used to look up to him—he hein' a bookish man, and she having little learnin' herself—and she used to think of 'im as a sooperior creature. But aside from that he was a very good and a very lovable man. She took to drinkin' too much to drown her sorror, and in a year she died. So, there I was, at twenty years of age, left alone, for, strange to say, I 'adn't hanother relative in the world exceept my brother, and I didn't know where he was. I came to this country thinkin', and rightly, it was the place to make money for a man with small means (I had about $1,000). I went West. I opened a notion store in a live city, and I stayed there for fifteen years. I 'ad no fices to speak of, I saved my money, and at the end of that time I was worth a matter of $8,000.

"Well, sir, I think you'll bear me hout in one hassertion, and that is, that the Jews, as a class, are not a speculative race; they make their money by 'ard work and savin' what they make. But remember I'm not a full-blooded Jew—people must take me as the Englishman does his hale—'alf and 'alf. So, you see, when I got so much money saved up, though I'd been thrifty and saving all the while, I found the American fever for speculation growing upon me. I saw people investin' in this, and investin' in that, and doubling and trebling their money, and why shouldn't I? As I always kept my mouth pretty close, no one knew what I was worth, or, indeed, that I was worth anything, for my store was a very small affair. But as soon as I signified a desire to invest I had hoffers from all quarters and for all sorts of henterprises. To make a long story short, I put my $8,000 into a mining haffair which butterly failed, and I, with a lot more of poor fellows, lost all. Then wasn't I discouraged! I followed my mother's hexample, and gave way to drink for a time, but 'ad some of my father's sense, and I soon saw that wasn't the thing, and I stopped—clean short hoff. I always liked to travel, so I sold out my store and took to peddling in the notion and cheap dress goods line.

"I went farther out West, goin' as far as California, though I didn't walk, of course, over the plains. I have been in nearly every State in the West and South and all the Eastern States several times over."

"And now?" I interrupted.

"I am on my way to the northwestern corner of the State."

"In the notion line yet?"

"Oh, no, sir. I've something that catches the people better."

He displayed to me his basket. It was filled with that glittering kind of cheap jewelry sold by many street venders on Broadway, Eighth avenue and the Bowery.

"Yes, sir," he continued, looking with an admiring eye at the showey mass, "that's what takes 'em now-a-days, especially the wimmen. Is the profits large? Well, let me show you. These imitation diamond studs cost a cent and a half a piece; they retail for twenty-five cents. These jet crosses are a cent and a half a piece; they retail for twenty-five cents. Ladies and gentlemen's sets, diamond—imitation of course—breastpins and finger-rings cost all the way from one to four dollars a gross, and sell for from twenty-five to fifty cents each. In the South, among the negroes, I 'ave hoften and hoften got a dollar for a set that didn't cost me hover four cents. And factory girls down East will sooner 'ave jewels than food, though some of 'em are pretty smart and you can't fool 'em very easy.

"My mode of life? Oh, sir, it's quite simple. You see hambition is the bane hof mankind, hespecially hin this country. As long as you're hambitious you can't be 'appy. That's my doctrine. When I was workin' and savin' and tryin, to make so much I wasn't 'appy, but now I am. I don't bother about the future. I makes a good livin' in a pleasant way and it suits me. You're looking at the boxes here, and thinkin' it can't be very 'pleasant.' Well, it's all in custom. Lay an old blanket down 'ere, and I'll be as comfortable as you in your stateroom to-night. My 'elth, thank Heaven, is good. Of course I walk a great deal; I eat good; I sleep good; I 'ave no desire for fine clothes. With a book and a pipe I can be content. I don't drink at all, for its only foolin' money away I 'ave to work for. In the spring, summer and early fall I travel in the country. In the winter time I am in the city, generally standin' on Broadway or the Bowery. Married?

"No, sir, not married, nor don't hintend to be. I don't think I can haccomplish that great object in life of makin' one woman 'appy—no, sir, I honestly don't, for I'm different from many men. What book was I readin'? 'Ere it is."

It was Emerson's "Conduct of Life," and it is Emerson himself who somewhere says that if, traveling on some far Western train, we should chance to sit next a passenger who was reading Plato, we should feel like hugging him. That thought came to me when I discovered that this somewhat original character was reading a book like the "Conduct of Life," and, though my enthusiasm was not so great as to take the affectionate turn suggested, I could not help but have great respect for the man.

"I picked it hup, he continued, "at a bookstall in Nassau street. Yes, I read all I can, mostly solid books. I take after my father in that respect. When traveling, I stop at cheap conntry 'otels. In the city I get a small 'all bedroom. Winter hevenings I stay at 'ome and read, or go to the theatre when business is good. I'm a Church of England man, sir, in religion—a very broad one, for I believe, like the Universalists, in the final salvation of all—Christian Union.

Children Can Serve Christ.

The boy that carried the five loaves and two fishes was of some service to the benevolent and wonder working Saviour.

A little boy once said to his mother:

"I should like to have lived in the time of our Saviour, that I might have done something for Him."

His mother smiled and said:

"What could a child of your years have done for Him to prove your good will?"

The little boy thought a moment, and then said:

"I could run everywhere doing his erranda."

Now this boy could still serve Christ by giving his little savings to translate print and circulate Bibles and Testaments. The Lord Jesus could still see him do it, and still remember all he did for heathen boys and girls.—Bible Advocate.

A Syrian Family on the Housetop.

An American family on the housetop would be a strange sight. But it is not a strange sight in the East. The roofs of the houses are flat, and play an important part in the domestic history of the family. In the mild climate of Syria and Palestine the housetop is the resort at evening, and in the hot summer months here their beds are spread, covered by a booth or awning, and the whole family sleep in the open air to avoid the heat and to escape from the fleas.

Here the Turkish rug is spread and the family take their evening meal. The father holds the nebreej or flexible tube of the narghileh pipe, the mother holds a little cup of Arab coffee, and the children amuse themselves with music on the shepherd's pipe and the tambourine.

Flower pots stand on the wall, as the Orientals are excessively fond of flower culture, prizing above all others the rose, the pink, the jasmine and tube-rose.

The housetop has a parapet around, according to the Mosaic injunction. This precaution is too often neglected, and I have sometimes heard of boys falling backwards from the roofs while flying their kites. In many of the cities and towns the houses are built close together, covering the streets which pass beneath them like tunnels, so that the roofs of the houses form one continuous surface. In the villages the streets are so narrow and the roof beams project so far over the streets that one can readily run from one end of the town to the other on the roofs. When our Lord said, "Let him that is on the housetop not come down," he meant, let those who are on the housetop in time of attack upon the city not try to come down into the city, but jump across from roof to roof to the end of the town, and then escape into the country.

Town meetings are held on the housetops, proclamations are made on the housetops, the olives, figs and grapes are here spread out to dry. Before the wheat is ground it is washed and spread on the housetop, and the children watch it while drying to keep away the sparrows. Here the washed clothes are hung out, and here the women of the households meet and lean over the parapets, either to see what is passing in the street or to talk with the neighbors. The Mohammedans pray on the housetop, turning their faces towards Mecca.

In the cities the roofs are made of cement, and in the mountain villages of earth a foot thick. I once preached on a housetop to several hundred people in a Lebanon village. Sometimes bonfires are built on the housetops, and watchmen often watch the village vineyards in fruit time, sitting in booths, on the highest housetops in the village. When the American female seminary was built at Beirut some of the native Syrian friends protested against its being roofed with French tiles in the European fashion, on the ground that there would be no housetop to walk on and to use for the various domestic purposes of the school. An Oriental housetop is a great convenience, but alas! those flat roofs too often leak, and sometimes, when covered with earth and soaked with rain, they fall in and bury the whole family alive in the ruins.—Dr. Jessup, in Christian Weekly.

Military Pocket-Handkerchiefs.

Geography is a weak point with the French nation. The Germans, when they invaded France, were found to know the country better, and to possess better maps of it, than the natives themselves. Culture in France, indeed, seems to be the possession of the few, and that probably is one cause of the dangerous instability of the government. The men in power appear to have discovered this, and are evidently doing all they can, despite priestly opposition and intrigue, to strengthen themselves and the country by educating the masses. One of the expedients adopted for popularizing science in the army partakes of the ludicrous, suggesting as it does the "moral pocket-handkercher" for the elevation of the little niggers which Dickens has made famous. The French soldiers, we are told, have for some time had pocket-handkerchiefs served out to them, on each of which is printed a map of France and its principal colonies; and now others are being distributed bearing impressed on them the leading directions in reference to arms, equipments, harness, drill, &c., of the infantry and cavalry.—London Review.

Japanese Gardens.

The love of flowers, shrubs and trees is widely spread in Japan; even in the busy commercial quarters of the large towns almost every house has its garden spot with its tiny dwarf shrubs. These dwarf shrubs and trees probably owe their origin to the narrow limits of space, and their production is carried on to such a ridiculous degree that a Dutch merchant was shown a box three inches deep, and with one square inch of surface, in which a bamboo, a fir, and a plum tree, the latter in full bloom, were growing and thriving. The price asked for this botanical curiosity was about $300. The method of dwarfing is by checking the circulation of the sap, cramping the extension of the branches, and chilling the roots in flat porous pots, which are kept constantly cold and wet. Many dwarf plants have striped or variegated leaves, and the production of such varieties, both dwarfed and in the natural size, is a favorite hobby with Japanese gardners. In the portions of the garden immediately surrounding the house no tree or shrub is allowed to retain its natural size, but within one sees fans, ships in full sail, round tables, candelabra, large crescents and stiff rectangular walls. A soft, velvet-like turf covers the ground, and the clean gravel paths are bordered with gay stones, dwarf trees, and flower vases. From the ponds, in which gold fish swim; and from the artificial rivulets, rise mossy little rocks, to which tiny bridges of every conceivable shape lead. Such spots require too much care and attention to admit of wide extension, and so they generally occupy but a comparatively small space in front of the mansion. High pruned hedges enclose these green boudoirs, where nature is disguised and curbed as conventional culture and the usage of "good society" demand. Without these hedges lie the wilder parts of the garden, where nature is left more to herself. Japanese gardens look most beautiful towards the end of autumn, when the foliage of the maple assumes a bright purple hue, and the azaleas and wax trees are clothed in dark purple tints. About this time, too, the winter chrysanthemum is in full bloom; it is the favorite flower of the Japanese, who possess countless varieties of it. The size and splendor of its star-like flowers are often incredible.—Gardener's Chronicle.

The Newspapers.

A minister was once in conversation with a few friends as to what course ought to be adopted with regard to misrepresentation in the press, and a friend said to him, "The obvious course is not to take notice of what is said of you in the papers. People will find you out in time if you do not contradict these things." "Well," said the minister, heaving a deep sigh, "that was the course I once pursued. I commenced life with a resolution that, whatever the press might say of me, I would take no notice of it. For years and years I persevered, till at last my friends came to me and said, "There is an accusation in one paper of such an unutterably villainous kind that you owe it to yourself and to your friends to contradict," The minister felt that in this case an exception must be made. He contradicted the report, as he informed the friends to whom he was recounting his experiences. "Well," said one, "and what did the newspapers do?" "Why," the minister answered, "they went and proved it."

Henry Clay and the Goat.

The following anecdote of Henry Clay has been published before, but it is amusing enough to be repeated:

As he came out of the Capitol at Washington, one day, he saw a frightened woman in the street vainly endeavoring to ward off the attacks of a sportive goat, and, he gallantly, in spite of his years and office, seized the goat by the horns. The woman thanked him and passed on. Mr. Clay would have liked to move on also, but the goat had his own views about the interference with his innocent amusement. As soon as the woman's deliverer loosed his hold on the two horns, the animal rose majestically on his hind legs and prepared for a charge. In his own defense Mr. Clay now took the animal as before by the horns and thus for a time they stood, while a crowd of street boys gathered about, immensely amused at the unusual spectacle of a Senator and a goat pitted the one against the other in a public street. As long as Mr. Clay held the goat by the horns all was well enough; but the moment the quadruped was free, he made a fresh preparation for a charge. Not a boy offered assistance, but after a while one ventured to suggest, "Throw Billy down, sir," Mr. Clay at once adopted the report of that committee, and tripping the goat up, tried to pass on. Before he could turn away, however, the goat was up, in lofty preparation for a new charge. Mr. Clay gave his enemy the floor, or pavement once more, and, keeping him there, turned to the boy with the question, "And what shall I do now?" "Cut and run, sir," the lad replied.

Ocean Splendor.

When the sea is perfectly clear and transparent, it allows the eye to see objects at a very great depth. Near Mindora, in the Indian Ocean, the spotted corals are plainly visible under twenty fathoms of water. The crystalline clearness of the Carribean Sea excited the admiration of Columbus, who, in the pursuit of his great discovery, ever retained an open eye for the beauties of nature. "In passing over those splendidly adorned grounds," says School, "marine life shows itself in an endless variety of forms; the boat, suspended over the purest crystal, seems to float in the air, so that a person unaccustomed to the scene easily becomes giddy. On the clear, sandy bottom appear thousands of sea-stars, sea-urchins, mollusca and fishes of a brilliancy of color unknown to our temperate seas. Burning red, intenso blue, lively green and golden yellow, perpetually vary; the spectator floats over groves of sea plants, gorgonias, corals, alcyoniums, flabellums and spongos that afford no less delight to the eye, and are no less gently agitated by the heaving waters, than the most beautiful garden on earth when a gentle breeze passes through the waving boughs."

SECULAR NEWS.

The Republicans carry the Maine Legislature, and the election of Governor falls to that Legislature.

Mrs. Margaret Haughton of New Orleans has contributed $500 for the support of the children left orphans by the death of General Hood and Mrs. Hood.

Col. John A. Gilmor has been appointed Judge of the Superior Court of North Carolina by Gov. Jarvis, to succeed the late Judge Kerr. It is conceded to be an excellent appointment.

Judge Graves has put his foot down squarely against gambling and the violation of the Sunday liquor laws in Asheville, as several parties discovered to their cost last week.—Asheville Citizen.

The spotted typhus fever is announced as creating great distress and alarm in some of the counties of Georgia. Fifty men, mostly young, are reported as having died in a few days in the country.

Col. Siler got out a piece of mica which, in its crude state, weighed fifty-two pounds. When cleaned and ready for the market it brought fifty-two dollars. Such pieces of mica are very rare.—Franklin Western Reporter.

A. B. Cornell, formerly Collector of Customs at New York city, has been nominated as the Republican candidate for Governor of New York. The Democrats (regular) nominated Lucius Robinson for re-election, and the Tammany wing nominated John Kelly.

It is announced in several of the secular papers of the State that Mr. P. M. Hale, formerly of the Raleigh Observer, will probably start a newspaper in that city in October. We wish Mr. Hale most abundant success in anything he undertakes.

The Wilmington Morning Star has seen a letter from Dr. T. J. Turner, Secretary of the National Board of Health, in which he says that there are no resignations of the board now on hand, and that it is news in Washington that the President of the board, Dr. Cabell, of the University of Virginia, has any purpose of resigning.

The prospect for the cotton crop of Alabama is reported as twenty per cent. worse than last year, and that of Mississippi as five per cent. worse. In Georgia, with good weather for next thirty days, the crop will be full. North Carolina reports vary, representing in some counties an increase, in others a falling off from last year. The report from Louisiana is favorable. A good crop may yet be made in South Carolina. From Texas the reports are very conflicting, some reporting a falling off and others an increase.

In Afghan a revolt has occurred, in the interest of an aspirant to the throne. The Ameer is faithful to British interest but powerless. The entire British embassy with their attendants, one hundred in number, were murdered, with the exception of nine who escaped. They sold their lives dearly, and two hundred and ten of the insurgents were slain.

The Winston Leader says: The corn yield will be the largest ever known in this section, from present indications. Brown's warehouse in Winston recently had 90,000 pounds of tobacco on the floor at one time. Dr. T. M. Osborne of this place is in receipt of information to the effect that he has fallen heir to a considerable amount of real estate in Arkansas, and city property in Lexington, Ky., valued at $10,000.

The Hendersonville Courier says: Prof. Hidden, the agent of the famous Thomas Edison, the discoverer of the telephone, phonograph, and electric light, was in this place last week. The Professor was accompanied by General Clingman, and was prospecting on Green River in search of platinum, of which material a large quantity will be required to perfect his electric light. Mr. Edison, we are informed, will pay $20,000 in cash for a platinum mine.

Miscellaneous.

The most wonderful and marvelous cures, in cases where physicians, sick or pining away from a condition of miserableness, that no one but we who sell them, (profitable patients for doctors,) is obtained by the use of Hop Bitters. They begin to cure from the first dose and keep it up until perfect health and strength is restored. Whoever is afflicted in this way need not suffer, when they can get Hop Bitters. A MAN OF A THOUSAND.

A Conservative Crisis. When death was hourly expected, all remedies having failed, and Dr. H. James was experimenting with the many herbs of Calcutta, he accidentally made a preparation which cured his only child of Consumption. His child is now in this country, and enjoying the best of health. He has proved to the world that Consumption can be positively and permanently cured. The Doctor now gives this Recipe free, only asking that each remit two three cent stamps to pay expenses. This Herb also cures night-sweats, nausea at the stomach, and will break up a fresh cold in twenty-four hours. Address, CRADDOCK & CO., 1032 Race St., Philadelphia, naming this paper.

CELEBRATED

FOR THE CURE OF

Hepatitis, or Liver Complaint,

AND FEVER AND AGUE GENERALLY.

Symptoms of a Diseased Liver.

PAIN in the right side, under the edge of the ribs, increases on pressure; sometimes the pain is in the left side; the patient is rarely able to lie on the left side; sometimes the pain is felt under the shoulder blade, and it frequently extends to the top of the shoulder, and is sometimes mistaken for rheumatism in the arm. The stomach is affected with loss of appetite and sickness; the bowels in general are costive, sometimes alternative with lax; the head is troubled with pain, accompanied with a dull, heavy sensation in the back part. There is generally a considerable loss of memory, accompanied with a painful sensation of having left undone something which ought to have been done. A slight, dry cough is sometimes an attendant. The patient complains of weariness and debility; he is easily startled, his feet are cold or burning, and he complains of a prickly sensation of the skin; his spirits are low; and although he is satisfied that exercise would be beneficial to him, yet he can scarcely summon up fortitude enough to try it. In fact, he distrusts every remedy. Several of the above symptoms attend the disease, but cases have occurred where few of them existed, yet examination of the body, after death, has shown the LIVER to have been extensively deranged.

AGUE AND FEVER.

DR. C. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS, IN CASES OF AGUE AND FEVER, when taken with Quinine, are productive of the most happy results. No better cathartic can be used, preparatory to, or after taking Quinine. We would advise all who are afflicted with this disease to give them a FAIR TRIAL.

For all bilious derangements, and as a simple purgative, they are unequaled.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

The genuine are never sugar coated.

Every box has a red wax seal on the lid, with the impression of C. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS.

The genuine McLANE'S LIVER PILLS bear the signatures of C. McLANE and FLEMING BROS. on the wrappers.

Insist upon having the genuine DR. C. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS, prepared by Fleming Bros., of Pittsburgh, Pa., the market being full of imitations of the name McLane, spelled differently but same pronunciation.

PREVENT YELLOW FEVER!

It has been well proved that prevention is better than cure. A very simple and effective preventative for Yellow Fever and other fevers has been found in BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTERS. They were used during last season in New Orleans very successfully. The common method of using them was to apply them over the stomach, changing them every week. They are one OF THE MOST ACTIVE ANTISEPTICS and seem to destroy the poison. One reason why they are of special value is that they stimulate the digestion, and thus enable the system to overcome the influence of the malarial poison. They are a cheap and almost certain preventative. Ask your physician about them. Benson's Capcine Plasters are a sure preventative and cure for chills and fever if worn as above. Price 25 cents.

COMMENTARIES ON THE OLD TESTAMENT AND PARTS OF IT.

NO. VII.

Rev. L. C. Vass, Newbern, N. C.:

If you do not find these notices too much protracted and tedious you may be willing to have the mention of a few more additional names of successful students of the Old Testament or parts of it.

Marlorat on the Prophecies of Isaiah and on the New Testament has been over three centuries in existence. Marlorat was a cotemporary of Calvin, and reflects his opinions on Scripture. While rather an exposition of the Scriptures, in the Vulgate translation, there is evidence of the author's knowledge and judicious use of the text, in the original languages. In this, one of the earliest monuments of the learning and labors of the Protestants of the 16th century, we find the germs of those views of Scripture truth, which have come to rank as fundamental articles of Christian Faith. Marlorat also wrote on Genesis and Psalms, works which have gone out of print. Those now before us, though the date has been lost from the title page, appear by the type, contracted words, &c., to belong to the era of the middle of the 15th century. There is no evidence available to show that they have ever been reprinted. They are very voluminous, the work on Isaiah having 700 pages folio, and that on the New Testament 1600, and the print is fine and lines close. But doubtless the bulk of the volume has prevented reprinting. Any opportunities of procuring copies ought not to be lost by students, as most probably such volumes could be had at very low prices, and would certainly be valuable acquisitions. For, besides their intrinsic value, these writings afford illustrations of the skill in exposition possessed at that early period of the Reformation, and the rapid advance from mediæval musings about saints, and the metaphysical speculations of schoolmen; thus forming a strong testimony to the superior advantages of the study of the Bible, in the formation and development of a sound and intelligent piety.

Rev. Dr. T. V. Moore, the lamented pastor of the First church, Richmond, Va., and then of the First church, Nashville, published, while in Richmond, a commentary on Zechariah, Haggai and Malachi, the last three of the Minor Prophets. The work reflects great credit on his knowledge and skill as a critical interpreter of the original language of the Old Testament, and is a sound and judicious exposition of some passages of equal interest and difficulty to the student of the inspired Word. Its tone is everywhere evangelical and pious. The circulation of this valuable work, having failed to meet the demands of its merits, is perhaps very much due to the rather condescending and often contemptuous tone of opinions expressed, when any opinion is expressed, by Northern writers respecting the works of Southern authors. In addition to its decided and intrinsic excellence, it is valuable as an example to our pastors, especially the younger, in inciting to like effort. Here is shown what a laborious and successful pastor can effect by judiciously directed study and a wise economy of time. Thus Dr. Moore has not only left a monument to his honor, but also still "being dead yet speaketh" words of encouragement to his younger brethren, and imperts them "go and do likewise."

Murphy on Genesis, Exodus and Leviticus. This contribution to the careful study of the Old Testament Scriptures, in the original language, is introduced to us by Rev. Dr. Josiah P. Thompson. He informs us that Dr. Murphy was elected Professor of Hebrew, &c., in Belfast (Irish Presbyterian) "Assembly's College Belfast in 1847." This "college" corresponds to our Theological Seminary. The "Queen's College" adjacent is a purely literary institution, and furnishes large numbers of students to the "Assembly's College" every year.

Dr. Murphy has, in these works, given clear evidence that a knowledge of the Hebrew language is of real practical value to the interpreter of Scripture. He addresses himself, and that with eminent success, to the work of refuting the objections of those who, sympathizing rather with the interpretations of scientific men, depreciate, if they do not fully impeach, the credibility and hence the inspiration of Moses. Dr. M. does not flinch from giving a decided idea of the Scriptural account of the creation, as that which we are bound to receive as true and incontrovertible. For all events, since God has created a world and written a book, it is fair to believe that the records deduced from the "work" will coincide with the records written in the "book."

At this time, as an eminent Christian scholar in science has said (quoting for substance), "The classifications of works is not yet sufficiently accurate and full, to give us the data of a satisfactory scheme of interpreting the 'work.'" But the "book" can be interpreted. While the "work" may not be fully apprehended the "book" may be rightly interpreted. Enough confidence in what has been deduced from the "work" and the interpretation of the "book" as set forth by our author, exist to justify us in believing there is no real contradiction, but, on the other hand, a substantial agreement in both of these venerable authorities.

Dr. M.'s views of the extent of the flood are perhaps objectionable and inconsistent with his positions on cognate subjects. But he is neither an ultraist nor a skeptic. On the contrary, his (otherwise known) keen and conclusive replies to the skeptical cavilings of Bishop (!) Colenzo fully vindicate him from the bad suspicion of unsoundness. It is exceedingly desirable that the libraries of our ministers should be supplied with works of this character, and if any of our intelligent elders and laymen are incautiously misled by the speculations of the skeptical scientific men they ought, before forming settled opinions, take the trouble to read the works of such writers as Murphy and Alford. Such writers, by the most careful critical investigations, have been led to sustain the views which have been learned from hosts of good and wise men who have, with simple faith in God's word, been led to really sounder opinions of the work of creation than science has led its votaries to adopt. This digression from the avowed and main purpose of these notices of commentaries is not altogether aside from their scope, and may, otherwise, commend itself to the reader.

Schultens' learned work on the Book of Job and that of Dr. Good are worthy of the student's attention, the first for the contributions made to the interpretation of this venerable poem, by his knowledge of the Arabic, and the second for the general culture evinced by the translation of the author's language into English, of a very pleasing style of sentiment and expression.

Rosenmuller, E. F. C., published, during the closing years of the last and early years of this century, a critical exposition of the Pentateuch and Joshua, Job, Psalms and the the larger and minor Prophets. The work has passed through several editions, and finally appeared, about fifty years since, in a compendium or abridged form. It still holds a place of high repute for its scholarship and general correctness, though ranked rather as belonging to the class of rationalistic writings—far less, however, than the work of his father on the New Testament. It is remarkable for the extensive collation of parallel and illustrative passages, and had the application of them been more governed by other canons of interpretation besides that of usage, the work would have been more unexceptionable. As it is the material thus afforded is of permanent value, and the present lower prices render the acquisition of the work more easy to the student, who will find the compendium (edition of 1828-36) sufficient for his purposes.

Yours truly, B. M. SMITH.

For the N. C. Presbyterian.

THE MOUNTAIN LAKE.

Much has been written and said of late about the magnificient mountain scenery of the Old North State—unrivaled in sublimity and grandeur by any east of the Rocky mountains. I have heard it said since I have been in Virginia that "The Land of the Sky," by Christian Reid, had done more to bring the mountains of North Carolina into public notice and draw visitors than all the advertisements put together.

But while I cheerfully grant the palm to North Carolina, you will permit me, a North Carolinian, to enter a noble rivalry for a most lovely spot in a sister State. In some respects this spot is unrivalled in any country or any clime. Who ever heard of a large lake on the top of a mountain? Yet this is literally true here. It is situated in Giles county, Va., about twenty-five miles from Christiansburg, on the A. M. & O. R. R., from which station a daily stage runs during the summer season. The ascent to the lake from the foot of the mountain is about four miles.

Besides the lake there is a most rare combination of most rare scenery in this vicinity, which, all taken together, combine to make it one of the most attractive summer resorts for pleasure seekers and true lovers of natnre in this whole country.

Time and space will permit me to call attention to only the most prominent points in this grand galaxy of natnre.

THE LAKE ITSELF.

One of the most interesting facts about this Lake is its recent origin. Old settlers living in that vicinity thirty-five years ago could remember when no lake was there. It was then a basin-shaped depression surrounded on all sides by mountains. In this basin were various springs whose waters ran down to the lower end of the basin and disappeared in the crevices between the craggy rocks that now bound that part of the lake. As water was very scarce in that vicinity, this basin became a well known watering place for cattle and horses which were grazed on the fertile mountain sides around. For this reason farmers chose this spot to salt their stock. By and by, the trampling of stock which gathered here in numbers for water and salt, and to fight the flies in the heat of summer, filled up the crevices through which the water made its exit, and the lake began to form. Year after year it added to its waters from its own bosom. Higher and higher the waters rose on the sides of the basin, until the tops of the highest trees were left far beneath its surface. Wider and wider it stretched its waters, patiently, steadily, imperceptibly enlarging its borders, till it was three-quarters of a mile in length and about a quarter of a mile at its widest place, and about three miles in circumference, following the meanderings of the bank. Some say it was twenty, others forty years, in filling up. It runs over the basin at the north end. Had the basin been a few feet lower on the southern end, it would have flown over there, watering a very fertile tract of land, which would increase its value immensely. One farmer, I was told, offered a thousand dollars for the privilege of cutting a ditch and letting it out on the south instead of the north end, but was denied.

This body of water was originally called "The Salt Pond," from the circumstance mentioned above, of salting the stock there during the grazing season. But the energetic yankees who now own it gave it the more refined name of "The Mountain Lake." You must be very careful, when you go there, not to say "Salt Pond;" O no! that is too vulgar: although it is the name by which it is commonly known in the surrounding country. You would at once be put down as a rustic or barbarian, who had no sense of the beautiful nor refinement of taste. But you must say "Mountain Lake," which after all is more appropriate as well as more beautiful and refined.

As you sail over the bosom of this placid lake and look down into the waters, the tops of the trees may be seen below you, still standing as they grew before they were consigned to a watery grave. All the trees and snags which were in the way of boat riding have been taken away.

BALD KNOB.

This knob is about three-quarters of a mile from the lake. It is reached by a very good mountain road, leading to the very top. It is called "Bald," I suppose, because it is bald. The oak trees up there do not grow more than two or three feet high. The whole top is covered with a thick shrubbery of this kind; but it is too cold and windy for large timber, though the soil is rich to the very top. Our party was up there about noon on the 8th of September, and it was so cold and the wind blew so hard we had to seek shelter behind some bushes and rocks, and even then it was disagreeably cold.

The mountain scenery from this knob is superb. Few if any better in the State. Five States can be seen—North Carolina, West Virginia, Tennessee, Kentucky and Virginia. You seem to stand in the middle of the world, while in every direction mountain range after mountain range rises, one above another, as far as the eye can reach. Far in the distance, towering above all the rest, may be seen Mt. Mitchel, in North Carolina. My heart leaped for joy even at the sight of the land of my childhood. On the west, New River is seen winding its way on to the Father of Waters. As the eye scans the rugged country toward the Grand Father, near which this rises, and sees nothing but mountain after mountain, interspersed, intermingled and interlocked in every conceivable direction and position, it would seem impossible that a river could make its way over or through so many mountains of difficulties. But God opened it a way through them all and led it safely on beyond mountains and cliffs and crags, where it mingles its waters with the calm, peaceful waters of the still-flowing Mississippi. So when I look forward in the future and see mountain after mountain rise to intercept my onward march to holiness, happiness and heaven, faith grows strong, for the God who provided the river its way has marked out my pathway, and will not suffer any mountain to interpose till my soul, triumphant over every obstacle, sinks forever in the calm, peaceful ocean of eternal happiness and glory.

I did not see a sunset from this knob, but heard them described as being "like the gate of heaven." I don't know what that is like; but I do know the sunrise that I saw was beautiful, grand, glorious, sublime beyond description. The eastern horizen was girded by a belt of yellowish cloud. The north wind was carrying on its wings light, flitting clouds. To the south a heavy fog had settled in the valleys, resembling a sea of white-waved, wool-sifted down, like freshly ginned cotton, leaving the tops of the mountains sticking out like so many islands. The air was clear and the profile of the mountains even in the distance was clearly marked out. The hills and valleys in every direction were dotted with fields and houses and forests, with here and there a country village, calmly sleeping in the stillness of the early dawn. The gates of day had already been thrown open in the east, and Aurora was pouring floods of golden lights through her portals, painting the clouds with colors of many a varied hue. Then the king of day himself stepped through and raised his shining head above the mountain tops. No artist could paint, no pen describe the scene that then presented itself. I wish the whole world could have witnessed the grand panorama of grandeur and sublimity which was then unfolded to the observation of a solitary beholder. The clouds seemed to be hastening up to see and pay their homage; and as they received their golden colors from the penciling of his beams, they passed on rejoicing, laden with glory. Now his glowing disk is partially obscured—now he bursts through and shows his burning face—lighting up all that sea of wool far in the distance with tints of delicate pink. The scene was constantly changing, like the turning of a kaleidoscope, each one vieing with the others and proclaiming that "the Hand that made me was divine."

While I stood there, on that temple not made with hands, all alone among the clouds, beholding the glorious panorama which the mighty hand of God had spread out and adorned, I could but fall down and worship and adore, exclaiming with the Psalmist, "O Lord, how manifold are thy works! in wisdom hast thou made them all; the earth is full of thy riches."

THE CASCADE.

When you visit "The Mountain Lake" be sure and go to the cascade. You will never regret it. The cascade is a waterfall on Little Stony Creek, about six miles from the lake. One prong of the creek runs from the lake. A very good grade road runs from the lake to within three quarters of a mile of the cascade. The rest of the journey is made on foot down the creek; but the pedestrian is well paid for his trouble by the wild and romantic scenes through which his path leads him. Tall spruce pines like so many masts, pointing heavenward, stud the banks; while the laurel and other evergreens overhang the crags and cliffs and shoals over which the murmuring waters go, leaping, skipping, dancing, foaming along, making sweet music for the soul.

But you are ready to go into raptures over the wild grandeur of the scene which bursts upon you at the cascade. You are above it as you approach, and see a sheet of water about ten feet broad from over a precipice about forty feet perpendicular, then down a very steep shoal fifty feet farther, where it sinks into the placid waters below. At the bottom of the cascade you stand, as it were, in a large amphitheatre or rather horse-shoe-shaped cavity, some two hundred feet in diameter, bounded by a high rock wall of natural masonry one hundred and fifty, or one hundred and seventy-five feet high; one side perpendicular to the bottom, the other overhanging, and at the bottom filled with earth at a steep angle. The floor of this amphitheatre of nature is solid rock. The water pours over at the toe of the horse-shoe, while the wall on each side is elevated considerably above the toe. A beautiful miniature rainbow was seen playing in the mist of the falling water. The rock over which the water pours is overhanging, and the visitor may walk between the falling sheet of water and the wall without getting the least wet. The water is several feet in front of him. To stand underneath this "sheltering rock" fifty or sixty feet above the bottom of the precipice, and see the sparkling waters falling between you and the sun is unspeakably grand. The sun never shines at the bottom of this precipice except an hour or two in the middle of the day, as he peers in with his golden beams between the heels of the horse-shoe.

BARNEY'S WALL.

There is still another point in this grand galaxy of natural scenery which must not be omitted: It is called "Barney's Wall." I did not have time to visit this place; but those who have visited it say it is still grander than the cascade, on account of its deep gorges, craggy outlines and its long and lofty walls. The wall is represented as about a half mile in length and one thousand feet high, five hundred to eight hundred of the perpendicular. It is situated about a half mile from the cascade.

Many other points too numerous to mention in this vicinity, claim the attention and onlist the interest of the lovers of nature. Taken all in all I think it is one of the rarest combinations of natural scenery found anywhere.

ACCOMMODATIONS AND IMPROVEMENTS.

All these places and the whole country around, including 53,000 acres of land, are owned by the wife and son of General Haupt, of Philadelphia. Mrs. Haupt spends the summer there and has the management of her hands. They have a large, comfortable hotel, and splendid fare; a store, a chapel, and various buildings for the accommodation of visitors. These buildings are all within a few rods of the lake. They have a little harbor in the edge of the lake, in which are moored a number of nice boats for pleasure riding on the lake. My wife and I had a delightful sail in the morning before breakfast, which gave us a keen relish for "oat meal mush, orris stew, (stewed beef), mutton chops, beef steak," &c., &c., which was served for us bountifully and in good style.

Mrs. Haupt is an excellent Christian lady, belonging to the Lutheran church. She feels that she is divinely sent to that place to elevate and christianize the poor people who live on the sides of the mountains and in the valleys around, and she is doing a good work. She has Sunday schools and prayer meetings among them, which she conducts herself. She hires them, buys berries and fruits from them, even if she does not need them and has to throw them away; but she will not give them anything for nothing. She helps them by enabling and requiring them to help themselves.

There is one peculiarity I must not omit—a strange mixing of the religions with the worldly. Every night after supper the bell rings for prayers in the chapel. Mrs. Haupt leads in prayer herself if there is no minister present to do it. After prayers they repair to the parlor, the piano is raised, the music begins, and all parties (who wish) join in the giddy dance. And it is none of your "square" dancing either; but the "round," at least I suppose it is, judging from the position of the left arm of the gentleman, for it is almost around. She does not believe there is any harm in dancing. W. B. A.

"HE LEADETH ME."

In that far-off beautiful land to which we go, we shall remember this: Every ravine passed, every perilous passage crossed, we shall appreciate, as we cannot do now, the glorious hand of our God and Saviour which upheld and guided us step by step. And oh, what results where we least expected them!

A young girl is to unite with the church this very Sabbath morning. She has a dear brother who has strayed somewhat from the fold, has become proud in the strength of his manhood, and will fain take his own course, despite the prayers and solicitude of his tender, loving mother.

This morning Angeline feels that she must speak to that brother, and invite him to be present at her own consecration. How shall she approach him? She fears a positive rebuff. She starts to his room; her heart fails her, and she returns. Again she makes the effort, and again she trembles and retires. Still the burden is laid upon her and she dares not go to the house of God with the duty unfulfilled.

The third time she resolves to go in, at whatever cost, and appears in his presence with the simple sisterly plea, "William, I am going to unite with the church this morning, will you not be present?"

That brother looked with some surprise, but with no rebuff or frown, he answered "I will." Judge of the maiden's relief; of her inward joy! Yet such are often the ways of God. Though that brother was faithful to his promise, years went on ere the seed sown that morning sprang up, and those were years of more wandering.

But there came a time when God spoke to him. The Holy Spirit touched his heart. The rock was smitten, and the waters flowed. Now all the mother's prayers and tears are remembered, though she herself had long since died. Now the sister is summoned to his presence, and with joy William goes back to the time of that seed-sowing. Nothing ever touched him like that. Who can doubt the care, the power of the Holy Ghost? "He leadeth me."—Am. Messenger.

INWARD RESOURCES.

Of all men the minister most needs inward resources. Much of his work is voluntary. There are no outward rules and forms to exact it. The mechanic and the tradesman are helped on by the pressure of outside affairs, the lawyer by his cases in court. The best part of the minister is done without any of these inspirations. He must be an inspiration to himself, or rather he needs to seek an inspiration from above. The soul of a good pastor will be a law unto itself, will see the needs of the cause of Christ and feel a burden to relieve them. In him the love of Christ takes the place of more material and visible aids in other callings; his inward yearnings to do good in extending the cause of Christ will lead him out in steady and effectual endeavor to bless men and also to bring them to the Cross.—Zion's Herald.

YEARNING.

In us, O Christ, Thy mind be wrought,
Thy spirit in us dwell.
By Thee, the perfect teacher, taught,
Our will to Thine submissive brought,
Who doeth all things well.

With thee, O Christ, we walk the deep:
Afflicted, tempest tossed;
With Thee, our loving vigils keep,
Watching with those who sweetly sleep,
Departed, but not lost.

Thy mind, O Christ, to us reveal,
Thy perfect will make known;
For those whose wounds we fail to heal,
May we a Christ-like pity feel,
And make their griefs our own

Thy paths, O Christ, are perfect peace.
Thy thoughts are full of love,
From bonds of sin our souls release,
And bid the power of passion cease,
And all our guilt remove. —Advance.

THE AFGHANS.

Before the beginning of the present century little was known about Afghanistan and its inhabitants. The country was known to be rugged and mountainous, and the people hardy and warlike, professing the Mohammedan faith. In 1799, when Sir John Shore was Governor-General of India, no little alarm was caused at Calcutta, by a rumor that the King of Cabul, with an army of Afghans, was about to invade India, and deliver the "faithful sons of Islam" from the yoke of the "infidels." Russia was not heard of in these days as a disturbing influence, but suspicions of French intrigue, through emissaries at the court of Teheran, were mixed with this earliest Afghan scare. It was resolved by the Court of Directors to organize a Mission in order to establish friendly relations with the ruler of Kabul, and to obtain some accurate knowledge of the Afghan country. It was not till October, 1808, that this embassy left Delhi, under the guidance of Hon. Mountstuart Elphinstone. His "Account of the Kingdom of Kabul and its Dependencies," published in 1815, was the first, and is still in many respects the best, of the many volumes that have issued from the press on these regions. Elphinstone Sahib recrossed the Indus in June, 1809, after having established friendly relations with the Afghans, and his embassy was long remembered with wonder and respect. "It would have been well if succeeding misunderstandings and disasters had never occurred to obviate the moral effect and the favorable impression created on that occasion."

The national appellation of the people of Afghanistan is either Afghan, Pathan, Pashtun, or Puktun. In India they are generally called Rohillah (or highlanders).

The language of the Afghans is Pashto or Pukhto; Pashto is the Sanscrit formation, with a large admixture of Persian and Arabic words. The character is Arabic, with the addition of five letters. It is spoken by the people of the Peshawar valley, who are chiefly Afghans, and in certain parts of the Derajat, and by the inhabitants of the city of Kabul.

The only portion of Afghanistan now in the possession of the British is the Peshawar valley, which lies between the Khyber Pass and the river Indus, with a portion of the Kohat Derajat and districts. This territory came into possession of the British Government after the second Sikh war in 1849. The Peshawar district is separated from the Kohat and Derajat districts by a chain of mountains inhabited by independent Afghan tribes. It is the most northerly of the British Trans-Indus territory, and contains an area of 2,400 square miles, and is divided through its whole extent by the Kabul river (the ancient Cophes), which falls into the Indus immediately above Attock. The population of the whole district is estimated at 524,000. Peshawar is the capital of the district which bears its name, and is the only town of importance within its boundaries. It contains a population of about 60,000, a mixed race of Afghans, Sikhs and Hindus. The present city was built by the celebrated Mogul Emperor Akbar, who is said to have given it its present name, signifying an "advanced out-post."

The city of Peshawar is not only a great commercial centre, situated as it is at the gate of Central Asia, but it is regarded as an important military frontier station. The climate has an unhealthy reputation, and little has been done to secure good water supply or to attend to sanitary arrangements.

The hospitality of the Afghans is proverbial. Each section of the village has its Hujrah, or guest-chamber, and every chief of consequence keeps one. These are supplied with beds, quilts and pillows, and the wayfaring traveler can here claim protection for the night, with the usual meals. The laws of hospitality, however, merely extend to the village boundary, and within these limits they are seldom violated; but beyond, the unprotected traveler may be plundered and robbed by the very people who but a few minutes before gave him the salutations of peace.

The salutations of the Afghans are very peculiar, and exhibit very strikingly the hospitable and social character of the people. When a superior meets a man of inferior rank to himself he will, as he passes, say, "May you never be tired," which ought to call forth the rejoinder, "May you never grow poor." As soon as a stranger arrives at a village guest-house it is his duty to give the usual Mohammedan salaam, "The peace of God be with you," which will receive the hearty response of every villager seated there, repeated several times over: "May you ever come! May you ever come!" And where he again proceeds on his journey he will leave with the usual blessing, "To the protection of God we commit you."

The Afghans are a "religious people," God-worshippers, but not God-fearers. Their bigotry and fanaticism are very much on the surface. Depth of religious feeling is not common. The village chief is always ready and willing to entrust his soul's interest to his mullah or priest, and if he is pretty regular in his devotions and in the payment of the tithe, and orthodox in his profession of faith, he can die in the odour of sanctity with the veriest minimum of piety.

Almost inseparable from the guest-house is the mosque; indeed the mosques and Hujrahs are the only public institutions of an ordinary Afghan village. Every mosque is presided over by an Iman or Priest, who is supported by its endowments, and the tithes, or Zakat. In addition to the Iman there is often a Moulvie, or learned divine, whose duty it is to instruct the students, these students being supported by the contributions of the people. In some villages there are Government schools, but they are always regarded by the people as rival institutions to the mosque, and are therefore not popular with the more religious Mohammendans, who only consider that true education which treats of religion. The subjects generally taught in schools connected with the mosques are the Koran, the traditions, and works on Muslim Theology in Arabic; the Gulistan, the story of Yusef-o-Zulekha and other poems in Persian; and perhaps one or two easy Pashto books.—Canada Presbyterian.

WHERE WOMAN FINDS CHRIST.

Man hunts after God with his understanding, and fails to find him; science searches after Him with its lenses, and its face seems like a blind man trying to help his sight by using a glass eye; logic tries to soar toward God, and waves its wooden crutches in mimicry to witness; woman sees Him, feels Him within, discerns Him above, sees Him in Christ; she who was last at the cross and the first at the sepulcher, has seen the Lord ever since in His sympathy and in His sovereignty, in His power and in His wondrous parable; she feels Him in the deepest experience of her heart, and then she sees Him in all the providential history of the world, in all the creation round about, from the golden spots on the butterfly's wing to the triple suns above. The universe to her is full of God, and that thought of God, that revelation of God, it is hers to make to the world. —Rev. Dr. Storrs.

KINDNESS.

Who ever did a real kindness for another without feeling a warm glow of satisfaction creep into some shady corner of the heart, and fill it with sweetness and peace? It is like tying a knot of violets and mignonette into the button hole, just where their perfume may rise deliciously to our sense all day. And what a pleasure it will be, when the present trouble is over, to remember that, even in the darkest days, we found time and inclination to give other persons some portion of that tenderness, or practical helpfulness, which was the overflow of that generous spirit, which finally bore us through it all to a happy and peaceful ending. "Rejoice with them that do rejoice, and weep with them that weep."

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

FOREIGN.

Gleaned from exchanges:

It is a notable fact that the great proportion of honors at the recent Paris exposition were carried off by Protestant artistes and artisans.

All Methodist work among the soldiers in Paris is for the present suspended. A visit from the Prefect of Police to the minister has rendered this course imperative. The suspension is supposed to be the result of some misunderstanding of Methodist work.

In connection with the French Wesleyan Conference special efforts are being put forth to establish schools in which English girls may have a first class education with all the advantages of home life. Such an institution has been established at Nimes, and already promises to do well. The head of the school is Pasteur M. Lelievre.

The Welsh Calvinistic Methodists' Conference at Protheli have approved of the Sunday Closing Bill for Wales, and condemned the raising of money for church purposes by means of lotteries and bazaars. The churches were exhorted to repentance and prayer, in view of hard times and bad harvest prospects.

In the New Testament Revision Committee it was proposed to get rid of the word "penny," as giving a wrong idea of the Roman denarius, and to read, "He gave every man a denary." But to this a witty dean objected that there might be confusion with a deanery, which poor and unlearned persons must not suppose can be got so easily.

A Christian church has lately been built on a hill near Sabra, India, by native Christian masons, carpenters and other artisans, and these workmen were originally thieves by profession. In consequence of having become Christians they have not only forsaken their evil ways, but learned their various trades. This good work is mainly the fruit of Mr. Namyan Sheshadri's labors.

After the publication of the last Encyclical Letter, which only seemed to leave open to the Jesuits revolt or complete submission to Leo XIII., a secret meeting of the order was held at Fiesole, the result of which is a memorial, signed by the General and the provincial heads of the Order, declaring themselves submissive to and entirely at the disposition of the Pope. The sincerity of this move is considerably questioned at the Vatican.

The Rev. Parr Harvey, the rector of Hornsey, was, on Saturday night at the rectory, presented with a check for £1,000. Mrs. Harvey at the same time received a diamond ring. Mr. Harvey has been rector of Hornsey for fifty years, and the testimonial was subscribed to by Nonconformists as well as Churchmen. During Mr. Harvey's incumbency a rectory and the body of the church have been built, six new churches erected, and the seventh is now in course of erection.

Messrs. Johnson and Richardson, colored students of Mr. Spurgeon's college, who sailed from England last September, as missionaries to Bakunda, on the west coast of Africa, have gained already a strong foothold among the people. Through the influence of the king all the boys in the village of 1,000 have been sent to their school. When very sick, last April, the king made his will, commending his youngest son to the care of the missionaries, and commanding his subjects to obey them and protect them and their wives.

The church wardens of a certain church being disgusted with the penuriousness of a rich peer who, since the collection began to be taken up in a bag instead of a plate, contributed nothing but coppers, resolved to shame him into liberality. They cut a slit into the bottom of the bag and passed it first to his lordship, whose bronze penny fell with a resounding clash to the floor, plain to be seen of all men. Next day his lordship took all his prayer-books and cushions home, and deserted the church for good and all.

A strong delegation of English Jews have just been appointed to take part in an "international convention" of the Children of Israel, which is to be held at Paris early next month. Amongst the list of English deputies are—Baron Henry de Worms; Sir George Jessel, the Master of the Rolls; Sir Baron H. Ellis, K. C. S. I.; Sir Julian Goldsmid, Bart., M. P.; Mr. Serjeant Simon, M. P.; Baron de Stein; Mr. Reuben de Sasson, and other well-known and wealthy Jews. The condition of the oppressed Jews in Russia, Roumania and Bulgaria is the chief theme to be brought before the convention.

The missionaries of the American Board in Japan have established a new mission in Okayama, a city of 35,000 inhabitants. Seventy-five natives attended the first service. The spread of Christianity in Japan during the last seven years has been remarkable. There are now 43 Protestant churches in that country, with a membership of 1,500. There are 54 Sunday schools, with 2,000 scholars; 3 theological schools, with 175 students; 81 missionaries, 93 native assistant preachers, 10 native pastors, and 150 preaching places. In addition to the distinctively religious work, a large number of secular schools are carried on by Christian teachers.

On Sabbath, at the different masses in all the Roman Catholic churches and chapels of the archdiocese of Westminster, the officiating priest read a communication which had recently been received from Rome, and was the reply of his Holiness Pope Leo XIII. to a petition presented to him on behalf of the Catholics of England and Scotland by lady Marcia Herries of Terregles, Dumfriesshire. Her ladyship, in her appeal to the Holy Father, called to mind that devotion to the Blessed Virgin Mary had greatly diminished in fervor in both Scotland and England since the days of the Protestant Reformation; but, at the same time, being desirous that it should revive as much as possible in the hearts of the faithful, she considered that the frequent recital of the Litany of the Blessed Virgin would be very conducive to that end. In order, however, that the faithful of these islands might be more incited to a frequent and pious practice of this salutary devotion, the petitioner earnestly entreated that his Holiness would deign to bestow the apostolic benediction, and, moreover, grant an indulgence on each Saturday and on the feast days of the Blessed Virgin Mary to all who should devoutly recite or sing the prayer named in each church and chapel of the several archdioceses and dioceses of the Catholic church in Scotland and England. Popo Leo, in his reply, says: "Earnestly desiring that the devotion to the Blessed Virgin Mary should everywhere flourish, we grant one apostolic benediction and an indulgence of seven years to the faithful of England and Scotland according to the petition. Given at the Vatican, Rome, on the 6th day of May, 1879."

Twenty thousand one hundred and seventy-five dollars toward the twenty-five thousand necessary to be raised in order to re-build the Baptist church at North Adams, Mass., has been secured.

WILMINGTON, N. C.:

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 24, 1879.

SHALL WE CHANGE?

The times have changed, we are told, and we must change with them. We are told that our ideas on religion must be advanced to conform to the theories and the speculations of those who have made a study of natural science, those who, discarding the truths of revelation, look to unaided reason alone in the light of nature, for what they are to believe concerning God. They would tell us that prayer is idle breath; that Bible history is an allegory, and all that is written of apostles and prophets is not even a well told tale; that "life originated by the agency of atomic force," or that "life is the product of a certain disposition of material molecules having for its foundation a gelatinous mass." According to these we are evolved from the apes, and by a similar process of evolution we shall be evolved into—what? O, what? Can the light of nature do no more for us than this? How pleasant to turn from all this to the plain Word of God: "God created man in his own image, in the image of God created He him; male and female, created He them." "All things were made by Him, and without Him was not anything made that was made." "The Spirit of God hath made me, and the breath of the Almighty hath given me life."

Others would test the Word of God by the wisdom of man, receiving what they understand, and rejecting what they cannot compass, or perverting all to their preconceived notions of justice or propriety. From the fool who hath said in his heart, "No God," to the emissary of the devil who repeats those words which lured a world to ruin, "Ye shall not surely die," in one thing they are agreed: to turn the truth of God into a lie. "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness." "Yea, let God be true, and every man a liar."

Faith, itself a direct gift from God, imparted by the Holy Spirit, is not contrary to reason, but in itself the highest exercise of it. It does not forbid the investigations of science but it refuses to adopt the vain imaginings and the wild speculations of human reason as against the revelation of God. And what has been proved by those who array science against revelation? Nothing but what may be disproved to-morrow. Natural science is progressive and is ever changing. Darwin thinks his theories are correct, but awaits further light; at best they are theories, not capable of demonstration. Neither are scientists agreed among themselves; a conclusion reached by one is rejected by another. And when they intrude upon the domain of theology they are without chart or compass. Rejecting that light in which they might see light, they flounder on into impenetrable darkness.

It is no new thing for the students of science to shout their triumph over revelation, but as time advances facts are brought to light which confirm the teachings of Scripture. There was a time when infidelity claimed that explorations in Bible lands proved that cities spoken of never existed, and that events alluded to in Scripture were disproved by archaeological researches. Now all that is exploded, the later researches of Layard and Smith are the strongest confirmation of Holy Writ. So will it ever be—the Word of God is true from the beginning.

Yes, the times have changed, knowledge is increased, learning has advanced, but man has not changed. He still loves darkness rather than light; he still dislikes to retain God in his knowledge; he still loves evil more than good; and lying rather than to speak righteousness. And God has not changed. He is the infinite, eternal, unchangeable Jehovah, whose promises are sure, and whose word is immutable. The assaults of infidels and atheists upon the truth of God, can make no inroads upon the faith of those who receive that truth into honest hearts. Everyone who is taught of the Spirit knows in whom he has believed. He who does the will of God knows of the doctrine that it is of God. The personal experience of every child of God testifies unerringly that His testimonies are sure, and His faithfulness to all generations.

LITERARY TITLES.

We confess that we have not imbibed the spirit of those who declaim unsparingly against the titles conferred by colleges. That their bestowal sometimes does no credit to the judgment of the institutions by which they are dispensed is true, but our Southern colleges, especially those of high reputation, have not in the main, we think, erred seriously in this direction. Some statements made by the Christian Union dispose us to think that the time has come when, for the sake of those deservedly holding these titles, some plan should be devised to direct and restrain the bestowment of them.

The journal referred to states that three hundred colleges and universities in the United States confer degrees or assume the right to confer them. All England, with a population of twenty-three million, has only four universities which can confer degrees; all France, with a population of thirty-six million, only fifteen, and these are branches of one institution; all Germany, with a population of forty-two million, only twenty-two; while the single State of Ohio, with a population of three million, has thirty-seven degree-bestowing institutions. It is no uncommon thing for men to make a personal application for the title, with recommendations of their fitness to receive it signed by their fellow-townsmen, and when the application comes from a man of some local influence to an impecunious college the temptation is rarely resisted. In the Social Science Congress, held during the last week at Saratoga, two plans were proposed to remedy, or at least to reduce, this abuse. President Barnard, of Columbia College, proposed that the United States adopt the European plan, according to which the power to confer degrees is confined to a single body, or a few bodies, especially empowered by the government for that purpose. He also proposed that the State of New York set an example to other States of the Union by confining the power of granting degrees to the Board of Regents, who should appoint a board of examiners by whom all candidates should be first examined. President Gilman, of Johns Hopkins University, proposed to reach the same result by a board of examiners appointed and paid by the voluntary co-operation of the various institutions of learning in the country.

The Christian Union thinks that a better reform would be to dispense with all merely honorary titles entirely: that is, with all which do not in themselves indicate an office or profession. The habit of conferring titles, decorations, knighthoods, etc., survives in this country only in honorary degrees. If the custom is worth maintaining at all, the European method is more consistent than ours; the power of conferring them should be confined to government, and the degrees themselves should not be confined to ministers and literary men.

We have not given that thought to the subject which would justify a pronounced opinion, as to the proper plan to be pursued, but we should be very chary of bestowing any honorary title upon one who should seek it in the way indicated above. Modest merit would be at a fearful disadvantage where the ordeal of an examination had to be submitted to. But, above all, we would not have the Government in charge of the matter, for in no great while the degrees conferred would be based on services to the party. The titles referred to are D. D., LL. D., Ph. D., &c. Why the Government should confer the title of Doctor of Divinity, or Doctor of Philosophy we cannot comprehend. There are those who urge the entire abolition of all titles to ministers of the Gospel, and some may regard the titles beyond that of Reverend as opposed to the principle of the parity of the ministry. If we believed that any Presbyterian of average sense, could regard the title of Doctor of Divinity as assigning to any minister of the Gospel a position above his brethren, we should heartily advocate its entire abolition.

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

The Alumni of Union Theological Seminary are earnestly desired by Rev. Dr. B. M. Smith to furnish him information in reference to their ordination and work. He is preparing a general catalogue of Union Seminary. The matter is important. Address Dr. Smith, at Hampden-Sidney College, Prince Edward county, Va.

The managers of the Annual Fair of the Egg Harbor City Agricultural Society throw down the gauntlet to those who contend for observance of the laws of the Sabbath, and they defy all righteous public opinion. They opened the Fair on the Sabbath, and the Camden & Atlantic Railroad ran its excursion trains to the grounds on that day. On the whole perhaps it is best that the Sabbath violators should plainly show that they do not intend to stop short of abolishing the Sabbath.

The Ceylon Times furnishes the following: The cost of the Cape War will not be less than ten millions sterling; setting aside all exaggerated reports about the slaughter amongst the enemy's ranks, it is pretty certain that, including the last thousand at Ulundi, we have not disposed of more than five thousand of them; what does that total give us as the cost of each Zulu? We make it to be £2,000 a head, and this sets us to thinking.

How little occasion there would be for such wars if $10,000 were expended in bringing each one of these heathen to Christ.

We were particularly struck with the following in the Richmond Christian Advocate. Substitute Presbyterianism for Methodism and it expresses what have been our thoughts and feelings:

Over and over have you seen the statement from revivals: "Many of the converts were heads of families."

How wise to give these "heads of families" the religious journal of their church! Is there anything better to insure their growing off well in religion and Methodism?

We look and wonder that no list, small or large, comes from the church where "many of them were heads of families."

We find this going the rounds and "make a note on't" for the benefit of our little readers and their mothers: "A writer in the Evangelist has called attention to a small but very common error which older people as well as children make in repeating the familiar little prayer, 'And now I lay me down to sleep.' Probably there are few persons who do not use the definite article 'the' before the word 'Lord' in the second and fourth lines. By so doing they simply make an affirmation and not an invocation. The writer with very good reason holds that the prayer should be given as follows:

"And now I lay me down to sleep,
I pray Thee, Lord, my soul to keep;
If I should die before I wake,
I pray Thee, Lord, my soul to take."

The United Presbyterian points out the "true inwardness" of the blatant infidel, Ingersoll, to what he styles ecclesiasticism in the White House. How much selfishness has to do with actions, whether for good or ill:

"Ingersoll, it will be remembered, was an aspirant to the Berlin Mission after the election of President Hayes. In deference to the Christian sentiment of the land, and earnest remonstrances of ministers and members of churches, the President declined to make such appointment. That was the odious "ecclesiasticism" that fired the heart of Ingersoll, and has sent him over the land raging against religion ever since.

The Presbyterian notes the following:

"We have reached it at last—the 'Final Theology,' we mean. It is in the shape of a book by Rev. Leicester A. Sawyer, who thirty years ago published a translation of the New Testament, in which he proposed a number of amendments to the common version, such as 'whitewashed tombs' for whited sepulchres; 'Chief Guide and Perfecter' for Author and Finisher, &c. What he proposes as the 'Final Theology may be learned from a few sentences. Here are some specimens: 'The religion of Jesus was saved from being completely wrecked and lost after his death, not by Peter and his colleagues at Jerusalem, but in spite of them, by the Syrian and Egyptian congregations * * * Paul's scheme is still adhered to by the Catholic churches, and by all evangelical Protestants, leaving the far more sublime and effective scheme of Jesus to be introduced and brought anew to the test of experiment, after eighteen hundred years of neglect.' That will do.

The Religious Herald makes a good point in wanting the friends of Rev. John A. Doll, who it is said will run for the Virginia Legislature, to hold him back till it can reproach his ordination sermon, "I am doing a great work, and therefore I cannot come down." On the same general subject the Christian at Work has this:

"Rev. I. S. Kalloch has been elected Mayor of San Francisco. Well, we hope he will make a better Mayor than he has a minister. Imagine St. Paul running for the office of Ædile, and leaving an Epistle to the Corinthians unfinished, attend a public meeting in Rome, mount the platform, and denounce the parentage of his competitor! But St. Paul was of different stuff. Preaching was his life. "This one thing I do"—and he did it."

We must not be understood as comparing the persons referred to in either case.

The following concerning Evangelization in France" is a summary prepared by the Christian Union, and could not be improved by paraphrase:

Dr. Somerville's evangelistic meetings in France continue to be very successful. At St. Servan the crowds were so great that people had to be turned away. The authorities of the various towns are apparently in sympathy with the movements and render every assistance in their power, and this in spite of the influence which the priests bring to bear upon them. Pastor Hirsch, of Queret, has recently made a tour in the department of the Correze and was everywhere met by the same eagerness to hear the truth. It was as if the people were hearing the Gospel for the first time. The Catholic Bishop of Tulle tried to induce the local authorities to silence the preacher by accusing him of reviving the blasphemy of Nestorius against the immaculate conception of the Virgin Mary, and the Catholic press has teemed with denunciation of these Protestant services. At Montargis, a year ago, there were between forty and fifty Protestants, now there are 150.

NEWS NOTES.

We specially invite news from all quarters for this column.

The Rockingham (N. C.) Spirit of the South announces that Rev. T. J. Allison has received a call to the Presbyterian church at Mebaneville.

We note from the Newbern Nut Shell that Rev. L. C. Vass, pastor of the Presbyterian church at Newbern, N. C., has commenced a series of sermons on St. Paul's Epistle to the Romans.

A friend writes in a business letter from Charlotte, N. C.: "We are repairing, repainting and frescoing our church (the First Presbyterian) and when finished it will be the handsomest church in the State."

LEXINGTON, N. C., Sept. 19, 1879.

Mr. Editor: God bless those dear churches who show a tender regard for, and an appreciation of their ministers and families. How refreshing are these oases in the care-worn minister's life!

Anticipating my arrival with my family, among them, the dear friends of the Lexington church, God bless them all, had taken possession of our home, put the house in excellent condition, made it fully ready for occupation, and the supper table groaning under provisions and dainties of every description, enough for our small family for a week. Then the ladies, (what would our church do without their invaluable labors?) led their grateful minister to the pantry and presented him with supplies for a long while to come. We cannot express our gratitude, but only pray that He who takes knowledge of a cup of cold water, may abundantly bless them. We do wish every one of God's ministering servants had as kind and noble a people as compose the Lexington church.

Fraternally, A. M. WATSON.

UNITY CHURCH, CONCORD PRESBYTERY.

Dear Brother: Our protracted meeting at Unity, after continuing for twelve days, closed on the 16th inst. The manifestations of the presence of the Spirit of God were unmistakable. There were penitent heart searchings and importunate prayer on the part of others. More than 40 persons obtained a comfortable hope of the pardon of sins. Of these thirty-one were admitted to the Lord's table, and others will make application when an opportunity is given. Seven adults were baptized. Neighboring churches shared the blessing, and will receive additions to their membership. Dr. Nall presented the truth clearly and faithfully, and the Lord blessed it abundantly. The interest continued until the close of the meeting, the house being crowded, and some coming forward as inquirers for the first time on the last night. "Unto Thee, O God, do we give thanks, unto Thee do we give thanks; for that Thy name is near Thy wondrous works declare.". Yours, &c.,

Woodleaf, Sept. 20. R. W. BOYD.

[We have received the same news from Mr. Edmund Rice, and return our thanks.—ED.]

CONCORD PRESBYTERY, FALL MEETING.

STATESVILLE, N. C., Sept. 16, 1879.

Dear Brother McLaurin: Concord Presbytery met, according to adjournment, at Bethesda church, on Saturday, September 13th, at 11 a. m. Bethesda is eight miles southeast of Statesville.

The opening sermon was preached by the retiring Moderator, Rev. J. H. Thornwell, from John i: 42.

Rev. B. L. Beall was appointed to discharge the duties of the stated clerk, that officer being absent on account of sickness. Rev. James Wharey was elected moderator, and Rev. Jas. A. Ramsay and E. M. Stevenson, Esq., temporary clerks.

Fourteen ministers and eighteen elders were present during the meeting, though some of these did not come till Monday.

Rev. Dr. Hepburn and Rev. L. McKinnon were elected trustees of Davidson College. The report as to the condition and prospects of the college was very encouraging.

Revs. E. F. Rockwell and J. Rumple, and Dr. R. L. Beall were appointed a committee on the observance of the Sabbath.

The Agent of Publication reported that our colporteur had sold over $400 worth of books since last December. This good work among our churches is to be continued.

The Presbytery discussed with much interest the subject of educating colored young men for the ministry, and directed its ministers and church sessions to look out suitable young men and recommend them to the Committee on Education.

A petition was presented from Presbyterians residing at Troutman's Depot and in the immediate vicinity, asking for the organization of a church there.

The petition was granted, and Revs. P. T. Penick, P. P. Winn, W. A. Wood, D. D., and Elders J. H. Hill and E. McNeely, were appointed a committee for this purpose.

Another petition for the organization of a church was presented from several members of Concord (Iredell) church in the Clio neighborhood, which is some seven miles north of that church.

Action on this petition was deferred till the adjourned meeting of the Presbytery, during the sessions of Synod.

The following resolution was unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That the members of our churches and congregations are advised not to attend upon the public religious ministrations of females, because by so doing they will encourage an act prohibited by the Word of God.

Our ministers were directed to read this resolution from their pulpits.

The next spring meeting of Concord Presbytery will be held at Davidson College, on Thursday before the third Sabbath in April next, at 11 a. m. P. P. W.

TRANSYLVANIA PRESBYTERY

Met on Sept. 3d. Rev. J. V. Logan was chosen moderator. A call from New Providence church was placed in the hands of Rev. Barbee Betts. He retains it for the present. Rev. W. Crow accepted a call from Paint Lick church which was placed in his hands and a committee was appointed to instal him on Sabbath, 28th inst. Free conversation on religion showed an encouraging state of religion. A committee on Sabbath observance was appointed, in accordance with the recommendation of the General Assembly, and pastors and supplies requested to preach on the subject of the observance of the Sabbath. A committee was appointed to visit the church at Hustonville and report. An adjourned meeting will be held in Harrodsburg on the 18th prox. to ordain and instal Mr. J. J. Chisholm pastor of the church in that place. Next regular meeting at Stanford, Ky., Thursday before fourth Sabbath in April.

For the N. C. Presbyterian.

DR. J. LEIGHTON WILSON'S VISIT.

The spirit of missions has been greatly revived in Union Theological Seminary by a visit from Dr. J. Leighton Wilson, Secretary of Foreign Missions, whose zeal in these enterprises is well known to all the church. His soul is wrapped up in this work, his earnestness and enthusiasm are contagious, and the effects of his solid arguments and appeals are not merely temporary but lasting; therefore it is a good thing for any body of Christians to hear him on these subjects.

Besides many private conversations with individuals, he made two addresses, one an informal talk to the students, the other a missionary sermon in the Seminary chapel to the public, and both brimming with good news. In his private conference with the students he stated something that will be a glad surprise to your readers, as it was to us, viz: That by reason of unexpected liberality on the part of certain individuals and churches the committee was now able to send out and support three new missionaries: one to China, one to Greece and one to Pernambuco; and that he had come to talk about these three fields and to call for volunteers from the class which will graduate next April. His account of the condition of these missions was very cheering. To aid the students in their self-examination as to the fitness for the work, he specified some of the requisites of a missionary, such as a sound constitution, reasonable facility in acquiring a foreign language, a prudent matrimonial alliance, and freedom from the responsibility of dependent mothers and sisters. It is likely that the present Senior Class will give three men to the mission work and perhaps four.

In his sermon Dr. Wilson spoke of the results and prospects of missionary labor in what was forty years ago considered the most unpromising part of the heathen world. Africa, dwelling strangely on the providential preparation of that country for the reception of the Gospel, as seen in the mighty net work of water communications traced by Stanley and his great predecessors and stretching over the vast rich interior of the dark continent; and as seen also in the preparation (for those interior truths) of a language marvelous in its flexibility and its capacity for conveying new truths, especially religious truths. This exceedingly interesting subject is developed by Dr. Wilson in an article entitled "Central Equatorial Africa, a new Field for Missionary Effort," and republished from the Catholic Presbyterian in the August number of the Missionary. Verily the command of these providences to the church is plain: "Arise, go over, and possess this land for the Lord your God hath given it to thee. M.

A CALL.

To the Churches Under the Care of the Presbytery of Mecklenburg:

DEAR BRETHREN: There are four counties in the extreme western portion of our mountain territory in which there is not one Presbyterian minister. Your Presbytery at the spring meeting appointed the Rev. S. C. Alexander evangelist for that destitute region, hoping that the work will be sustained by the prayers and money of you, the professed friends of Christ.

The evangelist is willing to enter upon this work and support himself in the field, if the churches will raise enough to bear the expense of his removal, and to give him a start for securing a living by his own efforts. Surely the churches will be willing to do this much towards supplying this vast region with a pure gospel. It will require five hundred dollars to move his family to the field and support them until he can secure a living by a school.

Are there not some of our members to whom God has given much, who will be not only willing but glad to take a part in this important work? Let all who have anything to give send it to J. C. Burroughs, at Charlotte.

G. D. PARKS, Ch'rman.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

The South Atlantic for August is at hand. Mrs. Cicero W. Harris, editor and proprietor, Wilmington, N. C. $3 per annum. We give the contents: Carmelita, by W. H. Babcock; Richard Dobbs Spaight, by John H. Wheeler; The Late Prince Napoleon, by D. J. O'Connell; Influence of Mind and Body on each Other, by Jos. A. Creech; A Ballad of the Third Crusade, by Paul H. Hayne; John Davidson's Wife, by W. H. Alexander; From the Talmud, by Paul T. Horry; Beirout to Constantinople, by W. C. Johnstone; a Curious Inauguration, by Th. Von Jasmund; Recent Literature.

From S. W. Partridge & Co., 9 Paternoster Row, London, we have received for August and September the following attractive illustrated serials: 1. The Children's Friend, 16 pages, 25 cents; 2. Infant's Magazine, 16 pages, 25 cents a year; 3. Band of Hope Review, 4 pages.

Southern Educational Monthly, Walker, Evans & Cogswell, Charleston, S. C.

The Educational Reporter, 16 pages. From Robert E. Park, General Agent, Macon, Ga.

We have received the Princeton Review for September, with the following varied articles from distinguished writers in Europe and America: Prof. P. Schaff discusses "Progress of Christianity in the United States;" Prof. Luigi Ferri, the "Philosophic Movements in Italy;" Prof. Henry Coppee, "Painting in its Historic Relations;" Rev. H. N. Day, "Religion and Morality;" Prof. Calderwood, "The Problem of the Human Will;" Sheldon Amos, "The Laws of War in their Bearing on Peace;" Pres't R. L. Dabney, "Secularized Education;" and Principal Shairp, "Virgil as a Precursor of Christianity." While many latitudinarian articles now appear in this Review, we yet have the Gibraltar of Orthodoxy represented by our President Dabney. It is an advantage, yes a necessity, to cultured men to know what positions are held by "broad churchmen," who stand unchallenged in their respective churches. This Review meets this want, though it is not an exponent of Princeton theology of the Alexander and Hodge type. 37 Park Row, New York; $2 per annum.

Sunday Magazine for October contains the usual number and variety of articles, entertaining and instructive, and adopted to all ages and classes. We heartily commend it. Published at Frank Leslie's Publishing House, New York, at $3 a year.

From D. Appleton & Co., New York, we have Uncle Cæsar and The Distracted Young Preacher. These are volumes of the Handy Volumes Series. Quite entertaining. 25 cents each.

Good Company (formerly the Sunday Afternoon) comes to us in a fancy cover, and altogether bright in appearance and matter as a new shilling. The present number commences a new volume. Contents: In a Meadow, a poem; A Wilderness Romance; Hospital Work in New York; James Johnson's Opportunity; Shared, a poem; The Laborer and His Hire; Do Not Even the Publicans the Same? a story; Nature and Revelation; My Birthday, a poem; A Committee of Five; The Politeness of Ogasawara; Something to Do; The Firefly, a poem; In the Fatherland; A German School; All Day Long in Paris; Non Nobis, a poem; Mr. Scattergood's First Parish; A Storm; Is There not a Lie in Our Right Hand? The Water Lily, a poem; Along the Line, a story; Editor's Table. Price $3 a year. Address Edward F. Merriam, Springfield, Mass.

Holmes' First Reader: Under the supervision of Geo. L. Holmes, LL. D., of University of Virginia. University Publishing Co., New York. We have already commended the "University Series" of Readers. They are now officially recommended by the N. C. Board of Education. The binding of these books has been admirably strengthened by the tape in the back, so that the backs may be completely doubled without injury.

The Catholic Presbyterian: An international journal, ecclesiastical and religious. September, 1879. Contents: Are we Drifting? by Prof. Welch, D. D., Auburn Theological Seminary, N. Y.; The Princess Elizabeth, Queen of Bohemia; Educational Policy in India, by Prof. Candlish, D. D., Glasgow; Theologians of the Day (Joseph Cook), by President McCosh, LL. D., D. D., Princeton College; The Late Lord Lawrence, Viceroy of India, by George Smith, C. I. E., LL. D.; Rise and Progress of the Presbyterian Church in Canada, by Rev. Robert Campbell, M. A., Montreal; Professional Training in the Various Presbyterian Churches; Scottish Moderatism and the "Quarterly Review," by A. Taylor Innes, Advocate. Anson D. F. Randolph & Co., 900 Broadway, N. Y. $3 a year postpaid, 25 cents a number.

Lippincott's Magazine for October contains Rambles of Three, part first—a summer isle, illustrated, a bright and amusing article depicting the rambles and experiences of a party of American artists in Italy—by Margaret Bertha Wright; Summerland Sketches; My Past, a poem; Through Winding Ways; Sunday in England, a sketch of English life; Nothing Menial, a story; Lady Harriet Acland; Chamois Shooting with the Emperor of Austria, illustrated; The Double Life of Martin Staples, a strange story; The Study of English in Germany; My Friend the Communist, a story; The Buried Wealth of South Jersey; Our Monthly Gossip; Literature of the Day, $4 a year, 35c. single number. J. B. Lippincott & Co., publishers, 715 and 717 Market street, Philadelphia.

Eclectic Magazine.—The October number of the Eclectic, contains a finely executed portrait on steel of Francis Parkham, one of the most eminent of American historians. The literary contents of the number are as follows: Hours in a Library—Gray and his School; The French Play in London; The Study of the Classics; Souvenirs of Madame Vigee Le Brun; Half-Hearted, a poem; White Wings: a Yachting Romance; The Origin of the Week; Conversations with Prince Napoleon; An Episode in the Russo-Turkish War; Mademoiselle de Mersac, a novel; Influence of the Mind on the Body; Americans in Europe; Is Nest-Building an Instinct in Birds? The Two Crosses of Honor; At Sea, and the biographical sketch of Mr. Parkham. Besides these, the editorial departments, filled with copious notes on home and foreign literature, science, and art, complete a number of great interest and variety.

Published by E. R. Pelton, 25 Bond street, New York. Terms, $5 per year; single number, 45 cents; trial subscription for three months, $1.

St. Nicholas, prince of Magazines for girls and boys, is again at hand. October Number is not ahead—no, that couldn't be—of its long line of predecessors, but it is up to the best, and the little Johnnies and Jimmies and Katies and Sallies will jump with delight. We intend to read it ourselves, for the Railroad in the Air will teach us all that we need to know of the elevated railroad in New York. Then the children have "A little Round Head in a Little Red Bonnet" and "The School in the Wood," and ever so many more. And the pictures! so many and so good! $3 00 a year; 25 cents a number. Scribner & Co., New York.

We are always glad to receive the Nursery. October number is now at hand. The typography is exceptionally good, and as we have heretofore noted the pictures unsurpassed in expressiveness and clearness of impression. John L. Shorey, publisher, Boston. $1 50 a year.

To the Alumni of Union Seminary Now Living, and the Friends of those Deceased.

It is proposed to prepare a General Catalogue of this Seminary. Each Alumnus will please send at once to the undersigned the date of leaving the Seminary, whether a full graduate or not, the date and place of his licensure, ordination, and installation, and by what Presbytery, and of any change in his field of labor or his official work, and the title and time of publication of any pamphlet or work of which he is the author, or a copy of the same for the Library.

Friends or relations of deceased Alumni will please communicate the same information respecting them. B. M. SMITH.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

SOUTHERN.

PRESBYTERIAN.

A call has been tendered to Rev. Thos. Ward White from Vienna and Alabama churches in Louisiana.

On the 7th inst. two young ladies connected themselves with the Presbyterian church in Charlottesville, Va.

Rev. Dr. E. Thompson Baird has received a unanimous call to visit the Presbyterian church at McKinney, Texas.

The postoffice address of Rev. W. T. McElroy has been changed to Danville, Ky., to which place he has removed.

Rev. A. E. Grover, now supplying the church at Shelbyville, Tenn., has notified the congregation that he will retire at the close of the year.

Rev. P. D. Stephenson takes charge of the church at Sedalia, Mo. His postoffice address has been changed to that place from Trenton, Missouri.

On last Sabbath there were five additions to the Presbyterian church of Ashland, of which Rev. W. F. Bishop is the pastor.—Central Presbyterian.

The Presbyterian church at Strawberry Plains, East Tenn., was struck by lightning on a recent Sabbath. The congregation had left the building only a short time before.

Rev. J. E. Booker is for the present occupying the chair in the Augusta Female Seminary, made vacant by the death of Prof. T. R. Edmunds.—Staunton (Va.) Vindicator.

On the first Sabbath in August, as we learn from the Christian Observer, Messrs. Wm. Fife and R. B. Kirk were ordained ruling elders of the church at Mt. Olivet, Ala., and on the first Sabbath in September four persons were received on examination and one by letter. Rev. I. P. Osborne has charge.

The Southwestern Presbyterian says: Rev. Dr. W. E. Boggs, of Memphis, has accepted the call to the pastorate of the Central church, Atlanta. But being now occupied among the sick in the epidemic at Memphis, he declines to leave his present position until the epidemic is over.

At a protracted meeting, held in the church at Macon, Tenn., commencing August 23d and closing September 3d, nine persons were received into the Presbyterian church on profession of faith; others will probably follow, and yet others will probably connect with other churches.

During the meetings, August 23d to 25th, in Pine Ridge church, Mississippi Presbytery, there were seventeen accessions to the church. The services were in charge of Rev. John S. Shaw, evangelist, and Rev. Dr. McInnis. Three months ago when the evangelist was sent to preach to these people there were only five members.

Rev. L. B. Johnston writes to the Central Presbyterian under date Sept. 13, 1879, that on the fifth Sunday in August he began a protracted meeting in Columbia, Va. Rev. Dr. Bell, the evangelist of our Presbytery, was present and assisted in all the services, which continued until Thursday night. As one result of our meeting, a list of sixteen names was drawn up petitioning West Hanover Presbytery to organize a church at Columbia, to be called the Rivanna church. Besides these, several other persons testified their purpose to join this church when organized. Arrangements were also made for the regular supply of the incipient church with stated services.

The Charleston News and Courier, speaking of Zion church in that city, has this to say: "It is now thirty years since a number of pious men, building better than they knew, erected this large edifice for the accommodation of colored worshipers of the Presbyterian faith. The Rev. J. B. Adger, D. D., and the Rev. J. L. Girardeau, D. D., were among the first workers in that vineyard, and those fathers in the Church will be pleased to know that, under the pastorate of the Rev. D. X. Lafar, Zion continues to prosper and increase. At the communion service yesterday seventeen young persons were admitted to the church, and the impressive scene was witnessed by a large congregation."

Rev. R. Lewis writes to the Christian Observer, concerning the Cornerstone Church, Amherst county, Va: "The Lord is graciously visiting us again in Cornerstone Church, gladdening the hearts of His children and converting sinners. A beloved Methodist brother is conducting the meeting. He came recently from Norfolk, Va., and has been laboring in a circuit, including the above named union church, preaching for us during the past, and thus far in the present year, once a month. His preaching pleases all; is unsectarian and of a high order intellectually and spiritually; and is successful in winning souls to Christ. It is only a few days since he commenced his meeting, and about twenty are already rejoicing in hope, and many seeking the Saviour.

Rev. C. M. Atkinson writes to the Southwestern Presbyterian, under date September 12th from Morgan City, La.: "The yellow fever is here again. One death and several cases. Also one case of the fever in Franklin—a Mrs. Young, on a visit there from New Orleans. Franklin, on Tuesday, quarantined against this place; and now Jeannerette has quarantined against Franklin, and this town also. So we have trial upon trial. It is ours to endure with cheerfulness the will of our heavenly Father. None of my people are yet stricken with the fever. My own little family are very well. I found the friends at Centreville much cast down, but left them full of hope, which hope, I cannot think, will be disappointed. The Barnetts (our folks just this side of Centreville) suffered much, and our friends on Bayou Sale yet more. The cane was magnificent before the storm, but now it looks dreadful. With the most favorable season, none expect more than one third or one-half a crop.

Rev. J. H. Wiggins, who supplies the Kilgore church, in the Presbytery of Eastern Texas, writes to the Texas Presbyterian: "I began a protracted meeting on Friday night before the fourth Sunday in July, at New Danville organization at Kilgore. We had large and attentive congregations. Meeting lasted thirteen days. I preached sixteen sermons. Bro. Alexander, of the M. E. Church, preached for us three times; Bro. Dawson, of the same Church, once." We ing the whole time no excitement prevailed. Eight joined our church, all on profession of faith. Four of the eight received the rite of baptism. Three others joined us at Kilgore on profession of faith, the fruits of a meeting held in that place by the Methodists, assisted by Dr. Marshall, of our Church. We all feel greatly encouraged.

Rev. Dr. R. L. Dabney writes to the Central Presbyterian: The readers of the Central have not forgotten the vivid picture of the Presbyterianism of the old time, about Meehum's River and Mountain Plains in Albomarle, drawn for them by J. Marshal McCue, Esq. His narrative showed them how our cause had been on an ebb-tide, now, for fifty years, the waters receding, as it were, into a narrower bound near Rockfish Gap, forfeiting the old stronghold at Mountain Plains to another denomination. But, for the last two years, the Rev. Hugh Henry and the young Tabor church have gallantly resisted that the old ground shall be re-occupied, and the waters are flowing back in a refreshing wave. Tabor church, but a few miles from the old headquarters, has been re-fitted, at a great expense, and is now filled by a good congregation. A good, modest manse, admirably situated near Hillsboro, and near the church, is under roof, and the title to the ground secure. The Tabor people are a "feeble folk" like the conics, "yet they make their houses in the rock." Their strength is strained to exhaustion. They need help, and they deserve help. They ask for but little, for their aims are humble. I would suggest for them that each one of us help them to the amount of a dollar; and as they have a great deal of the old Scotch blood in their veins, remind them of the old Scotch saw—"Many a mickle makes a muckle." Especially do I call on the descendants of Elder William Woods, and their connections: of the Wallaces, Prisons, and Waylands, in the Valley, far and near, to throw in their mite. Send it to the Rev. Hugh Henry, Greenwood Depot, Va.

GENERAL.

The Africo-American Presbyterian states that during a series of meetings, at Hermon Presbyterian church, in Rock Hill, S. C., on and after August 27th, fifty three persons were received on profession of their faith, twenty-nine of whom were baptized.

The Newberry (S. C.) conference of the Lutheran church adopted a memorial to be presented to Synod, asking that body to either merge the two conferences—Newberry and Central—into one, or re-establish the former boundaries.

The Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, Louisville, Ky., was opened on the 1st inst., with about fifty-six students present for duty, a larger number than has ever before been matriculated on the opening day of a session.

The annual meeting of the Cabarrus county Sunday school convention was held in Concord, N. C., on the 11th inst., and was opened by Rev. L. McKinnon, the retiring president. Rev. H. T. Cole was elected president for the ensuing year, and C. G. Montgomery, Esq., secretary. A vice president for each township was also elected and an executive committee elected. Twelve Sabbath schools of the Methodist, Lutheran and Presbyterian churches were represented. Interesting addresses were delivered by the pastors of the churches represented, and a discussion was held on measures that will best advance the Sabbath school cause. The convention adjourned after having enjoyed a pleasant and profitable session.

NORTHERN.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Twenty-five new students were enrolled at the opening of Princeton Seminary, and the number will probably be increased to forty. At Allegheny there are forty-one new students.

Rev. Frank Newton, missionary of the Presbyterian Board who has been in this country to recuperate his health, will leave early in October for his post in India. Mrs. Newton will accompany him.

Rev. Thomas Lawrence, pastor of the Presbyterian church at Sharpsburgh, Pa., has been elected to the Chair of Homiletics and Biblical Exegesis in Biddle University, and has accepted the appointment, and will at once enter upon its duties.

Rev. Edward Harris, of Long Island Presbytery, died in Newburyport, Mass., on the 14th inst. He was 81 years old.

BAPTIST.

During the last four years nearly three hundred persons have been baptized in the Baptist church at Connellsville, Pa., and a new church erected without debt.

Rev. James L. Spurgeon, assistant of his brother the Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, is in New York on a visit to this country.

The twenty-ninth annual meeting of the German Baptist conference was held in the First German Church of Berlin, Ontario, August 31-September 2. Seventy delegates were present, representing the German Baptist Churches of Ontario, and of New York, Connecticut, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, and Maryland. Reports from fifty churches show a state of general prosperity throughout the organization. The conference supported twenty missionaries during the past year, and has a total membership of 4,601.

LUTHERAN.

P. Born, who has been serving as pastor of a German congregation at Dayton, Ohio, was expelled from the Synod of Pittsburgh, at its recent meeting in Fairview, Ohio.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Mr. C. C. Lyman of Hartford, Conn., gave $250 to the American Home Missionary Society, and $250 to the American Board last month. The receipts from the State in July for the two socicties were respectively $875 and $4[illegible]. The American Missionary Association received $1,500 in the same month.

The ladies of the Congregational church at Marysville, Ohio, had extraordinary luck with the cookery book they published. It brought them $3,500 for their church debt, which they say is better than though they had secured the services of Mr. Kimball.

The Rev. Wm. Patton, D. D., a distinguished Congregational clergyman, died suddenly of congestion of the lungs on Tuesday night, September 9, at his home in New Haven, Conn. He was 81 years of age at the time of his death.

During the last thirty months thirty-seven Congregational churches have been formed in Michigan, which is believed to be a larger number than in any other State during the same period.

METHODIST.

The Metropolitan M. E. church, in Washington, is in great financial stress, and will have to be sold unless a respectable sum can be raised with which to pay a part of the debt of $300,000.

The Central Christian Advocate says: "It is a remarkable fact that the Protestant ministers, three in number, who have died of yellow fever this year were all Methodists—Messrs. Tiller, Ridley and Stewart.

The new iron tabernacle on the Methodist camp ground at Martha's Vineyard cost $10,000, and will seat 4,000 people.

In 1784 the M. E. Church in the United States was organized with 84 itinerant preachers and 14,988 members. At the close of 1878 these numbers had increased to 11,676 itinerant preachers and 1,698,282 members.

UNITED PRESBYTERIAN.

Mr. D. J. Robertson, a student under care of

...bany Presbytery, has been dismissed to the Presbyterian Church.

The Theological Seminary at Xenia, Ohio, was opened in their new, commodious and well-furnished building. Over thirty students are present or accounted for—the largest number in attendance for many years.

Rev. E. H. Stevenson a professor in Anderson Collegiate Institute, N. Y., dropped dead at his post last week while teaching. He was a minister of the United Presbyterian Church, and spent ten years as a missionary in India

GENERAL.

The Reformer and Jewish Times says that by actual calculation there are in the United States seven Jewish ministers without pulpits and fifteen congregations without ministers.

By a recent canvass of the towns of Westminster, Putney, Dummerston, Marlboro and Halifax, Vt., it is discovered that less than one-fifths of the population ever attend religious worship. Out of 1,212 families in these ... seventy-six were found without a copy of the Bible, and of these seventy-six only twenty-three were Roman Catholic, leaving fifty-three American Protestant families destitute of the Word of God.

McINTIRE'S DRY GOODS.—R. M. McIntire to-day announces his full preparation for fall and winter business. He has been for ... years engaged in the sale of Dry Goods, making Dress Goods, Carpets and the like a specialty. Our lady friends appreciate his efforts at large, but in the matter of Bridal Trousseaux—we drop the pen in despair!

Mr. William Burney, who graduated at Davidson College in 1875, has just returned from abroad. He spent three years at Heidelberg, Germany, under Bunsen, the most eminent living chemist, and took the first distinction, summa laude, an honor rarely attained by American students. He also spent one year in Paris. Although a very young man, scarce 20 years of age, he is Wm. Burney, Ph. D.—Iredell Gazette.

The case of a deaf mute cow is reported by a Russian veterinary surgeon. A cow 12 years old, of Algava breed, belonging to a Russian nobleman, never showed signs of hearing or bellowed. Seeing the other cattle bellow, she tried to imitate them by stretching out her neck and head and opening her mouth, but she could not produce any sound. The sense of vision of this cow was found to be unusually developed.

A New York paper states that the amount of gold received there during the last week was $8,860,000, which is more than double the largest week's receipts of specie ever before recorded, we believe, and, with $3,887,910 during the first week of the month, makes $12,687,910 in less than half of September. The shipments from Europe on Saturday alone amounted to $5,000,000 more. Within six weeks $21,515,543 in specie has actually arrived at this port, and enough more is on the sea to swell the receipts to about thirty million dollars.

In this city, the 1st of August, 1879, THOMAS WRIGHT PLAYER, aged 64 years, 7 months and 16 days.

A member of the Board of Audit and Finance of the City of Wilmington and a deacon of the First Presbyterian church. His occupying these positions gives evidence to the respect and esteem entertained for him in this community, in which he dwelt. As a good citizen, an upright man, a devoted Christian, and a kind friend, none knew him but to esteem him. Still it was in the retirement of the home circle that his virtues came forth preeminently. As the affectionate and attentive husband, the tender, loving, watchful father, the sympathetic, generous and hospitable neighbor, how much he was to us in his unobtrusive merit, we knew not until his precious presence was taken from us. May the Lord help us to bear this heavy burden, and console our aching hearts. He cannot come back to us, but we can go to him. May we have grace to follow in his footsteps, to remember his admonitions and to emulate his virtues, so that when our time shall come, we too may go down to our graves in peace and be prepared to meet the loved one where there shall be no more death.

Here thy loss we deeply feel;
But 'tis God that has bereft us—
He can all our sorrows heal.

Yet, again we hope to meet thee
When the day of life is fled,
There in heaven with joy to greet thee
Where no farewell tear is shed.

In Lexington, N. C., on the 6th inst., of consumption, Captain JOHN HENRY MABRY, aged 44 years and 3 months.

Captain M. leaves an afflicted widow and beloved sisters to mourn their sad bereavement; but they "mourn not as those who have no hope." None who knew Brother M. ever questioned the sincerity of his profession. His was an humble, confiding faith, which was much more apparent from his walk than from any claims on his part. During his protracted illness he would manifest some impatience at the delay of his Saviour, but his general resignation was an ornament of a gracious soul.

Who of us that remain shall next go up higher?

W.

In Richmond county, at the residence of Miss Katie McCormick, on the 2d of August, Miss Peggy Murphy, aged 89 years.

The messenger came unexpectedly. The exact time of his arrival is not known, as all were sleeping. But we hope that to the departed sudden death was sudden glory.

Departed this life on the evening of the 8th of September, Mr. WILLIAM CORBETT, in the 79th year of his age.

K. McD.

IN MEMORIAM.

Death has removed from our midst our beloved brother and honored colleague, Major JOHN McNEILL. The Sabbath previous he had worshiped with us on earth, and on the succeeding Lord's day he was with the general assembly of the first-born in heaven, loosed from the weary load of life, and rejoicing in happiness for which he had tarried long and hoped with earnest desire.

He was born August 23d, 1801, and died August 2d, 1879. He served as ruling elder in Laurel Hill church for nearly 37 years.

We are met to lament the parting and record our sense of the loss, which the community, the church and the family have sustained in the death of one who faithfully fulfilled his duties in the relations of life; who showed the sanctifying power of the gospel in his walk and conversation; who led the way and lured to brighter realms.

But why speak of loss? O selfish sorrows of selfish hearts! He is within the door that shuts out loss and every hurtful thing. Look on the dreary way of this present evil world; the thorns and thistles wherever we turn. What wrongs and trials and tears; what struggles and strife the journey has! From all of these he has now escaped; and shall we mourn?

Death makes no breach in love and sympathy, and though the mortal tongue be dust and no sound can reach our ears, there is an inward spiritual speech that greets us still, and bids us do the work that he laid down and take up the song where he left off the strain: and so to journey on till we reach the place where are laid up our treasures and our crown.

We give thanks to Him who is the resurrection and the life, for our religion that stands alone in its assurances, that death is robbed of its sting, the grave of its victory, and that to die is gain.

Therefore in offering our condolence to the bereaved family, we exhort them not to doubt the blessed reality of the resurrection life; but be comforted by what is implied in "being with Christ," and believing that when their Lord rolled away the stone from His own sepulchre. He opened the grave for all who trust in Him, they should be calm and composed because of the Christian faith that sustains and cheers.

For ourselves let us call to mind that such a separation awaits us all. Never a morning wore to evening that some heart did not break. The bitter cup of death is passed around, and all must pledge in it. Looking for this, let us accustom ourselves to dwell on the unspeakable gain of departing to be with Christ: and reflect that God does nothing through mistake, and nothing which is not in the end for our good. "Flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God," but these frail bodies must return to their dust, that they may be made anew with power to bear up the "far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory."

COMMITTEE.

The sixty-sixth annual session of the Synod of North Carolina will be held in the Presbyterian church, Statesville, N. C., Wednesday, October 22, 1879, at 7½ p. m.

WM. S. LACY, Stated Clerk.

Members of the Synod of North Carolina, ministers and ruling elders and visitors who expect to attend the sessions of Synod in Statesville are requested to notify at once,

W. H. MORRISON,
Chm'n Com. of Arrangements.

PRESBYTERIAL NOTICES.

Concord Presbytery stands adjourned to meet at Bethesda church on Saturday, the 13th of September next, at 11 o'clock A. M.

WM. W. PHARR, S. C.

All delegates who will attend the approaching meeting of Concord Presbytery are requested to drop a postal to W. E. McNeely, Esq., postmaster at Amity Hill, Iredell county, N. C. Delegates will be met either at Shepherd's Cross-Roads, or in Statesville, or at Gilbert's. In writing they will please indicate their choice of stopping places.

The Presbytery of Central Texas will meet (D. V.) at Robinsonville, at 11 o'clock A. M., on Thursday, October 23.

L. TENNEY, S. C.

The Presbytery of Fayetteville will convene at Sharon church, Montgomery county, N. C., on Wednesday, October 8th, 1879, at 12 o'clock, M. The opening sermon will be preached by Rev. Joseph Evans.

J. P. McPHERSON, Stated Clerk.

FAYETTEVILLE, N. C., Aug. 18, 1879.

Members of Fayetteville Presbytery who expect to attend the fall meeting at Sharon church, and who wish to come by rail, will be met at Lilesville, the nearest depot, 18 miles from the church. Members who would be thus accommodated will please communicate the same to R. McKinnon, Mt. Gilead, stating what day they will be at the depot.

Presbytery of Mecklenburg will meet at Philadelphia church, ten miles east of Charlotte, on the 17th day of October, at 11 o'clock a. m.

R. Z. JOHNSTON, S. Clerk.

Lincolnton, Sept. 4, 1879.

The 219th session of Orange Presbytery will be held at Alamance church, Guilford county, on Thursday, the 16th of October, 1879, at 1 o'clock p. m. Sessions are expected to send up written reports on state of religion and reason of non-representation at last meeting. N. B.—Under the Revised Book of Church Order, now the law of the Church, every church is entitled, irrespective of its pastoral relations, to representation in the Presbytery.

F. H. JOHNSTON, S. Clerk.

The Presbytery of Harmony will meet at Midway church, October the 9th, at 11 o'clock a. m.

W. A. GREGG,
Stated Clerk.

THE MAP OF PALESTINE.

We have sent out this map quite extensively, and it has, we believe, given universal satisfaction; at least, no complaints have been made, and many have expressed hearty appreciation.

It is 28x42 inches in size and sold by publishers at $1 00.

We furnish gratis with one new subscriber at $2 65.

THE MINUTES OF GENERAL ASSEMBLY

It Seems Impossible.

That a remedy made of such common, simple plants as Hops, Buchu, Mandrake, Dandelion, &c, should make so many and such marvelous and wonderful cures as Hop Bitters do, but when old and young, rich and poor, Pastor and Doctor, Lawyer and Editor all testify to having been cured by them, you must believe and try them yourself, and doubt no longer. See other column.

EDUCATION.

To the Chairmen of the Presbyterial Committees of Education:

Please bear in mind that application for aid to students must be made annually. The fact that a student was on our list last year makes no difference. If he wishes aid this year, application must be made by the Chairman of Education in his Presbytery. Brethren will also please state whether the student is in College, or in the Seminary. The undersigned has authority from the Committee to receive all students as beneficiaries for whom application is made in the regular way.

My postoffice address at present is Covington, Tenn., but letters addressed to me at Memphis will be forwarded. Quite a number of letters on the subject of Education have been addressed to Rev. Dr. Waddel, the former Secretary. Brethren will bear in mind that there has been a change of Secretaries.

E. M. RICHARDSON,
Secretary of Education.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

Charlotte Institute.

THE next session begins September 10th, 1879, and ends June 8th, 1880.
No Institute ever made more rapid progress in securing the confidence and esteem of its patrons than this one during the past session. Before the end of the scholastic year the number of its pupils, attracted by the well-earned reputation of the school, increased to 117, exclusive of the adult ladies who availed themselves of the superior advantages here given in the departments of Music, Art, and Modern Languages. In no respect is this Institute inferior to any other first class boarding-school in the Southern or Middle States. Such testimonials as will satisfy an one as to the high standard and thoroughness of the instruction here are published in the catalogue. These testimonials are peculiarly trustworthy, inasmuch as they are given by gentlemen engaged in teaching in well known schools and colleges of the highest grade, and who are therefore qualified to express an opinion in regard to educational institutions.
The total expense for the half session or term will be $125. This amount includes board, with washing, fuel, lights, furnished room and servants' attendance, tuition in all the English branches, Latin, with either French or German, Calisthenics, text-books and stationery for school purposes. Pupils are not permitted to incur additional expense without permission of their parents. Parents are thus assured that their bills will not be greater than they expected.
Special arrangements and special terms for young ladies who wish to take only Music, Painting and Drawing, and Modern Languages, severally or collectively.

TALBOTT'S PATENT SPARK ARRESTER.
The Invention of the Age.
It does not destroy the draft.
It does not interfere with cleaning the tubes.
It will not choke up, and requires no cleaning.
It requires no direct dampers to be opened when raising steam (dampers being objectionable, as they may be left open and allow sparks to escape)
It requires no water to extinguish sparks, which, by condensation, destroys the draft. Besides, when water is used, if neglected, the efficiency is destroyed by evaporation of the water, and the boiler is kept in a filthy condition.
It is simple and durable and can be relied upon.
It can be attached to any boiler.
No planter should be without one of them. Insurance companies will insure gins and barns where the Talbott Engines and Spark-Arresters are used at same rate as charged for water or horse-power.

Broidery-Work.

BY MARGARET J. PRESTON.

Beneath the desert's rim went down the sun,
And from their tent-doors, all their service done,

For Bezaleel, the master, who had rare
And curious skill, and gifts beyond compare,
Greater than old Misraim's greatest were—

Had bidden that they approach at his command,
As on a goat-skin, spread upon the sand,
He sate, and saw them grouped on every hand.

And soon, as came to pass, a silence fell,
He spake and said:—"Daughters of Israel,
I bring a word: I pray ye, hearken well.

"God's Tabernacle, by his pattern made,
Shall fall of finish, though in order laid,
Unless ye women lift your hands to aid."

A murmur ran the crouched assembly through,
As each her veil about her closer drew—
"We are but women!—what can women do?"

And Bezaleel made answer:—"Not a man
Of all our tribes, from Judah unto Dan,
"Can do the thing that just ye women can:

"The gold and broidered work about the hem
Of the priests' robes—pomegranate, knop and stem—
Man's clumsy fingers can not compass them.

"The sanctuary curtains that must wreathen be
And bossed with cherubim—the colors three,
Blue, purple, scarlet—who can twine but ye?

"Yours is the very skill for which I call;
So bring your cunning needlework, though small
Your gifts may seem: the Lord hath need of all!"

* * * * * * * * * *

O Christian women! For the temples set
Throughout earth's desert lands—do you forget
The sanctuary curtains need your broidery yet?

To Go or Not to Go.

A GLASGOW INCIDENT.

Mr. John Dobie held a situation worth £200 a year in the custom house at Glasgow, and had held it for fifteen years or more; for he was now about forty years old, and had a wife and eight children.

Mr. Dobie lived in the West End of Glasgow, but not in the fashionable part; his house was as small as would hold his family, and lay in the district called Anderston. For the sake of those who do not know the second city of the empire, it may be explained that Glasgow has for its back-bone one long line of road, running nearly straight from east to west, considerably longer than Oxford street and Holborn, together with Cheapside to boot. The custom house lies on the river side, a little way off this line, at a point near the middle of it, where it is called Argyle street; indeed St. Enoch's church and the square in front of it occupy all the space between Argyle street and the custom house. Mr. John Dobie's walk, on six days of the week, was one mile on this straight line, ending with a sharp turn to the right through Enoch's square, and into the place of invoices, registers and bills lading; and on the first day of the week his walk was just the same, except that he had the company of some of his children and his wife, and that he stopped at the door of St. Enoch's church and went into his pew.

One Saturday night, in the last part of November, some five-and-thirty years ago, there was a press of work in the custom house. The clock stood at fifteen minutes past eleven, and was hasting on to mark the close of the week, when Mr. Reginald Crabbe came into the room where our friend was working and bade the porter put fresh coals on the fire. Mr. Crabbe was the head of the department, and recently transferred to Glasgow from London. When Mr. John Dobie heard the order given, he lifted his head and said, in a tone of wonder, but quite respectfully, "It will be Sabbath morning soon," whereupon other clerks lifted their heads also, looked at the clock and at Mr. Crabbe, and seemed as if they were of the same opinion with Mr. John Dobie.

"What difference does that make?" said Mr. Reginald Crabbe, sharply. Then, remembering that he had come into Puritan Scotland, he added, "This work must be finished, gentlemen. But some of you may have scruples, as Mr. Dobie seems to have of going on to-night, and others may be tired. We shall stop at twelve; but those who don't return at ten to-morrow morning may expect to find their desks occupied by others on Monday."

Nobody spoke after Mr. Crabbe retired, and simple John Dobie went home with a heavy heart. Had he done wrong in speaking? He had spoken on impulse, in mere astonishment that the Lord's day was not to be a day of rest; ought he to have held his peace? And what course was he to take to-morrow?

He had by no means settled this question by the time he reached his door. Sometimes the plainness of the command, "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy," seemed to settle the whole matter; but after a few steps the thought of his wife and eight children upset him, and he began to question whether it might not be his duty to go to the custom house rather than to St. Enoch's church next morning. He thought it almost certain that if he did not, the rigorous new chief, Mr. Crabbe, would keep his threat, and next Monday would see him and his cast on the world. As I said, he was a very plain, ordinary man, slow at thinking, with no force about him; safe enough as long as he was in a steady round of work, but much at a loss when thrown suddenly into any new set of circumstances; and when he knocked at his own door, he was rather leaning towards going to his work instead of to church.

His wife ascribed his silence and his anxious look to extra fatigue, and so, to his great relief, she asked no questions. He had an honest, loving heart, and did not wish to disturb her Sabbath rest by suggesting that on Monday the bread-winning might have ceased. While she slept, he lay and thought; but thinking was not his strong point, and he made little of it. Even when he thought of God and his Saviour, his ideas got hazy and his feelings perplexing, for he was weary and stunned, and the little sleep he had before morning was not very refreshing. He prayed, however, and honestly committed his way to God, and went through the regular family worship with his household as usual. Some peace came after that, yet he had by no means made up his mind; and during the hour that he was alone, while his wife was getting herself and the bairns ready for church, all his perplexity came back. Only now he leaned rather toward going to St. Enoch's as he had done every Sabbath for many years, and taking the risk of what Monday would bring forth. He sat with his Bible before him and remembered having heard of persons who had been led out of trouble by finding suitable texts, and wished that such a text would come to him. But, though he shut his eyes and prayed in a confused, plaintive way for guidance, no such decisive text came to him, and he was relieved when Mrs. Dobie and the children appeared ready for the walk to church.

There was nothing very remarkable about the prayers or the sermon that last Sabbath of November, 1845; but Mr. John Dobie was rather astonished to find how easy his mind became. For once the idea suggested itself to him that he had better look in at the custom house after the forenoon service; but he found it not nearly so difficult to dismiss that idea as it had been to put on his Sabbath coat in the morning. He went home with his wife, returned to St. Enoch's in the afternoon, and conducted the evening worship with his children almost as usual. The worst time was when he was alone, and after that, when he was in bed, recalling the deeds of the day. The deed was done and could not be recalled; whatever the consequences might be, he must abide by them. His conscience was certainly more at rest, but his heart and head were sadly troubled. He could scarcely hope that Mr. Crabbe's bark would prove worse than his bite, so that it was probably not worth his while to go to his work on Monday. Still, he thought, it would be best to go and learn his fate, and then come home to tell the sad story to his wife.

There was little sleep for John Dobie that night, and his walk to business next morning was sufficiently miserable. When he reached the custom house, lo! his desk was waiting for him as he had left it, and not a word was spoken. He found out that his fellow-clerks had been there yesterday, but they treated him just as before, perhaps with a shade more of respect. He did not see Mr. Reginald Crabbe till Thursday, and then not the slightest reference was made to the affair of Saturday night.

When the worthy man went home to tea, his heart was very light, and his wife was glad to see him looking himself again; but he gave her no reason for the change. He thought once to tell her, but when he thought again there was nothing to tell her. It was only a fright he had, and he was ashamed of how near his weak heart had been to giving way. He had rather grieved than prayed; it was wonderful how God had helped him. But there was nothing to talk about.

Indeed, Mrs. John Dobbie, who was just as plain a person as her husband, only with a comelier face, never knew anything about it till some months had passed, and then John could not help telling her; for in May next Mr. Reginald Crabbe asked John Dobie to come into his private room. "Have you heard, Mr. Dobie, of the situation vacant at Greenock; and do you think you would like its duties?"

"Yes, Mr. Crabbe, I have heard of it," was all that Mr. Dobie could answer. He knew of the death by which it was made vacant, and he knew that it was a place of trust, with a salary of £350 a year. The thought had just crossed his mind how pleasant such a salary would be, but he had instantly reflected how thankful he ought to be to God that his own salary was going on all right.

"And do you think you would like the duties?" said Mr. Crabbe again, rather wondering that no answer had been given to that part of his question.

"The work is, I understand, sir, not so heavy as here, but the responsibilities are greater. Certainly I would like the duties, and I think I could perform them faithfully."

"That's just it, Mr. Dobie. If you are not afraid of the responsibility, I have much pleasure in saying the appointment is yours. We must have a man there with a conscience, and I know you are one who can be thoroughly trusted."

Mr. John Dobie that evening committed the extravagance of riding home in an omnibus—not that he was recklessly discounting the future, but because he was in haste to tell his wife of the approaching removal to Greenock. And when he was doing that, he could not help telling her how it all came about.—The Sunday at Home.

What Ought we to Do?

"Patty, come here, for I want to ask you some curious questions that my mother has been asking me. What ought we to do in march when the wind blows?"

"What ought we to do? Why, hold our bonnets fast that they may not be blown away."

"Yes, but that is not the answer. I will tell you what it is: we ought to love one another."

"Very true, but I did not think of that."

"Now for another question. What ought we to do in April, when the showers fall?"

"Why, put up an umbrella, or run under a tree, or into the house."

"You have not given me the right answer now. This is the right answer: we ought to love one another."

"That is just the same as the other."

"Yes, it is. And now for my last question. What ought we to do when May comes with its flowers?"

"Why, 'love one another,' I suppose."

"You are right, Patty. Let the month be what it may—whether the wind blows, the showers fall and the flowers spring or not, just the same—every month of the year, and every hour of the day, we ought to keep the commandment of the Saviour, 'Love one another.'—Guiding Star.

An English Churchyard.

The tower of the church at Essant Hill was so low that it scarcely seemed to rise above the maples in the hedges. It could not be seen until the last stile of the footpath across the meadows was passed. Church and tower then came into view together on the opposite side of a large open field. A few aged hawthorn trees dotted the sward, and beyond the church the outskirts of a wood were visible, but no dwellings could be seen. Upon a second and more careful glance, however, the chimney of a cottage appeared over a hedge, so covered with ivy as hardly to be separated from the green of the boughs. There were houses, of course, somewhere in Essant, but they were so scattered that a stranger might doubt the existence of the village. A few farmsteads, long distances apart, and some cottages standing in green lanes and at the corners of the fields, were nearly all; there was nothing resembling a "street," not so much as a row. The church was in effect the village, and the church was simply the mausoleum of the Dessant family, the owners of the place. Essant Hill as a name had been rather a problem to the archæologists, there being no hill; the ground was quite level. The explanation at last admitted was that Essant Hill was a corruption of D'Essant-ville. It seemed probable that the population had greatly diminished; because, although the church was of great antiquity, there was space still for interments in the yard. A yew tree of immense size stood in one corner, and was by tradition associated with the fortunes of the family. Though the trunk was much decayed, there were still green and flourishing shoots; so that the superstitious elders said the luck of the house was returning. Within, the walls of the church were covered with marble slabs, and the space was reduced by the tombs of the Dessants, one with a recumbent figure; there were two brasses level with the pavement, and in the chancel hung the faded hatchments of the dead. For the pedigree went back to the battle of Hastings, and there was scarce room for more heraldry. From week's end to week's end the silent nave and aisles remained empty; the chirp of the sparrows was the only sound to be heard there. There being no house attached to the living, the holder could not reside; so the old church slumbered in the midst of the meadows, the hedges, and woods, day after day, year after year. You could sit on the low churchyard wall in early summer under the shade of the elms in the hedge, whose bushes and briars come right over, listening to the whistling of the blackbirds or the varied note of the thrush; you might see the whitethroat rise and sing just over the hedge, or look upwards and watch the swallows and swifts wheeling, wheeling, wheeling in the sky. No one would pass to disturb your meditations, whether simply dreaming of nothing in the genial summer warmth, or thinking over the course of history since the prows of the Norman ships grounded on the beach. If we suppose the time, instead of June, to be August or September, there would not even be the singing of the birds. But as you sat on the wall, by and by the pheasants, tame as chickens, would come up the hedge and over into the churchyard.—Scottish-American Journal.

For some time past there has been considerable agitation in Europe over some plan for cutting a channel from the Mediterranean into the Desert of Sahara, in order to flood a vast depression that has there been discovered, and return it to its supposed original condition of a land-locked sea. The latest advices from Paris indicate that the conversion of the Desert of Sahara into an inland sea might not, after all, be so much of a blessing to the continent of Africa as was claimed when the project was first broached. Its shores would be as arid as those of the Mediterranean in Tripoli, and if the climate should change, the date crop, the principal support of the natives would be ruined. The routes of the caravans from Tunis and Algiers to the interior would also be destroyed, and the whole inland trade deranged. It is also predicted that the pressure of the mass of water would produce perturbations in the subterranean currents which feed the artesain wells in the oases, and might cause them to fail, and thus entail the loss of hundreds of thousands of palm-trees. It is now probable that this project will be abandoned, and a railway from Algeria to the mouth of the Senegal River constructed. The distance from Algiers to Timbuctoo is about 1,600 miles, and the cost of constructing the road is computed at $80,000,000. Soudan contains magnificent rivers, large lakes and innumerable shade-trees. Rice, sugar-cane, cotton and indigo can be easily produced there, and it would be merely a question of time before Algeria and Marseilles would reap the benefit of this cultivation of the Sudan territory. According to surveys made from Affreville to Laghoust, where the Sahara proper begins, there appears to be no more difficulty in the construction of the road than is now met with on the Algerian roads. The French exploring parties have not been farther south than El Goleah yet, about 220 miles from Laghoust, where a dry valley known as Ollua, stretches to the oasis of El Goleah. The Sahara Valley contains a hard, rocky soil, and the hills of sand which at one time were believed to occupy its whole length and breadth cover, it is now known, only the ninth part of its territory. These sandy hills are not even considered obstacles to the construction of a railway, and wherever they are occasionally swept away by the violent winds tunnels could be built so as to protect the road. The supply of water for the use of the engines especially, as at least three trains per day will have to traverse the desert, is what puzzles the minds of those who are planning this railway; but they expect to overcome this by placing on the various trains tanks sufficiently large to contain all the water required during twenty-four hours. A railway across Sahara, and a tunnel through the Isthmus of Panama, certainly ought to gain for French engineers a reputation for boldness and originality in design, if nothing more.—Christian Union.

Leprosy in Scotland.

Dr. Andrew Fergus in his late address on "Preventive Medicine" before the British Medical Association, gave some interesting items about leprosy.

A lady of Lochow built a leper-house at the Gorbals of Glasgow in the year 1350, but more hospitals were founded much earlier, even more than two hundred years before the Glasgow institution. In the burgh records for 1537 we find that the then magistrates ordered four persons supposed to be lepers, "to be viscit, and gif they be found so, to be secludit of the town in the Hospital at the Brigand."

Another relic: In May, 1585, the authorities of Aberdeen built ports to prevent the entrance of people who might bring the infection. Gibbets were erected "one at the nearest cross, one other at the brig of Deo, and third at Haven mouth, that in case any infectit person arrive or repair by sea or land to this brough, or in case ony indweller of this burgh receive, house or harbour, or give meat or drink to the infectit person or persons, the man to be hangit, and the woman to be drownit."—From The N. C. Med. Journal.

Mother.

Despise not your mother when she is old. Age may wear and waste a mother's beauty, strength, senses and estate; but her relation as mother is as the sun when it goes forth in its might, for it is always in the meridian, and knoweth no evening. The person may be gray-haired, but motherly relation is always in its bloom. It may be autumn, yea, winter, but with the mother it is always spring. Alas! how little do we appreciate a mother's tenderness while living! How heedless are we in youth of all her anxiety and kindness! But when she is dead and gone—when the cares and the coldness of this world come withering to our heart—then it is that we think of the mother we have lost.

The Quarantine Inspector of Havana reports two vessels infected with yellow fever as having left for New York and one for New Orleans. During August there were 417 deaths from fever. 150 cases now in the hospitals.

A tenement house in South Boston, occupied principally by Germans, was burned on the night of the 17th inst. Five persons, so far as known, were burned to death or killed by jumping from the roof or upper windows. The number of deaths may prove to be even greater than this. Others were seriously, perhaps fatally, injured.

The yellow fever still holds in Memphis, though the deaths are not so numerous as a few weeks since. Every house in which a case of fever has been developed is being disinfected. The Citizens' Committee, of Chicago, sent $1,000 to the Howards. The Secretary of War announces that, "It has been decided by the President and Cabinet, after full consideration, that since the recent action of Congress, relief for the people in the yellow fever camps must come either from the National Boards of Health or the State authorities. Congress having passed a law on the subject Federal action must be guarded thereby." Dr. Cabell, President of the National Board of Health, telegraphs that "we will supply rations to persons now to go out of Memphis into camps for a period in no case to exceed twenty days." The fever is spreading in the country adjacent to Memphis.

Miserableness.

The most wonderful and marvelous success, in cases where persons are sick or pining away from a condition of miserableness, that no one knows what ails them, (profitable patients for doctors,) is obtained by the use of Hop Bitters. They begin to cure from the first dose and keep it up until perfect health and strength is restored. Whoever is afflicted in this way need not suffer, when they can get Hop Bitters. WORM SPECIFIC

OR

VERMIFUGE.

SYMPTOMS OF WORMS.

THE countenance is pale and leaden-colored, with occasional flushes, or a circumscribed spot on one or both cheeks; the eyes become dull; the pupils dilate; an azure semicircle runs along the lower eye-lid; the nose is irritated, swells, and sometimes bleeds; a swelling of the upper lip; occasional headache, with humming or throbbing of the ears; an unusual secretion of saliva; slimy or furred tongue; breath very foul, particularly in the morning; appetite variable, sometimes voracious, with a knawing sensation of the stomach, at others, entirely gone; fleeting pains in the stomach; occasional nausea and vomiting; violent pains throughout the abdomen; bowels irregular, at times costive; stools slimy; not unfrequently tinged with blood; belly swollen and hard; urine turbid; respiration occasionally difficult, and accompanied by hiccough; cough sometimes dry and convulsive; uneasy and disturbed sleep, with grinding of the teeth; temper variable, but generally irritable, &c.

DR. C. McLANE'S VERMIFUGE will certainly effect a cure.

IT DOES NOT CONTAIN MERCURY in any form; it is an innocent preparation, not capable of doing the slightest injury to the most tender infant.

Each wrapper bears the signatures of C. McLANE and FLEMING BROS.

Insist upon having the genuine DR. C. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS, prepared by Fleming Bros., of Pittsburgh, Pa., the market being full of imitations of the name McLane, spelled differently but same pronunciation.

PREVENT YELLOW FEVER!

It has been well proved that prevention is better than cure. A very simple and effective preventative for Yellow Fever and other fevers has been found in BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTERS. They were used during last season in New Orleans very successfully. The common method of using them was to apply them over the stomach, changing them every week. They are one OF THE MOST ACTIVE ANTISEPTICS and seem to destroy the poison. One reason why they are of special value is that they stimulate the digestion, and thus enable the system to overcome the influence of the malarial poison. They are a cheap and almost certain preventative. Ask your physician about them. Benson's Capcine Plasters are a sure preventative and cure for chills and fever if worn as above. Price 25 cents.

COMMENTARIES ON THE OLD TESTAMENT AND PARTS OF IT.

NO. VIII.

Rev. L. C. Vass, Newbern, N. C.:

In this closing number on the Commentaries on the Old Testament, the reader is invited to a notice of some Monography of varied merit, but all deserving some attention.

1. Burrowes, on the Song of Solomon, has been, for over twenty-five years, before the publick. The work was the result of studies prosecuted amid the "exercises and duties connected with the pastoral charge of a retired congregation." The author proposes, in his introduction, to correct misapprehensions respecting the Song of Songs; and defends the allegorical meaning. This defence is ably made. The interpretation of the "song" is quite scholarly and pious, and the book is well worthy of careful study. It is well known that the pious and laborious pastor, McCheyne, made great use of the striking passages of the Song, as texts, and the Scotch ministry, more than any other are, perhaps, addicted to this custom. It is saying much for the allegorical interpretation, that so many of the most excellent, pious and learned ministers have adopted it, and based on it some of the most affecting views of the truths of the Gospel.

2. Cox on Daniel. Dr. C., not very extensively known in the United States, enjoyed a high, and it appears, well deserved reputation in England. This work on Daniel, though very brief, is highly commendable, both for its excellent portraiture of Daniel, and the sound and pious views of the meaning and extent of the propbet's revelations, respecting the kingdom of Christ. Both Dr. Borrowes, in the volume on the "Song," and Dr. Cox in this on Daniel, rather give expositions than exegetical explanations. But they show their careful study of the original Scriptures, by the results rather than by a parade of learning.

3. Dr. Kay's work on the Psalms was first prepared by the author while connected with the bishop's college, Calcutta. It was, however, enlarged, but as it is now, a volume of only 468 pages 12 mo., of average type, the reader will not regret its having been re-written. It is indeed multum in parvo. We seldom find so much valuable and instructive matter, in so small a space. His "notes" are always suggestive and interesting. The original words of the Psalm are printed in Roman letters, a method of presentation of the Hebrew language, which can have no special value: the reader who can understand the words thus printed, having of course, sufficient acquaintance with the Hebrew to read them, in the Hebrew characters. The Jewish division of the Book of Psalms is accepted by the author, and whether to be regarded as correct or not, he has made no injudicious use of it, but in some cases appears to have found, by it, some striking elucidations of the text. The Psalms, usually regarded as Messianic, are accepted as such, by the writer, and those applied by the writer of the New Testament to our Lord, are most clearly and decidedly evinced to be such by their careful and critical examination. The author has been eminently successful in a judicious use of parallel passages. The only blemish in the part of his plan is one entirely too common, that he sacrifices clearness to brevity, by failing to quote fully, or fully enough to give a clear view of the pertinence of the citations of the passages adduced. Though by full quotations in place of mere references, the bulk of the volume might have been increased, the usefulness to the reader would more than have compensated him for the additional expense in procuring, and the extended time required in using this most excellent work on the Psalms. It ought to be owned by every student of this precious portion of Scriptures.

4. Luther's Exposition of the "Psalms of Degrees" (120-134 inclusive) presents spare evidence of any careful critical study. The work, however, is by no means without important value as a specimen of the practical application of Scripture truth, in instructing the people of his day, in the firm support to the doctrines of the Reformation to be properly gathered from the word of God.

5. Dr. John Miller's commentary on the "Book of Proverbs," is strongly marked by some of the author's peculiarities, as an exegete. He indulges fully (what seems with him, almost a passion) in hunting up and using new meanings. With characteristic candor, he expresses the "thought that some of his readings" may hold. One must examine the book for himself, to discover the extent of innovation on established and current modes of interpretation. But it cannot be denied, that "some of his readings" have much value, and farther the new "readings" are not very often specially injurious. The student who has a good Hebrew Lexicon and some insight into the etymology and use of Hebrew words, need not fear being misled, while all may find much excellent suggestion and instruction, in the work. Whatever may be Dr. Miller's departure from the sound doctrine, this book seems out of sympathy with aught except the words of Gospel truth, and is replete with the homage to the person and impressions of the redeeming work of the gracious Saviour. It is also full of solemn thoughts for regenerate and unregenerate, on the obligations of a Christian's life.

6. Dr. Plumer's "Studies in the Psalms" has become well and favorably known. It is a careful book of the kind, a treasury of information on the various versions and views of leading commentaries. The student has thus material for forming opinions in the light of authorities. Thus, by this work knowledge may be increased, provided the student can retain in memory the names of authors and their views; and he may also increase in wisdom, provided he has sufficient biblical learning and skill to discriminate among the authorities and the mass of divergent opinions. But for a work to aid the student in the art of interpreting Scripture for himself, its commendation must be decidedly moderate. For general readers, the eminently pious and suggestive "observations" and "reflections," which close the notes on each Psalm, have great value, but are too much extended. The sentiments, while excellent, in many cases, cannot be clearly seen to be specially germane to the particular Psalm, which they follow, and in others, though in words, not the same, in scope and purpose very much resemble observations elsewhere presented. If Drs. Alexander and Hengstenburg have erred on one extreme, in giving little or no space for homiletics, Dr. P. has erred on the other in giving too much. The price of the work is moderate and every student will find the use a compensation for the expense of its possession.

7. Stuart's (Dr. Mores) commentary on Proverbs differs materially from Dr. Miller's, mentioned above. About one-third of the work is occupied with an "introduction." This, indeed, is not intrinsically to be regretted, as it is a mine of information on the subject of Proverbs, both inspired and uninspired, both of the Jews and other nations. Still, it may be questioned, whether even for ministers, so much of this kind of "introduction" was needed in connection with this book and as an important contribution to its right interpretation, or to the right training of students in their biblical studies. Dr. Miller has presented in an appendix of about one hundred pages a large number of "original expositions." Dr. Stuart has perhaps more wisely included such contributions in the body of his work. He is very minute and exhaustive in his criticisms. As a work evincing great learning and not a little wisdom, in explaining and illustrating the word of God, no one can properly deny great credit to the author, and a proper use of his labors will greatly add to the benefit of the student.

8. Stuart on Ecclesiastes. Here also we find the author's estimate of "introduction" illustrated by the occupation with it, of one-third of the volume. He has, however, very properly regarded the positive skepticism about the book, and its condemnation as uninspired, on the part of some German scholars, and the doubting tone of more evangelical men, respecting its character, as sufficient reason for a careful examination of the whole subject, and an able and conclusive defence of the inspired authority of the book. Dr. S. brings his knowledge of the Hebrew language to his aid, in minute criticism as well of words as sentences and on the one hand, reports the unconsidered and inconclusive views of rationalism, and on the other, sustains and confirms those which promote sound truth and piety. The work is, indeed, throughout bristling with the statements of new readings and captious criticism, and the author leaves no opportunity unused to defend and expound the true wisdom.

9. Tholuck on the Psalms, translated by Rev. Mr. Mombert, is introduced to us, by the author, in these words, explaining his purpose in its publication: "My object in writing my commentary, was this: To interpret the Book of Psalms in the Spirit of Calvin; and basing it on the helps derived from the newly gained views of modern times, to adapt the volume to the wants of the people and also to professional men, who, besides strictly grammatical commentaries, look for a guide to the spiritual understanding of this portion of Holy writ." The fulfilment of the author's purpose is before us, in a 12 mo. vol., of 500 pages. The effort of the translator, imitating the author, to prevent in the translation of the Psalm, the form of blank verse, is, as most of such efforts are, a failure. The reading of such "verse" is very much the same in rhythmical cadence, as that of our version in its prose form. But the matter of the book is of more importance than its form. In this respect, it is just what Tholuck's reputation would lead us to expect. His naturally strong, amiable affections here appear, with the added grace of the Spirit and his vast learning is subordinated to setting forth for readers of plain minds, in plain language, the results of his study; and while thus adapted to the popular mind, it is far from being unsuited to the professional, since everywhere it is suggestive of profound views of the Divine government and plan, as presented in these time-honored and world-wide known lyrics of the "sweet singer of Israel."

10. Turner's Companion to Genesis, is rather a successful effort towards explaining hard things than a general commentary. The author was the well known professor of Oriental and Biblical Literature in the General Theological Seminary of the Protestant Episcopal Church in New York. He shows in this book how well he knew how to use his vast stores of learning judiciously. That the work has not been more widely known and more fully appreciated is more due to the want of ability in the readers, or to a preference by many of them for the studies of attitudinarianism to those of the matters "touching the King" and His spiritual kingdom.

11. Weiss, Rev. Benjamin, published in 1859 "a new translation and exposition of the Song of Solomon." He was a Christian Jew, and wrote also on Psalms and Ecclesiastes. This work describes the song as historical of the old and prophetical of the new Church. In its general scope and the principle of interpreting its language, it presents the views of the allegorical interpreters, holding to the marriage relation as furnishing the illustration of the relation of the Church and her Lord. It may be perused with profit and an interest heightened by its authorship, by the student of Scripture.

Yours truly, B. M. SMITH.

For the N. C. Presbyterian.

"THE DYING BOY."

It is the faith of the Presbyterian Church that all children who die in infancy, that is before they reach the age of accountability, are elect infants, and are "regenerated and saved by Christ through the Spirit, Who worketh when and where and how He pleaseth." This position can be established by the teachings of sacred Scripture. It appears reasonable to the reflecting mind, and is confirmed by the testimony of religious experience. Now it may be freely admitted that too much of our Sabbath school literature is not only overdrawn but fictitious, and it may be tauntingly said "all the good children die," still the fact cannot be disproved that there have been numerous, well authenticated, remarkable death scenes in the history of young children, which testify fully unto the wonderful workings of the Holy Spirit.

Little Freddie T. was a remarkably bright and healthy boy, aged seven years, and an only child. His parents were members of the Church, and they sought to train him as a child of the covenant in the nurture and admonition of the Lord, and though of such tender years little Freddie had manifested great interest for sacred things and fondness for Bible stories. The great destroyer, diphtheria, came into our midst and little Freddie became a victim. For several days the indications were favorable and there were hopes of a speedy recovery. During this period I saw him several times, and was surprised to see how patiently and cheerfully he endured his sufferings. It soon became evident that in spite of every remedy he grew worse, and in a few days we saw that there was no chance for him. As his end drew nigh, on account of his tender age it was not thought necessary to inform him that he could not live. For fear it might alarm him and hasten the end nothing had been said in his presence about death, nor had he been allowed to perceive the anxiety of his friends. Several hours before he died he beckoned his parents to his side and in a faint whisper said, "Papa, mama, I am going to die, I am going to heaven, I am going to Jesus, I want to leave this troublesome world; I am sorry to leave you, but I want to go to Jesus." He tenderly pressed their hands, bade them and their attending friends an affectionate farewell and sent messages of parting to absent relatives, then he called for his little Bible, pressed it to his heart and lips and begged that it might be read to him. About this time I came in, and never will I forget that scene. There lay the dying boy with eyes preternaturally bright, fixed upon the Bible reader, and, though breathing with feeble and labored breath, intent on hearing every word. He acknowledged my salutation by a slight movement of the head, fixed his searching eyes on my face and in a faint and husky voice whispered to me, "Read." I took the book, selected passage after passage, and whenever I stopped reading he would look at me again and say, "Read." After nearly an hour had been spent in reading I prayed with him, and left him to visit another sick child. When I came back it was all over, and little Freddie had passed from the "reading and trusting" to the "seeing and knowing," had gone to that precious Saviour who said, "Suffer little children to come unto me," and who, I believe, had sent His Spirit to prepare him for that "going." As I gazed upon the peaceful face of the dead child I felt devoutly sure, "It is well with the child." As I went away musing on this remarkable conduct there came into my mind the words of the psalmist, "Out of the month of babes and sucklings hast thou ordained strength." C. M. P.

GIVE SOMETHING.

Yes, reader, give something to somebody. God gives. Christ gives. The angels give. The earth, the air, the sea, the sun, give. All nature gives continually. A thousand gratuities flow to our hands. A thousand gifts are freely bestowed upon us every day. All we have or hope for of good is of gift. Gifts are pleasant and profitable. They bless the giver; they gladden the receiver. They betoken kindness, and beget love. Opulence, patrimony and wealth among men are unequally distributed, hence gifts and charities are needful to maintain a proper and healthful equilibrium of possessions. Without them the rich become unsympathetic and the poor suffer. Neither are independent of the other: the rich rely on the poor for toil and drudgery, the poor on the rich for pay and sustenance. All classes are dependent on God.

I am satisfied from observation and experience that the less a person gives the less they will feel disposed to give, while on the other hand if one continually draw on his charities, his benevolence will increase proportionally to his gifts. Beneficence grows by cultivation: let the divine plant alone and it will die. No better way to become miserly can be invented, than to withhold perpetually. Poor Christians ought to give, to afford him who said, "Give and it shall be given unto you," a chance to repay them on his own principle. Some believers are poor, always were poor, and always will be poor, just because they never give anything to anybody. In proportion as their gifts are withheld and their faith in God dies out, in the same ratio will these stingy Christians grow poorer and more niggardly. "We milk the cows," says the dairyman, "to keep them from drying up." Even so men draw on their purses for every good object, lest the milk of human kindness fail, and the sordid, parsimonious spirit become utterly predominant.

Do not wait to be solicited to give: go out of your way to perform the gracious deed. Give not with a frown, but with a smile. Give ungrudgingly. Do not give irregularly nor at random, but systematically and methodically. Give as you would pray: it is a Christian duty. Give away what you do not need: and sometimes, at least, give what you do need; only this last is sacrifice. Study that word, Give: perhaps you do not know what it signifies. It is used hundreds of times in the Bible to describe a donation from God to man. To the richest church in Asia, Paul said, "What have ye that ye did not receive?" O remember, that "every good and perfect gift" mankind enjoys, is from the good Father in heaven, and like Him who lavishes gifts on saint and sinner alike, practice mercy, charity, and benevolence. Kill the stingy disposition stone dead. Give all you can, give kindly, give now. Give with a firm trust in Almighty God. "Give and it shall be given unto you, good measure, pressed down, shaken together and running over." (Luke vi: 38.) Do it. D. T. TAYLOR.

THE KINGLY ONE, THE STRANGER.

Listen! listen! He is there,
Knocking, knocking, worn with care;
'Tis the Kingly One, the Stranger,
He who came from glory down;
Cradled once in Bethl'em's manger,
Wearing now of thorns a crown.

Listen! listen! thee He seeks;
Knocking, knocking; yes, He speaks;
What! poor soul, dost thou not know Him?
With night dews His locks are wet,
Surely, thou wilt kindness show Him;
What thou ow'st, dost thou forget?

Listen! listen! at the door,
Knocking, knocking, o'er and o'er:
"Sinner, sinner, long I've sought thee!"
This He says to you and me:
"On the cross, with blood I've bought thee;
Wilt thou not my foll'wer be?"

Listen! listen! still the same:
Knocking, knocking, 'twas thy name;
Hark His accents, soft and tender!
Yes, I will unbar the door;
Enter! I make full surrender;
Reign within me, evermore.

—Rev. J. E. Rankin, D.D., in Congregationalist.

THE GIFT OF TALKING.

The world talks a great deal too much. It would be better for all parties if nine in every ten of the "winged words" flying about in this world had their feathers clipped amongst men, or even amongst women, who have a right to a larger allowance of words.

There is, however, one exception to this charge of over-talking, husbands generally do not talk too much to their wives. A man is a fool who lies at a woman's feet, makes her his idol, worships her very caprices, and adores the most unreasonable of her frowns. This is going too far; and no sensible wife would covet such vicarious idolatry. But the opposite extreme is to be equally guarded against. The Irish have a homely proverb, "He hangs up his fiddle behind the door when he comes in," is the way in which they indicate a man who is social and pleasant everywhere but in his own family. Literary men have the reputation of not being over social with their wives, and perhaps sometimes they deserve it: John Milton gave his wife so little of his company that a few weeks after marriage she ran away from him, and went home to her parents, and honest John had to promise amendment before she would return. Lord Byron and Charles Dickens also quarreled with their wives and separated from them. Southey was in the habit of shutting himself up all day in his study, so that Wordsworth said of him, that "his library was his wife." It is probable, also, that professional men, as ministers, doctors, lawyers, are chargeable more or less with the fault of not talking enough to their wives. No doubt the wife herself is sometimes to blame for this want of sociality. She perhaps takes little interest in her husband's pursuits, and manifests no sympathy with him in his toils and trials. A man should if possible give up some time every day to the pleasure of his wife's society. And if a man finds pleasure in his wife's company at any time I take it for granted he would wish to spend the evening with her. When I sit with a woman I try to entertain her both with my wit and my wisdom, and am happy to hear her talk, even though she should chance to be my own wife, and never thinking of tolerating silence for one instant. Good health, good spirits, and a contented mind, will change Robinson Crusoe's island into Fonthill Abbey, or Abbotsford, and a good chat with one's wife is a great help to such valuable possessions. The benefit also will be mutual. The prospect of a pleasant talk with her husband in the evening will cheer a sensible woman through the labors of the day, and strengthen her to do battle with a whole host of household cares and vexations.

When a number of people get together the gift of talking is very important. But there is one evil to be guarded against, and it is this, monopolising the conversation in company. Even good talkers are sometimes guilty of this breach of manners. Dr. Johnson is regarded as the master of the art of conversation; he made it a matter of careful study, but he could not talk without a subject teeming with elements of known contradictory opinions, and he would listen to nobody but himself. Coleridge, too, was in the habit of monopolising the conversation. Unless he could have all the talk he would have none. But this is not conversation, it is not talking with the company, but talking to the company. The great difficulty in conversation is raising a continual succession of suitable topics, and this should be done so as to call forth the talking powers of others.

Lord Bacon says, "Let a man have read, thought, studied as much as he may, rarely will he reach his possible advantages as a ready man, unless he has exercised his powers much in conversation." The gift of talking well is one of the elegancies of social life, an important part of good breeding, both a benefit and a luxury. Yet this important accomplishment is not learned and studied as it should be, while worthless things have been exalted to the position of arts. Taking soup gracefully was once raised to the rank of a science, and lessons on the subject were given by a Frenchman in London. Let all, then, but especially young people, try to acquire the gift of talking well, which is such a valuable ornament of social life, and an organ of festal delight.—Rev. W. Harvey, Maryport.

HOME MISSIONS.

The Secretary of Home Missions calls earnestly for the formation of Ladies' Home Mission Circles in all our churches. The doors opened to us for spreading the gospel at home are many and effectual. Our Assembly calls upon the church to double her gifts to this cause this year. None doubt the duty of helping it: it is Christ's cause among our own countrymen.

But it may be asked: Why do we need Ladies' Mission Circles for it? The Church has her annual contribution in every congregation. Every pastor and session are, in theory, standing agents for this, as for all the other works of the Church. The answer is: That it is impossible to make all good people alike. There are always a few, more intelligent, more zealous, more energetic than the many. The many are not unwilling to give something to Home Missions; and they may be moved, inspired, and led by more zealous friends to do much. But if they be left to themselves, they will postpone or forget the work, so that their contributions will be wholly lost to it. The real use of these circles, then, is to bring the forgetful many into contact with the active few, or to enable the better informed members to communicate their impulse to the mass of the members. Experience proves the value of these Circles; for wherever one is kept alive in a Church, the contributions are doubled or trebled without anyone's being overburdened.

The points to be observed, in beginning one, are these: The organization must be very simple, with very few rules. They need only a presiding member, and a treasurer who shall also be secretary, and can preside if necessary.

The meetings should not be onerous, especially in the country. Members should be allowed to send their monthly gift, if it is not convenient to attend in person.

The monthly gift required by the rule should be very small; in poor churches, not more than a dime per month per member. But members should be encouraged to give more if they can.

Every member should promise personally to be a canvasser for the cause.

There should be regular members (ladies only), and associate members, who are not required to attend meetings. These may be either men or women. This widens the resources of the society.

The Circle should be a working body, and provide for all members who have time, some work; sewing, knitting, millinery, preserving or pickling fruits, &c., by which they shall earn money for home missions.

Now, there is not a church in town or country, so weak or so scattered, that the good women may not sustain such a circle as this. Is there a week-day prayer-meeting, or is Saturday a preparation day for worship preliminary to the Sabbath? For convenience, let the ladies of the country churches appoint their monthly meetings a half-hour before or after that service, and have full notice given from the pulpit. Their work will be social, edifying, cheerful and happy; and they will be surprised how much money they will send to Dr. McIlwaine, and how easily.

Now, somebody get up and begin, in every church of our connection, or at least in every one which has not a Foreign Mission's circle. If everybody waits for everybody, nothing will be done—souls are "perishing for lack of knowledge." Brother pastor, pick out the right ones.—R. L. D., in Central Presbyterian.

It is the presence and favor of the Lord that transmutes the ills of life into occasions and seasons of actual joy. A king in his palace may be miserable, and a beggar in his hovel may be happy, not because there is anything in the palace to create misery or anything in the hovel to cause joy. No. The opposite would rather be the case. The king is miserable because he has only a palace; the beggar is happy because he has more than a hovel.—Christian at Work.

PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH OF GOLDSBORO, NORTH CAROLINA.

The following article relative to the Presbyterian church of Goldsboro, N. C., we copy from the Messenger of that town. While very concise, it seems to be a very complete historical narrative, and worthy of the attention of any future historian of the Presbyterian church in North Carolina.

Waynesboro referred to was formerly the county seat of Wayne county, but on the settlement of Goldsboro (a few miles away) rapidly fell back and has long since disappeared.

Mr. W. H. Groves, referred to below, is now a minister of the Presbyterian Church in Virginia, but was at the time of supplying the church in Goldsboro a licentiate of Wilmington Presbytery:

"Our information in regard to the organization of this Church is extremely meagre. In fact we have no account of any service having been held at any time in Waynesboro. It is more than probable that such services were held by various ministers previous to the incorporation of Goldsboro, but of the names of the Reverend gentlemen who officiated, we have been unable to obtain any information whatever.

The Presbyterian Church of Goldsboro was organized on the 17th of February, 1855, by the Fayetteville Presbytery, with eleven members. At this time Mr. Willis Hall, and N. B. Ball were ordained as Ruling Elders.

At this time and for months afterwards Rev. D. T. Towles preached for the congregation once in every month holding services in the Town Hall, then the centre of the town. In February, 1857, the Rev. John Nott took charge of the congregation, and it was during his ministration that the present house of worship was completed. This building was chiefly erected through the energy and liberality of Mr. Willis Hall and Mr John Everett. The building, with the exception of the belfry, is entirely of brick and is admirably adapted to the purposes for which it was designed. The interior handsomely arranged, the pews are comfortably constructed, both below and in the galleries, and the acoustic proportions of the house are perfect.

In the year 1857, the congregation lost, by death its first elder, and Mr. J. R. Dyer was elected to the Eldership, and continued to fill this office until 1860, when Dr. Samuel A. McDowell succeeded him.

In March 1861, the church at Everettsville was dissolved and the congregation united with the church in Goldsboro. During the year 1861, Rev. S. H. Isler, assumed charge of the congregation, and continued to fill the pulpit, with occasional interruptions, during the trying scenes of the late war, and remaining as pastor until 1867. Mr. Isler was succeeded by Rev. L. McKinnon, who remained as pastor until 1872. During his ministry, characterized as it was by his great energy, the church received a new impetus, and the congregation was materially enlarged. It was due not only to powerful rhetorical efforts of Mr. McKinnon that his success was so noticeable, but to his inherent industry and zeal, by the power of which he awakened his congregation to a knowledge of their duty

Upon the resignation of Rev. L. McKinnon, the services of the church were rendered, for a short time, by that venerable and lovely christian gentlemen, the Rev. N. Z. Graves, to whom may be applied without alteration and in all truth, the lines,

"None knew him but to love him,
None named him but to praise."

Mr. Graves being at that time engaged in teaching, at the College, and being unable to discharge all the duties of the pastorate, it was deemed judicious to secure the services of a regular minister. The Rev. Mr. Groves was thereupon invited to take charge of the congregation. He accepted the call, but filled the pulpit for a short time, when he resigned. At his resignation the Rev. Mr. Graves re-assumed the pastoral charge and continued to fill the pulpit until his removal from Goldsboro.

Mr. Graves, upon his leaving Goldsboro, took charge of the Warrenton Female Academy, which institution he conducted until his death, which occurred in the early part of the present year, regretted by all who knew him. He was a gentlemen of profound learning, a pure christian, living always a righteous and godly life, and passed to his rest with a conscience void of offense to all men.

During the four years following the retirement of Mr. McKinnon, but little progress was made in accession to the church, owing to the frequent changes and the desultory character of the services, but the able services of Rev. Mr. Graves, his terse and comprehensive sermons, and above all his godly and christian walk in life, left an indelible impression upon the congregation which is now developing into blessed results.

In January, 1876, the Rev. B. F. Marable assumed charge of the congregation and has since filled the pulpit to the entire satisfaction of his flock. Much faithful labor has been done by his predecessors, which it was his privilege to enjoy, but he has not been content to enjoy simply the work of other hands, but has endeavored to fill out the measure of their works. Since his advent among our community, Mr. Marable, has by his courtesy and urbanity in social intercourse, no less than by his vigorous and logical sermons in the pulpit, endeared himself to all our citizens.

The present surroundings of the congregation are in many respects more encouraging. During the past four years the number of communicants has been more than doubled. Though there has been no large accession at any time, the result of special effort, there have been additions from time to time, showing a steady and healthy growth of the church. There has also been great progress in christian liberality. For the past several years the congregation has raised for church purposes, not less than $20 for each communicant. This fact alone, indicates far more than ordinary benificence, since it is well known that a number of the members are in limited circumstances.

But the most promising augury for the development of the interests of the church is the number of brightly promising youth connected with the congregation; of these, there are more than one hundred. These of sufficient age are being trained and educated in the Sabbath Schools, under the direction of Mr. T. B. Hyman as superintendent. Under the blessings of Divine Providence, the church has every season to be thankful.

The congregation is united and faithful; and has every reason to hope for a bright future.

The present officers of the church are: Elders John Everitt, J. W. Gulick, S. W. Caldwell, T. B. Hyman, Dr. George L. Kirby; Deacons H. W. Burwell and L. H. Castex.

A brief epitome of the church will more fully show its progress. Four years ago it numbered thirty-nine members, it now numbers ninety members.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

FOREIGN.

Gleaned from exchanges:

The native churches of the American Board in Ceylon contributed last year $2,790 47, an average of $3 15 for each member.

A dispatch from Rome says that the negotiations with Germany have abruptly terminated, and the Falk laws will remain intact.

The Bishop of Madagascar has arrived in England and hopes to obtain £5,000 for the erection of a permanent church at Antananaviro, the capital city of the country.

The Dean of Brussels has issued a circular forbidding Roman Catholics to send their children to the public schools because they have been condemned by the Pope and the bishops.

The United Presbyterian Church of Scotland has no less than eighteen missionaries in Jamaica alone, and nearly 7,000 communicants, add also does a great home mission work.

On Sabbath, at Ditton, near Liverpool, the Roman Catholic Bishop of Liverpool ordained twelve German priests, exiled under the Falk laws, who have finished their ecclesiastical education at Ditton.

Cardinal Manning, who returned to Liverpool on Tuesday, from where he had been summoned post haste to baptize the Duke of Norfolk's heir, at a public meeting described that nobleman as "the first layman of the Roman Catholic Church in England." Lothair has fallen in estimation.

Intelligence has been received that the natives in the neighborhood of Livingstonia and farther north on the west side of Lake Nyassa, at the Sanitarium of Kaningina, are flocking under the protection of the Free Church mission stations in large numbers. At the latter place upwards of 2000 are under the care of the missionaries. The rainfall this year on the shores of the lake is reported to be much greater than during the past two years.

The Vatican is cultivating friendly relations with the civil powers. In Russia the Russian Catholic clergy have received instructions to co-operate with the government within the limits imposed by their sacred office to combat the plague of Socialism. To the King of the Belgians the Pope himself has written, assuring His Majesty that he desires peace and concord above all things; and further to show the goodwill of the Vatican, candidates preferred by the government have been selected for two vacant dioceses.

The Christian Intelligencer says: From a correspondent in Paris, we believe to be trustworthy, we have the following startling information: "One of the most beloved and godly of the French pastors, M. Guillaume Monod, is declaring himself to be the Christ, and has had the idea for forty years. For nearly twenty years M. Monod, who is the brother of the late Adolph and Frederick Monod, and uncle to Theodore Monod, has been the pastor of the Reformed Church in this city, and for the same length of time the President of the French Branch of the Evangelical Alliance. And, what is very surprising, the soi-disant Christ has a very respectable following, and some of his disciples are rich people. Lately a pastor has been converted to his views, and is preaching them. I have known M. Monod very intimately for a number of years.

Archdeacon Denison writes that two meetings of Churchmen who prefer to keep the Prayer-book as it will be held in London, Thursday, November 13, at Exeter Hall, 2 p. m.; at St. James' Hall, 7 p. m. The names of chairman will be published with the resolutions in good time. The order of the meetings excludes, 1, all comment upon the Prayer-book in whole or in part, favorable or unfavorable; 2, all controversial discussion of any portion of its contents. The object of them being simply to make collective demonstration of weight and volume against the attempt to alter the Prayer-book now publicly in preparation, and, in important particulars of a formal character, already far advanced; and to declare that, regard being had to all the circumstances and conditions of the case, it is not expedient to make any such attempt at this time.

At Hammersmith there has been a very successful experiment made lately of the Gospel under canvass. It came about thus: A lady bought a plot of ground, and it was intended to erect a wooden structure as a Gospel Hall. The Board of Works objected, and the scheme appeared likely to fall through, when an offer was made of a large marquee, in which services have been held; and the very novelty of the thing has drawn large numbers of people to the services, which were held nightly, with a sermon at each. Not only so, but those interested in them patrolled the neighborhood singing hymns, so as to let everybody know what they were about. There was a sort of picnic air about the thing which proved a great "draw" in a neighborhood not very accessible to ordinary ecclesiastical influences; and the promoters of the plan feel deeply indebted to the Board for their opposition.

Nestling in a leafy nook of the western Carpathian slopes, the cozy little village of Czik-Szent-Domokos serves as an interesting illustration of Papal inefficiency. For two hundred and eighty years this hamlet and its communal district have lain under the ban of Rome, which does not appear to have interfered materially with the prosperity and happiness of their inhabitants. In the year 1599 Pope Clement VIII. pronounced the major excommunication, according to the text of the formula composed by St. Ernulphus upon the commune of Szent-Domokos, where Cardinal Bathori had been assassinated, and the supreme curse of that Pontiff has never since been taken off the luckless village by his successors. In 1607 the Szent-Domokosians, panic-stricken by a severe visitation of the plague, which had swept away all the inhabitants of the commune but sixty-five, petitioned the Bishop of Karlsburg to intercede with the Holy See on their behalf, to the end that the ban of the Church might be raised. His Grandeur promised to plead their cause at Rome, but imposed upon them, as a preliminary condition to their possible forgiveness, the observance by themselves and their descendants for one hundred years of a strictly penitential fasting diet. They promised to perform this atonement for their sins; but, reflecting that their own privations would avail nothing for the salvation of their children's souls if their children should fail to fast when their turn should come to mortify the flesh, the Szent-Domokosians went on eating meat as usual, for, they justly reasoned, who would be able at the expiration of the penitential century to prove to the satisfaction of the Holy See that the fasting regulations had been faithfully observed all the time? Their recalcitrance, however, was duly noted by successive Pontiffs, and its consequence has been that the Szent-Domokosians of the present day still live, and live very comfortably, under the dread interdict of the Roman Church.

RELIGION IS LIFE.

In one of Dr. Taylor's late sermons he says:

"Religion is a mattter for the entire life, for the family and for the world, as well as for the chnrch; and the servant who "sweeps beneath the mat" ont of regard to Jesus, does a thing which, in its own place, is as acceptable to him and as holy as when she takes into her hand the sacramental symbols of bread and wine. This divorce between religion and life is one of the deadliest heresies of our times."

Dr. Taylor is right. No Christian will deny it. And the world, outlying, never forgets it. There is no instrnmentality so powerful to impress the great concern upon the minds of sinners as the logic of a holy life. It is God's trnth under the influences of the Holy Spirit, made manifest to men. The religion that confines itself to the forms of religious worship, that assnmes its garb on the Sabbath and wears it in the honse of God, but casts it off in the counting room and the workshop, that gives no heed to the fatherless and the widow, that seeing the suffering by the wayside passes by on the other side, of what avail is that?

The heart mnst be right. Truly, there can be no holy life that does not spring from the indwelling of the Holy Ghost in the heart. Bnt holy affections will find their normal exercise in even the minntest details of daily life. In great concerns which the world cannot bnt note, religion may be counterfeited, and often is; but in the little acts of life: the kindly word, the faithful, willing service in the various relations of life, the modest act of charity, where no earthly reward is possible, not even gratitnde is probable, where in all the motive is but to please the Savionr, there true religion is. Christianity, Christ in the soul, does exist along with much of imperfection, much of sin—not becanse of religion, bnt apart from it, in spite of it—and never reaches its perfection here, bnt it is still true and will be ever true that the test of religion is the life of its possessor. Is it not one of the greatest needs of the Church that we shonld recognize the truth that conversion means tnrning from sin nnto holiness—living for Christ?

MR. MILLS' BOOK.

ABOUT CHILDREN: Blood and Diet; Walking and Talking; Books and Schools. By J. H. Mills, Superintendent of the Orphan Asylum, Oxford, N. C. Single copies 10 cents, three copies 25 cents. 1879.

This little pamphlet of abont twenty-five pages is jnst at this time rnnning the gaunt-let of criticism. In some qnarters it is made a subject of unsparing denunciation and in others it receives unstinted praise. In fairness and justice it is entitled to neither all the commendation that its friends bestow npon it, nor all of the censnre with which its enemies visit it.

It is hardly possible to do jnstice to this little book without premising of its anthor that he is an earnest Christian man, that he is occnpying a position for which he is probably better fitted than any other man in the State, and that he is there, against his own wishes, in deference to public opinion freely expressed.

Mr. Mills is a man not of a single idea, bnt of one idea so preponderating that he may be said to be overwhelmed in it. All other ideas are subordinated to that; consequently he looks at matters too mnch in one light, and not unfreqnently he gets distorted views. Bnt it is, after all, the men of one idea, in the above sense, who accomplish their work. It behooves those who approve the grand charity represented, when they wonld criticise the pamphlet, to remember the pecnliarities of the author.

The book is written in the qnaint style peculiar to its writer. Matters staid and solemn are associated with things exceedingly trivial and common place, bnt there is in the mode of expression often a sharp directness, which tells on the reader—sometimes tells to disadvantage. The merit of the style consists in the effect prodnced. Ideas one can hardly call new, but still unnoticed in the bustle of life, are brought to the front and nrged upon attention. The reader sees what he always knew, vividly presented in the black and white characters of print, and gives to the subject thought it conld not otherwise obtain. On the whole Mr. Mills' style is an eccentricity, well suiting Mr. Mills, bnt not to be commended to those who lack Mr. Mills' earnestness of purpose and zeal for his work.

The sermon by a sinner is, we think, a very clear case where the sermon was written first and the text chosen afterwards. If we may be pardoned, the text is not the best selection and the application is too indirect. Not ourselves a member of the Masonic fraternity, we nevertheless highly respect them, and have not spared our praise for the part they have taken in the support of the Orphan Asylum. All that Mr. Mills says of them is deserved no doubt, but they are placed in contrast to the Christian Chnrch in a way calculated to create a false impression with regard to Masonry, and to do marked injnstice to the Church.

We have written freely, becanse onr high regard for Mr. Mills himself and for the orphan cause seemed to demand it. The pamphlet will succeed throngh the kind attentions of the press, in bringing the work done at Oxford to public attention, and the chnrches will probably, as heretofore, enjoin charity upon their members; bnt the modes of distributing this beneficence and the special object to which it shall be distribnted will hardly be chnnged; at least each individnal Chnrch will decide for itself in this matter.

HOW IS IT?

We hear much of Sabbath desecration elsewhere, and now it is reported to ns that, in the city of Wilmington, in a club room at the intersection of two of our principal streets the Sabbath is spent in playing billiards and cards. Are onr local authorities aware of this? Are those who engage in this desecration of the Sabbath, utterly regardless of public opinion? Have they no regard for the laws of the land?

A HOPEFUL WORK.

Romanism seems to be on the decline among the French citizens of Canada. The Canada Presbyterian says:

"Our readers will rejoice to learn that there is at the present time qnite a movement towards Protestantism among many of the priests and ecclesiastics of the Church of Rome in the province of Qnebec. We learn that the office of the Board of French Evangelization in Montreal has recently been visited by a nnmber of snch, inqniring concerning the teachings of the Bible, and that within the past few weeks one priest, two Christian brothers and a friar, have abjured Romanism and placed themselves under the care of the Board. In addition to these others are studying the Bible, and will, we trust, soon be led by the Spirit of God to embrace the faith of the Gospel."

Further the journal referred to states that there are evidences that many of the Romish clergy are dissatisfied with the teachings of Rome, and would break loose from their thraldom bnt for the uncertainty of their welcome among Protestants. It is difficnlt indeed for Protestants to appreciate the difficulties which environ those situated as are any of those who, having been bred Roman Catholics, determine to renounce the errors of Rome. Tho difficnlties are vastly increased when snch persons belong to the Romish priesthood. The case is thus well presented:

"Apart altogether from the relentless persecntion of the Romish hierarchy and the terrible bitter opposition of relatives and friends, they have to face the question, how to obtain the means of support on becoming Protestants? Driven from the society of former friends, where are they to find a home? Penniless, with no clothing even bnt their priestly robs, where are they to find food and raiment? Persecnted by those of their former faith, to whom are they to tnrn for sympathy and for that Christian nurtnre and care they so much need? Can it be wondered at that many of them hesitate to take the decisive step? Is the wonder not rather that any should take it with the almost absolnte certainty of the trials and obstacles they mnst encounter and the sacrifices they mnst make?"

These converts look chiefly to the Presbyterian Chnrch for sympathy and counsel, and the Presbyterian snggests that a home for ex-priests should be established under the snpervision of a prndent, loving, earnest Christian gentleman, where they would be warmly welcomed and protected, and surrounded by a healthy Christian influence.

Those who have recently separated from the Romish Chnrch are under the care of the Board of French Evangelization, and for some of them positions have been assigned in the French mission schools of the Presbyterian Church. A strong appeal is made for aid to assist the Board in providing for those who place themselves under its care, and also for the sympathy of all Christians in their behalf.

THE STATE FAIR.

We acknowledge the courtesy of an invitation to the Nineteenth Annual Fair of the North Carolina Agricnltnral Society. We had previously received a pamphlet containing Rnles and Regnlations and Schednle of Premiums of the Society. The State Fair is one in which, as citizens of North Carolina, we must feel a certain degree of pride. The approaching Fair will snrpass in popnlarity any that has preceded it, if there is dne appreciation of the efforts making to secnre pnblic favor.

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

The Biblical Recorder says:

"Two Presbyterian preachers in Texas have invented a new religion. They are now writing a new Bible. Will some brother find ont where these two men were born and educated? We wish to know."

We cannot answer onr contemporary precisely, bnt we furnish the following from the St. Louis Presbyterian:

"The above fanatics, with several others of like stripe, were Cnmberland Presbyterian ministers in Texas, bnt withdrew from that Chnrch, as we nnderstand the matter, in their folly, and are now at the head of a new thing called the "Tabernacle of the Coming Lord." Between this tribe and the "holiness band," the people of Corsicana and vicinity have been sorely tried dnring the past few months."

"Boarders.—Rev. Dr. and Mrs. William Brown expect to reside in Fredericksburg, Va., this winter. In connection with Miss Caruthers and Mrs. Davis as teachers, they desire to receive into the household, after October 1st, two or four school girls, whose education and health will be under carefnl snpervision. Address for terms, MISS CARUTHERS,
"Fredericksburg, Va."

In calling attention to the advertisement the Central says what it is perfectly safe to endorse—"The pupils will be highly privileged who shall secnre the advantages offered."

We are informed that Rev. Dr. R. Nall, whose work in the western part of onr Synod has been so blessed, is a native of North Carolina. He was born in Montgomery connty, and there lived until he was eighteen years of age.

The Presbyterian (Philadelphia) says of the article on "Secnlarized Education" in the September nnmber of the Princeton Review from the pen of Rev. R. L. Dabney:

"The most incisive article is Dr. Dabney's, and in it he stands fast by his colors as a Christian man."

A brother who has been sending ns new snbscribers, cheers ns thus:

"I hope to be able to send yon other snbscribers soon. I want the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN in every family of my charge."

The family of the late Judge John Kerr is left in very destitnte circnmstances. The religions books in his family are offered for sale. The family consists of Mrs. Kerr and five little children and they are homeless. An appeal is made to the Baptists of North Carolina to raise fnnds to pnrchase the honse now occnpied by Mrs. Kerr in Reidville. We snggest that Judge Kerr was not only a worthy member of the Baptist Chnrch, bnt a distingnished North Carolina and a Christain gentleman, and it wonld be most becoming and proper for all citizens to aid in this work.

Messrs. James Adger & Co. and Messrs. J. E. Adger & Co., of Charleston, S. C., whose failnre was reported a few days since, occnpied in business circles, not only in Charleston bnt elsewhere, the highest reputation not only for integrity bnt for Christian benevolence. The Southwestern Presbyterian says: "It will be a satisfaction to them that the best portion of their wealth is secnre, namely, the good name they have won, and the good deeds they have done."

Richmond Christian Advocate:

One of the nnmerons editors of the Religious Herald mnst "have hay on his horns." He throws ont a defiant challenge to his "Pedobaptist brethren."—He is ready to try conclusions with them. Listen:

"Let us settle it. We call npon our Pedobaptist brethren either to produce the passage in Greek, which proves Baptizo means to sprinkle or pour, or else admit that it has no snch meaning."

We will ventnre a timid observation.

It seems to ns that Baptizo in Matthew iii: 2—"He shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost"—also in Mark i: 8, Lnke iii: 16, John i: 33, Acts i: 5, means "to pour," for the mode of that baptism is described to wit: "to ponr ont npon, "fell on all of them," "shed on," "sat upon each of them," etc.

We trnst this gentle answer will turn away his wrath and sauge him, as it were.

NEWS NOTES.

We specially invite news from all quarters for this column.

Onr correspondent W. S. L, says in a note:

"You will be glad to hear that we have at length entered onr new house of worship at Buffalo church, the fourth, I nnderstand, built on the same site. The honse is finished—not yet furnished. It has been built if not in "troublous," at least in very hard times, and it will cost us a great effort to finish paying for it. Our people do not think it ought to be dedicated until it is fully paid for. Will you not come then, and tell of onr gladness and thanksgiving—and how pretty and convenient a church we have? We began the work with great enthusiasm, and have met with difficnlties and discnragements sometimes, bnt every one now feels thankful, satisfied and glad. May the Spirit constantly abide within its walls."

We call attention to the notice of Synod, and especially to the request of W. H. Morrison, Chairman of the Committee of Arrangements. It adds very much to the comfort of the congregation entertaining to have prompt response to notices.

MT. ZION CHURCH, LOUISIANA.

By Presbyterial appointment, held a meeting with Mt. Zion church, Cadd's parish, the last days of August and the first week of this month. Results:

CHURCH AT HAYWOOD, N. C.

Rev. P. R. Law writes: "I have just closed an interesting series of services in my church here. There have been six additions to the church. Others are inquiring the way of life still."

Mr. F. P. Ramsay, who recently gradnated with such high distinction (and of whom the papers announced that he wonld enter Union Theological Seminary, N. Y.,) will study at Colnmbia. He writes that all of the Faculty are present and twenty-one students are on the grond. Davidson College opened with an increased attendance of abont one-third.

We are requested to say that all the lines of public transportation in the State have been applied to for customary courtesies to the delegates of Synod. The following have responded: C. F. & Y. V. R. R., (Fayetteville to Gnlf), C. C. R'y, (Wilmington to Shelby), pass delegates and return for one first-class fare; W. N. C. R. R., (from Salisbury to Swannanoa Gap): "Members of Synod, on paying fare to Statesville, will be returned free of charge." Atlantic Coast Line, 3 cents per mile each way. R. & D. R. R. (Goldsboro to Charlotte) says: "All agents in North Carolina are instructed to sell to delegates and visitors to the meeting, round trip tickets to Salisbury at 6 cents per mile. The tickets will be on sale on October 20th, 21st and 22nd, and will be good to return within ten days from date of sale. The certificates printed on the tickets mnst be filled up and signed by the Stated Clerk or the tickets will not be good to return."

Other answers will be published as received.

From the New Orleans Democrat we clip the following with regard to the work of Rev. A. J. Witherspoon:

"The energy and industry which have been displayed by the Rev. A. J. Witherspoon in his noble work for the social and mental advancement and moral improvement of the sailors have met with a bonnteous reward. The Bethel, on Fulton street, near Jackson, is known throughont the world and revived in the memories of many hundreds of those who go down to the sea in ships and who are thonsands of miles away. From a small beginning the Bethel has, through the generosity of the people of this city, become an institution of which New Orleans may well be proud. The building has recently been enlarged and is now sufficiently commodious for all purposes in connection with the work to which it is devoted. The reading room of the Bethel is well supplied with interesting and instructive literatnre, and will be open daily and nightly. Religious services, conducted by the chaplain, open this evening at 7:30 o'clock, and will be held each following Sunday evening."

FURTHER FROM FIFTH CREEK.

At a communion meeting which closed on Sabbath, 21st of September, at Fifth Creek church, there were eighteen accessions to the church, to six of whom the ordinance of baptism was administered. With thirty additions some three weeks ago, in all there have been forty-eight additions, and the spiritual strength greatly revived. Rev. R. Nall, D. D., conducted the late communion meeting, preaching with power and solemnity to large and attentive congregations. He has been spending the past three months in this region of country and his labors have been wonderfully blessed wherever he labored. May God yet spare his life many years that he may continue the faithful ambassador for Christ, as he has been for many years past, winning sonls to Him. The outpouring of the Holy Spirit has extended to the churches of other denominations in this county.

NEW HOPE CHURCH, ORANGE PRESBYTERY.

DEAR BROTHER—At onr fall communion at New Hope church, last week, we received two members on examination, continued the meeting throngh six days and there were nine others who professed a hope of salvation. Bro. Jas. L. Curry gave ns six good, solid, Gospel sermons. Yonrs, &c., P. H. D.

High Point, N. C., Sept. 25.

PRESBYTERIAL MEETINGS.

Ebenezer Presbytery met Sept. 16th at Clintonville, Ky. Rev. F. W. Lewis was chosen Moderator. Rev. S. D. Boggs was received from the Presbytery of Memphis, and measnres were taken for his installation over the churches of Clintonville and Hopewell. Rev. W. T. Spears was received from the Presbytery of West Lexington. A call from Richwood church for his pastoral services was found to be incomplete and was tabled for an adjourned meeting to be held during the sessions of Synod. Twenty-five ministers and ruling elders were present and the meeting was a very pleasant one.

The Presbytery of Chesapeake met at Waterford, Va., September 17th. Rev. Dr. A. W. Pitzer was elected Moderator. Mr. Jas. N. Vandeventer, a member of Catoctin church, was received as a candidate for the Gospel ministry. The pastoral relation between the Rev. J. P. Strider and the Rapidan church, was dissolved on account of the ill-health of the pastor. The Central Presbyterian was commended to the patronage of the people. A committee on the observance of the Sabbath, consisting of Revs. Cannon, Turnbull and Branch and elders Ball and Bradon, was appointed.

STATE SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION OF NORTH CAROLINA.

The second annual Convention will be held in Greensboro on Friday and Saturday, the 7th and 8th of November, opening at 10½ a. m. Organized counties are entitled to one delegate from each denomination in the county; other counties to two delegates from each county. The friends of the work will please look after the appointment of delegates. Delegates will please notify the secretary of the Executive Committee of their purpose to attend. They will be met at the depot and conducted to their homes.

PUT ON THE BRAKES.

When a collision occurred some weeks ago npon the Western North Carolina Railroad, which so narrowly escaped producing most fearful consequences, the presence of mind of a young man npon the train probably saved a nnmber of lives. When he found that several of the crowded coaches had been detached from the engine by the violence of the shock, and had started back down the descending grade, he shonted to the only brakeman on that part of the train, "Put on the brakes." The prompt obedience of his order stopped the coaches before they had gained snch velocity of motion as to be unmanageable. A few moments delay would have been fatal, and many lives must have been lost, if those detached coaches had rnshed down npon the other train, which was toiling np the steep ascent. The God who notes the fall of a sparrow pnt it into that young man's heart to use the means which prevented a most horrible accident, and the same overrnling God often extends His mighty arm and pnts on the brakes when his children are rushing on to destrnction.

How many whose thonghtfnlness, it may be, thns saves the lives of others, are all unconscious that they are going with daily increasing velocity on the down-grade to eternal ruin! The descent is so gradnal and pleasant that they feel no alarm, bnt they may awake to a sense of their danger when it is too late, unless they call at once, and in earnest, upon God to stretch ont His almighty arm and "put on the brakes."

AT GALATIA.

Sweeping down from the mountains, I find myself on third day of travel at the hospitable home of an elder of Galatia church. A twelve miles drive along a sandy road brings me from the historic town of Fayetteville to the shadow of Galatia church. It is a comely wooden building, commodious and spacious, painted within and without, not freshly, however, and in good repair. It is well furnished within, with a gallery on three sides: and would seat, I judge, 600 people. Its worthy pastor I well knew, and representatives from the church had attended Presbytery. Yet I felt that I was now not "off among old friends," but "off among new friends." I did not feel so long, however. Was ever a Presbyterian minister in Scotch community, in a Presbyterian congregation, without feeling that he was at home? And if he didn't feel so, wonldn't they make him feel so?

The NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN has explained why I was at Galatia. It seems that I was expected to "conduct" a Sunday school celebration, but I rather think that the Sunday school celebration "conducted" me. It conducted me down from the mountains of Virginia, among most hearty, kind and hospitable Presbyterians, all around a wonderfully long and well-filled table, through a very pleasant day. That's what it did, and a good deal more!

Early on Saturday, the 13th September, children, little and big, Sunday school workers and friends, Galatians and dwellers in the regions round about, gathered together to hear and to enjoy, to see and be refreshed. As the Presbytery's Agent of Sabbath Schools, I had been sent for to encourage and counsel the army of teachers and scholars, parents and children that came to the "celebration."

About half-past ten, under the guidance of Superintendent McGill and Assistant Bine, the Sunday school met and engaged in singing. The vast congregation (I suppose about six hnndred) gathered in the church and filled it, up stairs and down. Rev. Joseph Evans, of St. Paul's, and Rev. G. M. Gibbs, of Cameron, were present, of the Presbytery, besides your correspondent. After devotional exercises, in which all took part, the agent, your humble servant, addressed the audience. It was a grand privelege to speak to snch a multitude, all attent and devout, on snch a theme. Over the speaker was the legend, wreathed in green, "Not by might, nor by power, bnt by My Spirit, saith the Lord." On the front of the gallery opposite, was the inscription, "What shall the Harvest be?" I thought them most solemn and appropriate mottoes for such a day!

I shall not report what I said. It is possible I may want to say some of it again! Nor shall I tell how long I took to say it, as theu I might never get the chance to say it over! If any one wishes to know how long, Bro. Evans can tell.

At any rate, after the exercises in the church were over, every one's appetite was well whetted: or even without an appetite, the tempting array set on the long table could not be resisted. A blessing was devoutly asked, and the signal given. As Bunyan wonld say, "at that, we fell to." There was enough and to spare. The repast was elegant and ample, and hospitably served. The multitudes did all eat and were filled. And that is the fullest compliment.

The recess was enjoyed. In social intercourse most pleasant and unrestrained the hour passed rapidly. Many lingered, having come from far, in hope that some additional service might be held. So in the afternoon a sermon was preached, after which the crowd slowly dispersed.

I think the meeting did good. It is pleasant to see one another, to meet new faces and make new friends. The Sunday schools of the church and neighboring churches were cheered and encouraged, and we gained the benefit of a wider experience.

It may be observed that the minister supplying this church was not present. Those who know him, Rev. J. P. McPherson, need not be told that it was from no lack of interest in his own schools. But in order to allow me to be present on Saturday, he had denied himself the pleasnre of being with his own people, and we had exchanged pulpits. On Sunday large congregations attended Galatia—almost as large as the day before. A stranger at church asked me where Mr. McP. was, and why I was at Galatia, and I told him: "He's preaching to my people today." But the rest of the old story did not take place—i. e., my questioner did not say as the old Scotch woman did: "Well, they'll be gettin a treat the day;" bnt it was so, nevertheless. My people did have a treat. I think it wonld be well if we conntry pastors exchanged pulpits more frequently.

With this sage reflection, and with many pleasant recollections of Galatia, and that memorable Saturday, I conclude. W. S. L.

MONTHLY REVIEW OF MISSIONS.

Our last intelligence from Campinas is the 30th of July. The missionaries and their families were in their usual health, and the different departments of the missionary work going on as usual. Mr. Boyle and Mr. Wingertnr, the colporter was absent on one of his evangelistic tours in the direction of Franca.

From Soochow our latest dates are to the 19th of July. Rev. Messrs. DuBose and Davis with their families, were temporarily at Poodoo Island, for the benefit of sea air. The heat in Soochow becomes so intense in the summer months that a temporary withdrawal to the sea-coast becomes an almost absolnte necessity. Miss Safford was still in Soochow, bnt much prostrated from the effects of the heat. Mr. Davis has been engaged for a year or two in translating the New Testament into the Soochow dialect. He had got Matthew and a large part of Mark printed before he left Soochow. Letters both from Mr. and Mrs. Stnart of the Hangchow Mission, published in our present issue, will be read with much interest.

From Greece our last intelligence is to the 6th of August. Dr. Kalopothakes was expected back at that date from a short tour he had taken to recruit his health. Mr. Sampson, it was expected, would have to visit England soon, to attend to matters connected with his Mission. He reports that the prospects of this Mission were encouraging.

We have a postal from Mr. Reid, of the Choctaw Mission, as late as the 28th of August. His health, as well as that of his family, has been greatly improved in connection with the vacation in the school. He was in Texas, on his way to Spencer Academy, where the Indian Presbytery was to meet on the 18th of September. Messrs. Hagan and Harrison were already on the ground to commence the labor of the coming session.—Missionary.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

The Covenant is the title of a bright semi-monthly journal published at Philadelphia, in the interest of the Reformed Episcopal Church. The price is $1 per year. It certainly will make its mark if the specimens received do not seriously mislead us.

Messrs. Lee & Shepherd of Boston have written us that they will immediately publish Jules Verne's new book, which has just appeared in Paris, viz: The Tribulation of a Chinaman in China. The book is intensely interesting and amusing, and many of the popular features of the day, snch as the Phonograph, Capt. Boynton in his Rubber Suit, Life Insurance Companies, Banking Speculations and various other eccentricities of the times are woven into the narrative.

The Earnest Worker: October, 1879. 60 cents a year. Presbyterian Committee of Publication, Richmond Va. The editorial on the session and the Sabbath school ought to be read by all.

The Library Magazine of Select Foreign Literature: 16mo. Weekly, 40 pages. $1 a year. American Book Exchange, New York, John B. Alden, manager. This will aggregate about 2,000 pages of reading matter a year, which is estimated to be more than the Eclectic Magazine contains. The type is small but clear. The selections in this nnmber are from the Contemporary Review, Good Words, Blackwood and Nineteenth Century.

The Contemporary Review, Fortnightly Review and Nineteeth Century, monthlies published by George Munro, 17 to 27 Vandewater Street, New York, are at hand. Price $2,25 per annum for each, and so full are they of well selected and reliable articles that it is difficult to decide which is the best.

Wide Awake for October opens with a frontispiece that all the boys will enjoy, and which illustrates Rev. I. L. Beman's true story of "Hunting Deer." This is followed by an interesting article from Mary Wager-Fisher on the Philadelphia Reform School," with thirteen pen and ink drawings by Hermann Faber. Then comes a capital story about "Polly's Temptation," with a charming drawing by "Champ," who also has a full-page drawing for Mrs. Lizzie W. Champney's "Trotting Song." And so we might go on for near half a column telling of the wonders of Wide Awake, bnt the children who have ever seen a copy, know what fnn Mrs. Farman gets up for them, and all others can know as well by sending $2 for a year's subscription to D. Lothrop & Co., publishers, Boston, Mass.

The North Carolina Medical Journal ought to be—how often have we said that?—in the hands of every physician in the State. But we need not bound its circnlation by State lines, it deserves a wide-spread circulation. September number has many communications from North Carolina physicians and others on cases occurring in their practice or otherwise coming to their knowledge, and very much admirably selected matter. Price $3 per year. Address Dr. Thos. F. Wood, Wilmington, N. C.

Scribner's Monthly for October is on our table. Contents: The Camp of the Carbonates; Ups and Downs in Leadville, or the Piping Shepherd of Fortuny; Field Sports in Minnesota; Edison's Inventions; Jonrnalism as Exemplified by the late Mr. Bagehot; Confidence; English Spelling and Spelling Reform; Widowed; Sleep of Years; Haworth's; A Sailor in a Cotton Field; The New Year; Brazil's Arthur Sullivan; Her Conqnest; Annnnciata; Dick; The Unknown Ship; Topics of the Times; Home and Society; Culture and Progress; The World's Work; Bric-a-Brac. Scribner & Co., New York. $4 a year—35 cents a number.

J. P. MCPHERSON, Stated Clerk.

FAYETTEVILLE, N. C., Aug. 18, 1879.

Members of Fayetteville Presbytery who expect to attend the fall meeting at Sharon church, and who wish to come by rail, will be met at Lilesville, the nearest depot, 18 miles from the church. Members who would be thns accommodated will please communicate the same to R. McKinnon, Mt. Gilead, stating what day they will be at the depot.

Presbytery of Mecklenburg will meet at Philadelphia church, ten miles east of Charlotte, on the 17th day of October, at 11 o'clock a. m. R. Z. JOHNSTON, S. Clerk.

Lincolnton, Sept. 4, 1879.

Conveyances will be in Charlotte, October 17th, at 9 a. m., to take the members of Presbytery out to Philadelphia church.

The 219th session of Orange Presbytery will be held at Alamance church, Guilford county, on Thursday, the 16th of October, 1879, at 1 o'clock p. m. Sessions are expected to send up written reports on state of religion and reason of non-representation at last meeting. N. B.—Under the Revised Book of Church Order, now the law of the Church, every church is entitled, irrespective of its pastoral relations, to representation in the Presbytery. F. H. JOHNSTON, S. Clerk.

Delegates to Orange Presbytery will get off the cars at Greensboro, where accommodations will be provided them for the night, and conveyances to carry them to Alamance church, six miles distant, on the morning of the 16th. Arrangement with the railroad authorities for the usual reduction of fare will be attended to. W. B. TIDBALL.

The Presbytery of Harmony will meet at Midway church, October the 9th, at 11 o'clock a. m. W. A. GREGG, Stated Clerk.

ECLECTICISMS.

THE GREATEST EVIL.

The Methodist:

Answering a conundrnm of a subscriber, we remark that there is no reason why a murderer should not die forgiven of God—therefore, at peace. But there are good reasons why a trnly converted murderer should be very modest in his profession of faith. We should not put much confidence in a noisy conversion under the gallows—because a truly converted man would keenly feel the enormity of his crime. The greatest evil in this matter is that insatiable curiosity of the public which murderers and newspapers conspire to satisfy.

THE REAL DANGER.

Presbyterian:

Here are some sentences pointed with trnth:—"The Chnrch is in danger; the Confession is in danger, the Bible and the Christian religion are in danger.' Don't believe a word of it. At least they are not in danger from Robert Ingersoll or David Macrae, or the scores of unbelievers, doubters, and agitators that torment the air with their cries. The real source of danger is the disloyal life led by many a disciple of Christ. A bad life is the worst heresy. A godless, selfish, cold-hearted, grasping trustee, or committee man, or 'adherent,' not to say member of a church will do more harm than a legion of sceptics. It is the enemy within the pale that causes moral and spiritnal paralysis."

FALSE INTERPRETERS.

Nashville Advocate:

There are a class of men in this country who are always ready to assnme the office of interpreters of Providence, especially in the line of "jndgments" upon persons they do not like.—This is presumptuous, and dangerous.—God wields his own thunderbolts; and he is his own interpreter. His thoughts are not as our thoughts nor His ways as onr ways. Let the narrow creatures who could make Eternal Wisdom and Goodness the instrument for the gratification of their wicked prejndices, stop their gabble.

A CASE OF HUMAN NATURE.

S. S. Times:

In a recent effort to pay off a church debt, the children in a Sunday-scoool were asked to each earn something for a special contribution to this end. A little girl had earned thirty cents. "I'd like my money in pennies," she said, as Sunday approaches; "because then it will make more noise when I drop it into the box." That child was a good deal like older folks. If they have any thing to give, the temptation is to make as much noise as possible.

WORTH REMEMBERING.

Christian Advocate:

For fifty years I have so watched the influence of church papers npon individual and family and church developement, that I am persuaded that no man is snited to the pastoral office who does not thoroughly canvass his congregation, and entreat, and exhort, and beg and if necessary, scold (a little) until every regular attendant upon his ministry, whether member or not, takes, or regularly borrows one or more of our church periodicals, and a great many of our books. It pays every way, but especially in creating a conviction that contribution to church expenses is a dnty.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

SOUTHERN.

PRESBYTERIAN.

The postoffice address of Rev. E. Cater is Yazoo City, Miss.

Rev. J. S. Montgomery has received a call to the church at Uniontown, Ala.

Eight accessions have been made to the church at Wheelock, Texas. The church is under the care of Rev. James Wilson.

The church at Liberty, Va., has provided a thousand dollar organ and a handsome and comfortable parsonage. The pastor, Rev. F. G. Riley, is greatly encouraged.

On the 13th ultimo Rev. S. R Preston was installed pastor of the church at Blacksburg, Va. Rev. J. M. Rawlings presided and Rev. Daniel Blair delivered the charges.

Mr. Wm. Bryant, a licentiate of the Presbytery of Florida, has accepted a unanimous call to the pastorate of the Presbyterian church at East Lake George, New York.—Southern Presbyterian.

"Vidi" writes to the Texas Presbyterian from Lancaster, Texas, 17th Sept.: "The Presbyterian church here is being greatly revived and blessed. Seven additions this week, five by certificate and two by profession of faith."

At the Central Presbyterian church of Lynchburg (colored) an additional ruling elder, —Franklin, was installed. The pastor, Rev. Leroy R. Johnson, is doing his work faithfully, in spite of feeble health.—Central Presbyterian.

Rev. J. Simpson Frierson writes to the Southern Presbyterian: "My health has very much improved, and with the Lord's continued blessing I hope I may be fully able to return to my much loved work again by the latter part of November."

The Edgefield mission, in South Carolina Presbytery, supplied by licentiate A. E. Norris, recently received five persons, three by certificate and two on profession of faith. Four children were baptized. Rev. J. R. Dow of Atlanta assisted. The congregation need a church building and are taking steps to have one.

Rev. L. E. Scott writes to the Central Presbyterian from Hampton, Va.: "On the first Sabbath of September we received three members into the church, two upon certificates of dismission from other Presbyterian churches and one upon profession of faith—making in all seventeen members in our little church. We are gradually growing in numbers and I trust in grace."

Bethany church, Va., Presbytery of East Hanover, of which Rev. Henry M. Anderson is the pastor, recently enjoyed an outpouring of the Holy Spirit. Eight persons were added to the church on profession of faith. Four others gave hopeful evidence of conversion. Mr. Anderson has resigned the pastorate, much to the regret of his charge.

As the result of a recent work of grace in the Anchor of Hope church, Virginia, we learn from the Christian Observer, fourteen members have been received, and among these there are five male heads of families. There are quite a number who will yet unite with the church. The pastor, Rev. W. V. Wilson is greatly comforted and strengthened.

Rev. M. B. Shaw of Clinton, La., in a private letter to the St. Louis Presbyterian, says: "I closed a very interesting service in one of my mission fields last week, brother McAlister assisting me. There were three additions, adults—two males and one female—two of whom were baptized. This is a point where I began to preach Sunday evenings three years ago. We have already gathered eleven persons into our church from that out-station.

Recently James A. Cannada and Marcellus A. Stuart, were ordained deacons in Bethesda Church, Hinds county, Miss.; and on the same day nine children were baptized. During a protracted meeting held in Bethesda church, commencing Friday, August 29th, and concluding Sept. 6th, thirteen persons were received on profession of their faith, and four by letter; two were restored to the communion of the church, and some who had fallen into sin came forward and promised to lead a life of holiness; and besides, others were converted, some of whom will join our church after a while.—Christian Observer.

Rev. R. M. Longhbridge writes to the Texas Presbyterian in regard to a work of grace in the Presbyterian church at Clinton, Western Texas, about the 1st of August: "Bro. Rankin, agent of the American Bible Society, informed me that he was present at a meeting held there about that time by Mr. Turner, a licentiate under the care of Presbytery of Weston Texas, who was assisted by Rev. J. M. Connolly of the same Presbytery. Sixteen persons professed religion and were added to that little church and the congregation was much revived. They were mostly young men and young women. Rev. J. M. Connolly, who has been very unwell for some months, was able on this occasion to preach one of his excellent sermons, and to receive into the church and baptize those sixteen persons.

Rev. W. B. Bingham writes the Southwestern Presbyterian, Sept. 18th: We have just closed a meeting of eleven days at this place; brother Rondebush, Munroe, and the pastor of the Methodist church of this place aiding in the services. The congregations were large and attentive, and the preaching practical and earnest. The meeting was felt to be a profitable one. The faith of God's people was strengthened and their hopes revived. Our church received four accessions on profession of faith in Christ, and one resting under suspension was restored. On the Sabbath preceding this meeting, two were received—one by letter and one on profession of faith. These tokens of Divine favor encourage our hearts; for we have long been in a cold state.

Parents are awakening to a sense of their privilege and dnty in regard to consecrating their little ones to the Lord in baptism. The pastor has recently baptized nine children, bnt they were not all of the same family, as was the case in Brother Grafton's congregation.

GENERAL.

Rev. Dr. J. C. Hiden, pastor of the Baptist church at Greenville, S. C., has returned to his work. He has been restored by a trip to the mountains to his usual health of body and mind.

The Rev. Dr. E. W. Warren, pastor of the First Baptist church has resigned his pastorate with the purpose of returning to his former church in Macon, Georgia. Dr. Warren was pastor of the Macon church twelve years, and has been in Richmond four years.—Central Presbyterian.

NORTHERN.

PRESBYTERIAN.

The Stuarts, of New York, have presented Princeton College with a handsome residence for President McCosh.

At the late meeting of Nebraska City most of the time was taken up with the consideration of mission work within the bounds of Presbytery. The Rev. George L. Little reported having organized five churches within the bounds of the Presbytery since the April meeting.

The Presbyterian says: "The bell which now hangs in the belfry of the Presbyterian church, Woodbury, N. J., was originally a convent bell, brought over from St. Domingo, during the insurrection there in 1791, to Philadelphia, and from thence to Woodbury. It is supposed to be several hundred years old. The bell owned and formerly used by the Second Presbyterian church in Bridgeton, N. J., originally belonged to a Spanish convent. The Spanish inscription on it is as distinct as when the bell was cast.

UNITED PRESBYTERIAN.

Miss Janette B. Cameron, of the United Presbyterian church in Rochester, N. Y., is to accompany the Rev. Dr. Bushnell on his return to Africa.

Mr. D. J. Robertson, a licentiate of the Presbytery of Albany, obtained a letter of good standing and a dismissal to the Presbytery of Louisville of the Presbyterian church. In the latter Presbytery he has received a pastoral call. Allegheny Theological Seminary opens with a class of twenty-five students.

EPISCOPAL.

Trinity Episcopal church, Oxford, Pa., a rural parish, raised last year $1,002 for foreign missions. Contributions for other objects bring the total up to $3,313.

The Rev. Telfair Hodgson, D. D., has been elected Vice Chancellor of the University of the South at Sewanee, Tenn. Dr. Hodgson has been Dean of the Theological Department.

METHODIST.

The laymen of the Columbia River Conference have elected Mrs. Rev. H. K. Hines a reserve lay delegate to the next General Conference. Her husband is a ministerial reserve delegate.

LUTHERAN.

There are twenty-four Evangelical Lutheran and three Independent Lutheran churches in Chicago, Ill.

BAPTIST.

The Baptist denomination numbers in Connecticut 300 churches and has an aggregate of 24,811 members, making an average of 83 to a church. Seventy-nine churches only exceed 100 members each.

The Rev. E. J. Goodspeed, D. D., of Syracuse, N. Y., has accepted the position of principal in the Benedict Institute, the South Carolina school for freedmen.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Rev. Dr. Joseph P. Thompson died in Berlin, Prussia, on the 20th ultimo. He was, in early life, a member of the Presbyterian church, but became a Congregationalist, and for over thirty years has been a minister in that communion. At one time he was an editor of the Independent. He was an author of distinguished reputation and published several theological works.

Andover Seminary has nearly 100 theological students.

The Rev. J. C. Lovering, for several years and until recently pastor of the Unitarian church in Watertown, Mass., was admitted on last Sabbath to the Phillips Congregational church of that town on confession of faith.

SECULAR NEWS.

A party of young men from Dallas and Fort Worth, Texas on a hunting excursion were attacked by Indians and seven of their number killed after fighting two days.

There are few deaths at Memphis daily and the number of cases is not so large. N. C. Fowler of New York sent $3,000 to the Howards. A Catholic priest, Father Reville, died on the 21st inst. A burglary is reported by two masked negroes.

Cetewayo is confined at Cape Town and all the remaining chiefs in Zululand have surrendered to the British authorities.

Cholera has broken out among the British troops near Cabul. Six fatal cases occurred in one regiment, and another is affected by the same disease.

The Vicar Patriarchal has arranged his differences with the Porte, and he will proceed to Rome to conclude a favorable convention for the recognition of the Roman Catholic Church in Turkey.

Attention to the dissolution of the firm of Petty & Jones, Raleigh, N. C., and the formation of the business under the firm of Yeargan, Petty & Co. Those trading there should by all means try them.

SECULAR MISCELLANY.

Queen Victoria disapproves of the sale of photographs of what are called fashionable beauties. An English paper suggests that the principal sinners are ladies of the aristocracy, and the remedy lies in her Majesty's own hands.

The great landlords of England are beginning to feel the tightness of the shoe which pinches the small farmers. Lord Willoughby has thirteen farms tenantless in Warwickshire, the Duke of Portland has thirty, and the Duke of Newcastle as many. The Trustees of the Newcastle estate intend to work the hands themselves.

An exchange says: This is probably the eve of a great telephonic war, the end of which no prophet can foresee. Already nearly a hundred patents embodying supposed improvements in telephones have been issued, and more than a dozen interference suits are now pending before the Patent Office, brought in the names of as many patentees. These suits are set for a hearing in February.

A contract has been made for introducing the electric light into the lobbies of the Capitol at Washington.

A Russian engineer, M. Daniloff, has commenced the work of uniting the Black Sea with the Caspian. The work will rank with the Suez Canal as a specimen of scientific engineering.

The revival in the iron trade in this country is calling for skilled labor from Europe. Thirty engineers and machinists have been brought from Bradford, England, to Philadelphia, and a Philadelphia firm has ordered one hundred riveters.

In Paris the sum of $6,325,960 is about to be expended in building new elementary schools and enlarging those now in existence.

A line of steamers to carry coal to the Mediterranean from Philadelphia is soon to be established. The export trade in coal is now considerable, more than three hundred thousand tons being at present ordered and awaiting shipment.

Col. John L. Brown, at Charlotte, N. C., and Messrs. J. D. McNeely, at Salisbury; J. D. Williams, Fayetteville; W. S. Moore, Greensboro, N. C.; will receive and receipt for any subscriptions to this paper. The checks of these and many other agents, on their local banks of deposit, will be cashed here, without discount, and save expense of postal order or registration. Mr. McNeely is Agent for the Missionary also.

MARRIED.

☞No notice of a marriage or death will be inserted unless accompanied by a responsible name, which is wanted not for publication but as a guaranty of good faith.

In Lincolnton, on the 17th of Sept., by Rev. W. R. Wetmore, Mr. GEORGE L. BARTLETT and Miss MARY HOKE.

DIED.

☞Obituary notices must be paid for in advance. The first ten lines are inserted free. The excess over ten lines is charged for at the rate of ten cents per line. Correspondents can ascertain what an obituary will cost by counting eight words to a line, and multiplying each line by ten cents.

At her home, near Jonesboro, N. C., April 6th, 1879, Miss JENNETT DALRYMPLE, in the 78th year of her age.

Of an honored lineage and family loved and respected, and possessed of competence, the subject of this notice lived a long life of usefulness, of quiet and unostentatious kindness, of marked simplicity and dignity, and passed from earth mourned and lamented by friends, dependents, relatives and neighbors. She never united with the church upon public profession of her faith, though her life and character were so exemplary as to lead all who knew her best to esteem her a Christian. During her last sickness, her pastor had frequent conversations with her. She confessed her sole trust in the Lord Jesus Christ as her Saviour, and expressed her regret that she had not acknowledged him before men. She was warmly attached to the church of her birth and her choice, and was a generous friend of its enterprises.

"The righteous hath hope in his death."

At her home on Little River, not far from Jonesboro, N. C., on the 28th June, 1879, JOHN H. DALRYMPLE, in the 72d year of his age.

Not long after the death of his sister, mentioned in the previous notice, the brother was "called to follow." Mr. Dalrymple had been an elder of Buffalo church (with which he united early in life) for the long term of forty-four years, being ordained in 1835. At the time of his death he was the senior elder of the session. For more than eighty years one, and sometimes two, of the name and of this family have been members of Buffalo session. Of late years Mr. Dalrymple's health has been infirm; but earlier in his service he was a man of marked influence—firm, true and intelligent. He was a generous friend of the church, a kind neighbor, full of unobserved charities, and a good man.

But an hour or so before his death, with clear mind and conscious of his condition, he expressed to his pastor his unshaken trust in Jesus and his abiding confidence that He would be with him to the end.

A large concourse of friends attended the funeral services at Buffalo church. His remains were laid to rest with the ashes of his kindred in the old family burying ground.

May the God of all comfort sustain the bereaved ones and sanctify to them their loss.

In Caswell county, N. C., September 2d, 1879, of bilious fever, after an illness of about eight days, LULA LEE WILLIAMSON, second daughter of Thomas F. and Lydia Williamson.

Lula is gone. She was just entering upon that period of life, being in her 17th year, when all the excellent traits of womanhood begin to manifest themselves and throw a halo of gladness around the sacred hearthstone. From infancy she was modest and retiring—always obedient, and ever thoughtful to render those services of love which tend to make others happy. She loved her Bible and loved to pray, and for months before her death was deeply concerned in her personal salvation. We had hoped ere long to have received her as a communicant of Bethesda church—

But death, by heaven's high decree,
The blooming flower descried;
He pointed o'er life's narrow sea
And said, "To yonder side."

She died with uplifted hands, praying that God would give her grace to trust Him. We can but hope and think she has gone to join the church of the redeemed in glory. May the God of all grace comfort the heart-broken parents and lift the light of His countenance upon that bereaved household.

D. I. C.

In Marion, N. C., on the 20th of September, of diph-theria, ADDIE RANKIN, aged 11 years.

After a protracted illness, borne with exemplary patience, RACHEL, daughter of the late Neill and Catherine Ferguson, and wife of Gideon Tyson, Esq., of Bladen county, aged 33 years.

The deceased became a member of St. Paul's church, Robeson county, during the ministry of Rev. Mr. McDonald. Her conduct in all the relations of life was such as to command the confidence, respect and affection of all who knew her. PASTOR.

IT IS WORTH A TRIAL.

"I was troubled for many years with Kidney Complaint, Gravel, &c.; my blood became thin; I was dull and inactive; could hardly crawl about, and was an old worn out man all over, and could get nothing to help me, until I got Hop Bitters, and now I am a boy again. My blood and kidneys are all right, and I am as active as a man of 30, although I am 72, and I have no doubt it will do as well for others of my age. It is worth the trial. (Father.)

EDUCATION.

To the Chairmen of the Presbyterial Committees of Education:

Please bear in mind that application for aid to students must be made annually. The fact that a student was on our list last year makes no difference. If he wishes aid this year, application must be made by the Chairman of Education in his Presbytery. Brethren will also please state whether the student is in College, or in the Seminary. The undersigned has authority from the Committee to receive all students as beneficiaries for whom application is made in the regular way.

My postoffice address at present is Covington, Tenn., but letters addressed to me at Memphis will be forwarded. Quite a number of letters on the subject of Education have been addressed to Rev. Dr. Waddel, the former Secretary. Brethren will bear in mind that there has been a change of Secretaries.

E. M. RICHARDSON,
Secretary of Education.

A CALL.

To the Churches Under the Care of the Presbytery of Mecklenburg:

DEAR BRETHREN: There are four counties in the extreme western portion of our mountain territory in which there is not one Presbyterian minister. Your Presbytery at the spring meeting appointed the Rev. S. C. Alexander evangelist for that destitute region, hoping that the work will be sustained by the prayers and money of you, the professed friends of Christ.

The evangelist is willing to enter upon this work and support himself in the field, if the churches will raise enough to bear the expense of his removal, and to give him a start for securing a living by his own efforts. Surely the churches will be willing to do this much towards supplying this vast region with a pure gospel. It will require five hundred dollars to move his family to the field and support them until he can secure a living by a school.

Are there not some of our members to whom God has given much, who will be not only willing but glad to take a part in this important work? Let all who have anything to give send it to J. C. Burroughs, at Charlotte.

G. D. PARKS, Ch'rman.

THE MAP OF PALESTINE.

We have sent out this map quite extensively, and it has, we believe, given universal satisfaction; at least, no complaints have been made, and many have expressed hearty appreciation.

It is 28x42 inches in size and sold by publishers at $1 00.

TO AGENTS.

It will not be practicable to write to each one of the Agents of the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN, and ask them to continue their exertions. We now make the general request, and take occasion to thank them and all other friends for the disinterested kindness so fully and so constantly manifested in the past.

SELMA, Ala., Feb. 12, 1878.

Messrs. Polk, Miller & Co:

DEAR SIRS:—My wife and myself have derived great benefit from your "Vest Pocket Cure," in cases of flatulency and indigestion. Messrs. Cawthorn & Coleman, at my suggestion, procured some of it in the small vials. But as I do not wish to spend a double price for these, and intend to use it regularly, I send one dollar for larger vial. Yours,

REV. T. W. HOOPER,
Selma, Ala.

INSTITUTE FOR TRAINING OF COLORED MINISTERS

Under the care of the General Assembly.
Located at TUSKALOOSA, ALA.

THE FOURTH SESSION, of ten months, will commence on the 1st day of September next, under the instruction of Rev. D. C. Rankin, Professor, who has the best testimonials of fitness for the work, in his deep interest in the colored people and his past labors in their behalf, his ample scholarship, and his aptness to teach.

All the branches necessary to fit candidates for the Gospel Ministry will be taught. Some acquaintance with the early branches of English will be required for entrance. Candidates must come recommended by their Presbyteries or Committees of Education; and if of other denominations, must have similar credentials.

No charge for tuition. Board can be had on reasonable terms.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

Charlotte Institute.

THE next session begins September 10th, 1879, and ends June 8th, 1880.

No Institute ever made more rapid progress in securing the confidence and esteem of its patrons than this one during the past session. Before the end of the scholastic year the number of its pupils, attracted by the well-earned reputation of the school, increased to 117, exclusive of the adult ladies who availed themselves of the superior advantages here given in the departments of Music, Art, and Modern Languages. In no respect is this Institute inferior to any other first-class boarding-school in the Southern or Middle States. Such testimonials as will satisfy an one as to the high standard and thoroughness of the instruction here are published in the catalogue. These testimonials are peculiarly trustworthy, inasmuch as they are given by gentlemen engaged in teaching in well known schools and colleges of the highest grade, and who are therefore qualified to express an opinion in regard to educational institutions.

The total expense for the half session or term will be $125. This amount includes board, with washing, fuel, lights, furnished room and servants' attendance, tuition in all the English branches, Latin, with either French or German, Calisthenics, text-books and stationery for school purposes. Pupils are not permitted to incur additional expense without permission of their parents. Parents are thus assured that their bills will not be greater than they expected.

Special arrangements and special terms for young ladies who wish to take only Music, Painting and Drawing, and Modern Languages, severally or collectively.

RELIEF OF INFLAMMATION AND ULCERATION OF THE BLADDER.

AFTER THE LIFE OF THE PATIENT HAS BEEN DESPAIRED OF BY HIS MEDICAL ATTENDANT.

[Extract from Letter of Dr. T. B. Greer, of Rocky Mount, Franklin county, Va., of June 3, 1876.]

"I have recently had occasion to try the 'Lithia Water' in a case of Inflamation and Ulceration of the Bladder, caused by the retention of urine, the result of stricture of twenty years standing. I had exhausted all of the resources, both of experience and authority, and when my patient commenced the use of it, had no hope of his recovery. He has been using the water five weeks, with results so favorable that he now has every prospect of complete recovery, and without some unexpected change in his condition, will be on his feet in a short time. The effects of the water in this case have been marvelous. For the sake of humanity I shall keep a record of the case, and report to you as it advances."

In a subsequent communication Dr. Greer, referring to the above case, says:

"In the case of 'Inflammation and Ulceration of the Bladder,' heretofore reported, the patient recovered and I attribute the recovery entirely to the Lithia Water."

STONE.

CASE OF MR. C. WOLFFE, OF POINT COUPEE PARISH, LA.

POINT COUPEE PARISH, LA., April 2, 1878.

MR. THOMAS F. GOODE, Proprietor Buffalo Lithia Springs, Va.:

Two years ago I began to suffer with a severe and constant pain in my kidneys, which was soon followed by violent attacks, averaging about two a week, causing excruciating agony, from which I was frequently relieved by the discharge of stone of from four to six grains in weight; at other times by the passage of smaller stones, and sometimes by sand in considerable quantities.

I sought, but in vain, the best medical assistance, and as the result of this state of things, I was reduced to such a condition that my medical advisers told me frankly that I had nothing to hope from remedies; that my condition was a hopeless one, and I looked to death alone for a termination of a miserable existence: Mr. J. L. Lyons, a druggist of New Orleans, about six months ago, advised me to try the Buffalo Lithia Water, Spring No. 2, which I did. About a week after I commenced the use of it I had an attack of less than usual severity, in which I passed two small stones, one of which I placed in a tumbler of the water, and in about three hours found it dissolved to fine powder. That gave me confidence, and I determined to persevere in its use. I have had no attack whatever since, nor has there been any discharge of stone or sand.

The pain in my kidneys has entirely disappeared; my weight, which had been greatly reduced, I have fully regained, and my general health has been entirely restored. I very cheerfully acknowledge my indebtedness to the Buffalo Lithia Water for my life, and the comfort which I now enjoy.

Respectfully, C. WOLFFE.

FOR THE FAMILY.

The Mother's Prayer.

Hear me, O Father, ere I rest
This night upon my bed;
Let thy blest Spirit in the heart
Of my dear son be shed.

Forgive him, should he wayward seem,
For sake of Thy dear Son;
Without the blood of Calvary
Are all of us undone.

Lead him, as only Thou canst lead
The faltering steps of youth,
Through tempting and entangling snares,
To paths of heavenly truth.

Watch o'er him, with Thy loving care,
Wherever he may be;
Thou knowest the yearnings of my heart—
I leave it all with Thee.

Mrs. Thompson's Visitors.

"Please, ma'am, don't you want to buy some matches?" said a sweet voice.

The lady addressed gazed for a moment upon two little girls standing upon her front porch. They could not have been more than six or eight years of age—such wee things out in the cold November winds—the elder carrying a packet under her arm, and the other a purse clutched tightly in her little chubby hands.

"No we have plenty of matches, said the lady,

"Yes, ma'am," was the meek reply, and the two little girls had turned down the steps.

How cold they looked, so scantily dressed; and then, their manner, how different from the scores of peddlers which tramped the streets almost daily. Mrs. Thompson could not shut the door.

"Little girls," said she.

"Yes, ma'am," said a quivering voice, and as the little girls turned back, Mrs. Thompson saw that the sweet blue eyes of the younger one were filled with tears.

"Aren't you cold?"

"Yes, ma'am."

"Come in, then, and get warm. I want to talk with you."

The little girls came forward, and Mrs. Thompson led them into the nice, warm dining-room.

"Now let me take off your things," said the lady, and you shall eat your supper while I have a chat with you. Tea is just ready."

"Please, ma'am, we are not beggars," said the older one, her pale cheeks flushing.

"Of course you are not," said Mrs. Thompson, quickly. "You are my visitors."

The little girls looked shyly at each other, and then dropping their heads with a pleasant smile, submitted to have their hoods and shawls removed.

"Now," said Mrs. Thompson, after the tea had been finished to the satisfaction of all, "I am going to make you a little present to take home to your mamma. My friends often make me presents, and if I can, sometimes I return them; but as many of my friends are very wealthy, very often I can do no more than say 'thank you.' I like to get presents very much, don't you?"

"Once we did before papa died, but no one makes us presents now," said the elder little girl.

"Well, I am going to, and I love to have visitors, too, very much—and best of all little girl visitors—and so now that I have become acquainted with you, I shall expect you to come and see me often. Indeed, I shall be very much hurt if you do not."

"Oh, we will come!" said the elder one. "I think it is nice to have such a sweet place to come visiting don't you, Gertie?"

The little one nodded her head, and then Mrs. Thompson, with gentle fingers, again robed the little girls saying, "You may bring the basket back the next time you come to see me."

"Yes, ma'am," they replied in chorus, clutching hold of each other's hands, as they started down off from the porch.

Mrs. Thompson watched them until they turned a corner, and then she went into the house, wondering if she should ever see them again.

But scarcely a week had passed before they came to restore the basket, and after that they became frequent visitors, always meeting with a kind reception.

At last a holiday arrived, and again Mrs. Thompson found them upon the front porch.

"Please, ma'am," said the smaller one, the bright smile breaking out all over her face, "we have come to spend all the day with you."

"Yes, we don't have any matches to sell today," said the other.

"I am so glad," said Mrs. Thompson. "Come right in and take off your things;" and taking each by the hand she led them into the parlor full of grown up ladies.

The little girls hung back, the elder one saying: "Please ma'am, we didn't know that you had other company."

"Oh, that's no difference," smiled Mrs. Thompson. "Ladies, let me make you acquainted with my two little friends, Nellie and Gertie Harrington."

The ladies smiled and nodded, though some could not conceal their surprise, and Mrs. Thompson, to put the little ones more at their ease, seated them on the sofa with a beautiful book of prints to engage their attention.

They seemed very well contented until they had looked the book through, then Nellie said: "Please, Mrs. Thompson, if you'll get our things, we'll be going now."

"Indeed! I guess you will not go without your dinner," said Mrs. Thompson, "after the table is already set for you and everything."

The little ones half-smiled, half-blushed, then walked out with their hostess and occupied a position at her right and left.

After the meal as the ladies were walking back into the parlor, the little one pulled her sister's dress, whispering: "What did you do with it, Nellie?"

"Slipped it back of the lounge," blushed Nellie. "Please, Mrs. Thompson, we brought you a present, but hated to give it to you before all the ladies. If you will wait a moment out here I'll go and get it."

Mrs. Thompson took a small packet from the little girl's hand as she returned from the parlor, and very carefully undid the wrappings.

"This for me?" asked the lady, as a beautiful picture came to light.

"Yes; our present to you," smiled Gertie.

"Where did you get it?" asked Mrs. Thompson.

"Mamma drew the picture, and Gertie and I made the frame out of acorn cups; mamma taught us. Do you like it?"

"Like it!" exclaimed Mrs. Thompson, and abruptly turned to her visitors, saying: "Just what a lovely present my two little friends have brought me; a beautiful pencil sketch by their mother. Is it not beautiful?"

"It took a long time to draw it," said Nellie. "It is mamma's childhood home. There is the old mill close by—grandpapa owned it; and that old building with the moss and ivy clinging to it, was where they went to church."

"I shall prize it very much," said Mrs. Thompson, hanging the picture between two costly chromos, and she would not let the little girls go home until the last lady had gone, and then just as the street lamps had been lighted she put on her cloak and hat, and taking each girl by the hand said:

"It is now time for me to visit you. I am going home with you to spend the evening."

The little ones were delighted; keeping up a half skip and jump by her side, now and then pressing her hand lovingly with their tiny fingers.

Mrs. Thompson went into the one neat room, and to the children's introduction to the pale little woman sitting sewing by the window she went straight up to her and throwing an arm around her neck left a kiss upon her cheek, then laughingly throwing off her things, she took up a piece of sewing from the table and seating herself, her fingers flew as swiftly as Mrs. Harrington's as she kept up a gay chat all the while.

After that Mrs. Thompson visited the poor widow many times, and the latter in return came to love to visit the kind lady as well as did her little girls

At one time, two years later, in a conversation with a good clergyman, the widow said: "Oh, the children do not sell matches any more, but go to school, and it all came through Mrs. Thompson, sir; in fact, everything we have almost," and the widow paused a moment to gaze admiringly upon her bright carpet, the snowy curtains, the flowers and bird in the windows, then continued: "I never saw such a woman. Somehow she has a way of doing things that you don't know it until after it is done, and I do not believe she ever breathes a word about what she does."

"No, I guess not;" said the preacher, "for I have been her pastor a number of years and she is my wife's most intimate friend, yet have I never heard from her lips an account of one good action."

"Mrs. Thompson is a lady who does not sound a rumpet before her in doing her alms, therefore will she be rewarded openly by her Father in heaven. 'Blessed are they who knoweth their Master's will and doeth it.'"—National Baptist.

"Cross Patch."

This was the nickname Helen's mates all gave her, and I'm sorry to say it was appropriate. She was interesting in many ways, but cross from morning till night, and though not in her teens, "crow's feet" already disfigured her brow. A voice originally sweet was fast becoming shrill and discordant, and rosy lips, from a habit of pouting, protruded far too much for beauty. She wondered why other girls were greater favorites than herself; why her mother's most intimate friends soon became weary of and indifferent towards her. Some of these ugly facts stared her in the face every day. Still she never stopped to reflect on the cause of such disagreeable effects, but fretted, fumed and scolded because everybody was having nicer times than herself.

She had a darling blue-eyed sister, golden-haired, sunny faced, with a nature so genial and a disposition so lovable, her friends, old and young, called her "Sunbeam."

A regular duty of these two sisters was to wash up the breakfast and tea things each day, to relieve their mother, who was burdened with many cares, but deprived herself of their assistance at other times that they might attend school.

One March morning a heavy sleet covered the ground. After breakfast, as Eva was feeding the poultry, Helen looked out of the window and noticed her sister's happy countenance as she stood with her flock of white Leghorns and Chillagoogs around her; some of the tamest were eating crumbs from her hands. Although a pretty sight, it roused Helen's envy, and her cross spirit vented itself in scolding. "You lazy girl! Out there playing with those chickens! Come right in to your work!" Eva made no reply—only continued to smile and scrape at the dish she held in hand. This was too much for "Cross Patch;" so she crept up behind Eva, and jerking her by the arm, exclaimed, "You naughty girl! Why don't you come in when I call you?" The plate shivered to atoms—a small matter, however, compared with the accident that befel poor Eva, for she slipped on the ice in such a manner as to dislocate her hip, and was carried into the house shrieking with pain. A surgeon was summoned, and all that love and skill could devise was done for her relief, but for hours her suffering was intense. This deplorable accident finally resulted in a disease of the hip, by which poor Eva was rendered a cripple for life! You may rest assured that Hellen was cured of her scolding; a terrible cure certainly, but a sure one. No one ever heard a cross word escape her lips again; but tears often filled her eyes, and her perfect devotion to her injured sister was attested by many delicate and loving attentions. Helen hunted the woods for the earliest wild flowers; gathered baskets of tiny rocks, shells, lovely mosses, ferns and lichens, read and sang to Eva; caressed her tenderly as if trying (ah! so vainly!) to make amends for past unkindness. Helen could never be happy again. She wore a sad face and her heart was sadder still, aching with bitter remorse and unavailing regrets.

The neighbors and school children clubbed together, and purchased a comfortable invalid's chair for their little favorite Eva, and during the pleasant spring days Helen took a mournful pleasure in wheeling her sister around the yard under the lilacs, the rose bushes, the cherry and apple trees. Grateful smiles were her sweet reward, for Eva's was a forgiving heart, and though a daily sufferer during the few years she lived, the little invalid was ever patient and uncomplaining. Persons often remarked, "What a pity her bright young life should have been thus overshadowed!" They could not see that darker, invisible cloud which brooded over Helen's spirit, Helen's home, Helen's life, and all the sad result of a needless display of ill-temper. Dear children, never scold! Never ill-treat a brother or a sister. You know not the sorrow it may cause. Be "sunbeams," like Eva, if you would be loved, lovely and happy. Little children, love one another."—Canada Presbyterian.

Blushing and Blanching.

Blushing is occasioned by sudden dilation of the small blood vessels, which form a fine network beneath the skin, and when they admit an increased volume of red-blood, cause the surface to appear suffused with color. Blanching is the opposite state, in which the vessels contract and squeeze out their blood, so that the skin is seen in its bloodless hue. The change effected in the size of the vessels is brought about by an instantaneous action of the nervous system. This action may be induced by a thought, or, unconsciously, by the operation of impressions producing the phenomenon habitually. In a word, blushing may become a habit, and it is then beyond the control of the will, in so far as the will can generally, if not always, conquer any habit. It is almost always useless, and certainly seldom worth while, to strive to cure a habit of this class directly.

The most promising course is to try to establish a new habit, which shall destroy the one it is desired to remedy. For example, if blushing is, as generally happens, associated with self-consciousness, we must establish the sway of the will over that part of the nervous system which controls the size of the vessels by calling up a feeling opposed to self-consciousness. It is through the mind these nerves are influenced. Then influence them in a contrary direction by antagonizing the emotion associated with blanching. Thus, if the feeling which causes the blushing be expressible by the thought, "Here am I in a false and humiliating position," oppose, or still better, anticipate and prevent, that thought by thinking, "There are you daring to pity or feel contempt for another." Avoid going on to think who that "other" is, because the aim must be to eliminate self. Constitute yourself the champion of some one, any one, and everybody, who may be pitied, and the ever-zealous and indignant foe of those who presume to pity. Most persons who blush with self-consciousness blanch with anger, and this artificial state of mock anger will soon blanch the face enough to prevent the blush. It only requires practice in the control of the emotions and the production of particular states at will—the sort of expertness acquired by actors and actresses—to secure control of these surface phenomena. Blushing and blanching are antagonistic states, and may be employed to counteract each other, control of the physical state of the blood-vessels being obtained through the emotions with which they are associated.—Lancet.

Neglect of the Eye.

Whatever an ounce of prevention may be to other members of the body, it certainly is worth many pounds of cure to the eye. Like a chronometer watch, this delicate organ will stand any amount of use, not to say abuse, but when once thrown off its balance it rarely can be brought back to its original perfection of action, or, if it is, it becomes ever after liable to a return of disability of function, or the seat of actual disease. One would have supposed from this fact, and from the fact that modern civilization has imposed upon the eye an ever increasing amount of strain, both as to the actual quantity of work done, and the constantly increasing brilliancy and duration of the illumination under which it is performed, that the greatest pains would have been exercised in maintaining the organ in a condition of health and the greatest care and solicitude used in its treatment when diseased. And yet it is safe to say that there is no organ in the body the welfare of which is so persistently neglected as the eye.

I have known fond and doting mothers take their children of four and five years of age to have their first teeth filled, instead of having them extracted, so that the jaw might not suffer in its due development, and become in later years contracted, while the eye, the most intellectual, the most apprehensive, and the most discriminating of all our organs, receives not even a passing thought, much less an examination. It never seems to occur to the parents that the principal agent in a child's education is the eye, that through it it gains not only the sense of the methods and ways of existence of others, but even the means for the maintenance of its own; nor does it occur to the parents for an instant that many of the mental as well as bodily attributes of a growing child are fashioned, even if they are not created, by the condition of the eye alone.

A child is put to school without the slightest inquiry on the part of the parent, and much less on the part of the teacher, whether it has the normal amount of sight; whether it sees objects sharply and well defined, or indistinctly and distorted; whether it be near-sighted or far-sighted, whether it sees with one or two eyes; or finally, if it does see clearly and distinctly, whether it is not using a quantity of nervous force sufficient after a time not only to exhaust the energy of the visual organ, but of the nervous system at large.—Dr. Edward G. Loring.

Hanging Gardens of Assyria.

Mr. Rassam's excavations on the Mujelibi Mound have proved that this was the site of the famous hanging gardens, for in its ruins he found wells, aqueducts, and ponderous masses of stone, all proving that the building had been erected, as the Greek writers say, to imitate mountain scenery. The stone used was a black basalt, which is found only in the Armenian hills, and the immense masses must have been floated down the river. In a mound to the south of the mass of city ruins, called Jumjuma, Mr. Rassam discovered the remains of a rich hall or palace, with columns composed of enameled bricks and mosaic; the cornices were of painted brick, and the roof of rich Indian black wood. From the position of this palace or banqueting hall it would appear to have been situated on the bank of the river, and was probably the site of the state festivals and banquets. The inscriptions found there prove the edifice to have been erected by Nebuchadnezzar, and probably beautified by his successors.—Athenæum.

There seems to be a difference between Cardinal Nina, Papal Secretary of State, and the Jesuits as to conduct on the Belgian education laws. The former is for moderation and the latter would go to extremes. The Pope hesitates, meanwhile the threatened refusal of the sacraments by the Bishops to the elementary school teachers who retain their posts under the new system, has so far led to the resignation of only one hundred out of a total of seventy-five hundred teachers.

The Agence Russe, semi-official organ of Russia, denies that that power is intriguing with Afghanistan, and the denial is probably true. The Agence says: "Had Russia wished to create difficulties for England she would have liberated Abdul Rheman, the pretender to the Afghan throne, whom, on the contrary, she is watching on the Samarcand, and preventing his flight to Afghanistan. Events at Cabul and in the Turcoman territory tend to prove the necessity of a good understanding between England and Russia."

He has proved to the world that Consumption can be positively and permanently cured. The Doctor now gives this Receipt free, only asking that each remit two three cent stamps to pay expenses. This Herb also cures night-sweats, nausea at the stomach, and will break up a fresh cold in twenty-four hours. Address, CRADDOCK & CO., 1032 Race St., Philadelphia, naming this paper.

WICKED FOR CLERGYMEN.

"I believe it to be all wrong and even wicked for clergymen or other public men to be led into giving testimonials to quack doctors or vile stuffs called medicines, but when a really meritorious article is made up of common valuable remedies known to all, and that all physicians use and trust in daily, we should freely commend it. I therefore cheerfully and heartily commend Hop Bitters for the good they have done me and my friends, firmly believing they have no equal for family use. I will not be without them." THE GENUINE

CELEBRATED

FOR THE CURE OF

Hepatitis, or Liver Complaint,

DYSPEPSIA AND SICK HEADACHE.

Symptoms of a Diseased Liver.

PAIN in the right side, under the edge of the ribs, increases on pressure; sometimes the pain is in the left side; the patient is rarely able to lie on the left side; sometimes the pain is felt under the shoulder blade, and it frequently extends to the top of the shoulder, and is sometimes mistaken for rheumatism in the arm. The stomach is affected with loss of appetite and sickness; the bowels in general are costive, sometimes alternative with lax; the head is troubled with pain, accompanied with a dull, heavy sensation in the back part. There is generally a considerable loss of memory, accompanied with a painful sensation of having left undone something which ought to have been done. A slight, dry cough is sometimes an attendant. The patient complains of weariness and debility; he is easily startled, his feet are cold or burning, and he complains of a prickly sensation of the skin; his spirits are low; and although he is satisfied that exercise would be beneficial to him, yet he can scarcely summon up fortitude enough to try it. In fact, he distrusts every remedy. Several of the above symptoms attend the disease, but cases have occurred where few of them existed, yet examination of the body, after death, has shown the LIVER to have been extensively deranged.

AGUE AND FEVER.

DR. C. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS, IN CASES OF AGUE AND FEVER, when taken with Quinine, are productive of the most happy results. No better cathartic can be used, preparatory to, or after taking Quinine. We would advise all who are afflicted with this disease to give them a FAIR TRIAL.

For all bilious derangements, and as a simple purgative, they are unequaled.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

The genuine are never sugar coated.

Every box has a red wax seal on the lid, with the impression DR. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS.

The genuine McLANE'S LIVER PILLS bear the signatures of C. McLANE and FLEMING BROS. on the wrappers.

Insist upon having the genuine DR. C. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS, prepared by Fleming Bros., of Pittsburgh, Pa., the market being full of imitations of the name McLane, spelled differently but same pronunciation.

PREVENT YELLOW FEVER!

It has been well proved that prevention is better than cure. A very simple and effective preventative for Yellow Fever and other fevers has been found in BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTERS. They were used during last season in New Orleans very successfully. The common method of using them was to apply them over the stomach, changing them every week. They are one OF THE MOST ACTIVE ANTISEPTICS and seem to destroy the poison. One reason why they are of special value is that they stimulate the digestion, and thus enable the system to overcome the influence of the malarial poison. They are a cheap and almost certain preventative. Ask your physician about them. Benson's Capsine Plasters are a sure preventative and cure for chills and fever if worn as above. Price 25 cents.

BURIED WITH CHRIST BY BAPTISM.

A ministerial brother has requested me to give him my opinion of Rom. 6: 2–4. With the permission of the editor of the PRESBYTERIAN, I will do so through the columns of that paper. It will be needful to make a few preliminary statements.

According to the invariable usage of the classics, and of the Old and New Testament writers, the word baptizo represents a certain state or condition into which the subject of the baptism is put, without any reference whatsoever to the mode by which that condition is induced. The following is Dr. Dale's definition of classic baptism: "Whatever is capable of thoroughly changing the character, state or condition of any object, is capable of baptizing that object; and by such change of character, state, or condition does, in fact, baptize it." A person baptized into water will inevitably be drowned, unless he should quickly be unbaptized, that is, taken out of the condition into which he was put by his baptism.

The Greek writers also frequently use the word baptizo in cases where the receptive element is not physical, but ideal, directly indicating the condition into which the baptism puts the subject of it; as "baptized into drunkenness," "baptized into sleep," &c. In case of baptism into drunkenness, wine is the agency, but there is no physical receptive element. The drunken man was not put into wine, but the wine was put into him. In the Jewish baptisms water or blood was the instrument, and the ideal element indicating state or condition was ceremonial purification. In the baptisms of the New Testament, the element indicated by eis is never physical, but ideal, indicating the condition of the person baptized; as, "Baptizing them into the name of the Father," &c. (Mat. xxviii: 19); "Baptized into the name of the Lord Jesus" (Acts viii: 16, and xix: 5); "Baptized into Jesus Christ," and "into His death," and "baptism into death," (Rom. vi: 3, 4, Gal. iii: 27); "Baptized into the name of Paul" (1 Cor. i: 13, 15); "Baptized into Moses" (1 Cor. x: 2); "Baptism of repentance into the remission of sins" (Mark i: 4); "Baptized into one body" (1 Cor. xii: 13.

In the language of Dr. Dale, "The prepositions eis and en, in connection with baptism throughout the New Testament, are used with a severe discrimination which has no exception. The former (eis) is invariably employed to designate the receptive element (which is always ideal), and the latter (en), or the dative alone, is always used to denote the agency, whether efficient, that of the Holy Spirit, or symbolic, that of water."

In the passages above referred to, and in many others, the words "baptize" and "baptism" indicate a condition into which the soul is brought by the Holy Spirit, where water as an agency is not only not allnded to, but is necessarily excluded.

In the passage in Romans nnder consideration there is no allusion to water; and the Apostle does not say, we are baptized into water, or with water, but "into Christ" and "into His death."

If the practice of the "Baptists," and their interpretation of this passage were correct, then the passage would have to be paraphrased (altered) to read thus: "So many of us as were dipped in water into Jesus Christ, were dipped in water into His death. Therefore we are buried with Him by a dipping in water into His death."

I confess that I cannot make any sense of such an interpretation. As a dipping consists in a putting in and taking ont, is a person thus put in water and taken ont of water, also really or professedly put in and taken ont of Christ? The Apostle makes no allnsion to any dipping in water, hnt he refers to that work of the Holy Spirit by which a sonl is put in the Lord Jesus Christ, not to be taken ont, but to remain in Him forever. He is alluding to true Christians, and not to those who, supposing they were baptized with water or dipped in water, might or might not be true Christians. They are described as "dead to sin" (verse 2), "freed from sin" (verse 7), "alive unto God" (verse 11). As the death unto sin, and the life unto God, are not the death and life of the body, that is, physical death and life, the buried with Christ cannot possibly mean the putting the body into the grave or into the water "with Christ." The Apostle did not say that baptism with or into water buries us with Christ; bnt he says that baptism into Christ buries us with him. Tho two propositions are very different. Does the Apostle use the one and mean the other? To teach that ritual baptism buries the body would be to teach an absurdity—death by drowning as an ordinance of the visible church. And to teach that ritual baptism buries the sonl, would be to teach rank heresy, if it taught anything at all. Besides, can the putting a person into the earth or into the water, and taking him out immediately be properly indicated by the word bury? The passage makes no allusion whatever to a dipping in water. When Josephus used the phrase "Baptized into insensibility," did he mean, dipped in water into insensibility? When Clemens Alexander used the phrase "Baptized into sleep," did he mean dipped in water into sleep?

Buried with Christ is the condition of a sonl that is dead to sin. The death and burial of those to whom the Apostle is alluding (those who are baptized into Christ by the Holy Spirit), are their death and burial with Christ unto sin. The phrase "Baptized into Christ" represents a condition of the soul similar to the condition indicated by the phrase so often used in the New Testament, "In Christ."

The phrase "Baptized into His (Christ's) death" means virtually the same thing; just as the phrases "Salvation by our Lord Jesus Christ" and "Redemption through His blood" mean virtually the same thing.

Those who are buried with Christ continue buried with him, and at the same time are "risen with Him," and "alive unto God," and "walk in newness of life." P. T. P.

CONCORD PRESBYTERY.

OFFICIAL ABSTRACT OF THE MINUTES.

Concord Presbytery met at Bethesda church September 13th, and was opened by a sermon and constituted with prayer by Rev. J. H. Thornwell, the retiring Moderator.

There were present during its sessions fifteen ministers and nineteen elders.

Rev. J. M. Wharey was elected Moderator; Rev. James A. Ramsay and E. M. Stephenson temporary clerks.

Rev. R. B. Anderson returned the call from Newton church, which had been placed in his hands.

The reports of the licentiates, J. C. Kennedy and C. W. Robinson, in reference to their labors, were approved; and the latter was transferred to the Presbytery of Louisville, Kentucky.

The annual report of the Trustees of Davidson College conveyed the intelligence of an increase in the number of students, and of the healthy condition of its finances. The honorary degree of A. M. will no longer be conferred, and no more ministerial scholarships will be issued. Gratuitous instruction will be given to the sons of regularly ordained ministers of the gospel of all denominations. Rev. A. D. Hepburn, D. D., and Rev. L. McKinnon were re-elected Trustees of the College.

The Agent of Publication reported that the work of colportage is receiving increased attention among the Presbyteries, and that our colporteur had sold about $400 worth of books and about $150 worth of Bibles, and that there is reason to hope that the work will be self-sustaining, notwithstanding the fact that at the present time the expenses are $50 in excess of the profits. He also reported a small amount due the Presbytery by the Assembly's Committee of Publication.

The churches were urged to take up collections for the evangelistic fund of the Presbytery, and remit the sums collected to the treasurer, that the immediate wants of that department of labor may be supplied.

From the report of the narrative on the state of religion, ordered to be sent to Synod, it appears that the cause of temperance has made commendable advancement, that in most instances the spiritual condition of the churches is healthful, and that one church has enjoyed an extensive revival of religion.

Revs. E. F. Rockwell and J. Rumple, and Dr. R. L. Beall were appointed a committee to co-operate with the Assembly's committee on the observance of the Sabbath.

The Agent of Foreign Missions called to the special notice of the Presbytery the large contribution to that cause by the church, the Ladies Society and the Female Seminary in Statesville.

Action in behalf of the colored race was taken by the adoption of the following resolutions:

1. That our ministers and sessions are directed to seek out pious colored youth who may desire to enter the gospel ministry, and furnish the Committee of Education with the names and postoffice addresses of such as they can recommend.

2. That the Committee of Education shall carefully examine every colored person offering himself as a candidate for the ministry, on experimental religion and his motives for seeking the ministry; and if his examination is approved endeavor to secure the funds necessary to bear his expenses at some institution of learning approved by this Presbytery; and the committee is allowed to draw in any particular year any money remaining in the treasury for education, after the wants of the beneficiaries who are directly under the care of the Presbytery have been supplied for that year.

Revs. P. T. Penick, P. P. Winn, W. A. Wood, and Elders E. M. McNeely and J. H. Hill were appointed a committee to organize a church at Trontman's Depot, if the way be clear.

The following resolution was adopted and ordered to be read from the pulpit by our ministers:

That the members of our churches and congregations are advised not to attend upon the public religious ministrations of females, because by so doing they will encourage an act forbidden by the Word of God.

The next stated meeting of Presbytery will be held at Davidson College on Thursday before the third Sabbath of April, 1880, at 11 o'clock a. m.

Presbytery adjourned to meet in Statesville during the sessions of Synod, at the call of the Moderator. WM. W. PHARR, S. C.

MRS. CHAPMAN'S SCHOOL, GOLDSBORO N. C.

Mr. Editor:—Of a number of schools for young ladies in the State, I have a very high appreciation. They merit all the commendation they have secured, and a still wider sphere of usefulness. The names of the Misses Nash, Mrs. Grant and Miss Mitchell, and the Burwells, will never be forgotten in North Carolina. The elevating influence of character, formed under their direction will illuminate generations to come. And when the final award is voted them, and others like them, W. R. Atkinson will have no reason to complain of the place assigned him by an appreciating public. He has but recently joined the corps of the State's educators, but if I am not greatly mistaken in his powers, he has added to it an immense force.

Now one word for our home institution—Mrs. Chapman's school. This would be needless, but that the school has been but recently organized, and therefore has not yet secured the share of public attention which it so greatly merits. As an educator, Mrs. C. needs no commendation. Few persons in the State can show so large a number of fine characters, the result of personal instruction, as she. For a number of years her name was intimately associated with the educational history of Newbern, and then of Wilmington, is entirely familiar in the East, and well-known too in the western part of the State.

Her instruction is of that very kind which it greatly needed—having a large share of honest conservatism. The education of our day, and especially the female education, is imbibing too much of the spirit of the times—the spirit of push. Hurry is the watchword, and many girls are hurried into an education, which at best is superficial nonsense. A graduate was asked if she had studied Butler's analogy. Her reply was, I have really forgotten, but if it is in the catalogue I studied it. It was in the catalogue, and she had forgotten—forgotten that she had studied Butler's analogy.

That educator is sadly stupid, who does not abandon old, exploded errors, and appropriate new truth in his department of work. The world is yet in its infancy on the subject of education—the word has not been defined. What is education? Close books, and answer. What an endless variety we should have—worse than Sidney Smith's definition of conscience.

But the temple has been somewhat purified. Many an opinion which was a hideous skeleton to boys of my day, has been buried out of sight. These opinions are supplied by others, not always true; but having name of truth. We learn slowly on all subjects, whether astronomy or education.

Time was when the prominent idea of a school house was, that it afforded jail accommodations for wicked gamins. The idea now begins to prevail that it is a place not only for mental improvement, but intellectual enjoyment. When this shall be fully understood by all teachers and pupils, the world will have made vast progress, on this important subject.

But old opinions are not always false, some of them are immeasurable true—"thoroughness in education," for instance, compromise this to "rapid progress," "variety of attainment," or any thing else, and the poor child is victimized utterly—sent into the world under a delusion—to become a laughing stock to all sensible people.

Now among the excellencies of Mrs. Chapman's school, is the old fashion notion of thoroughness. Girls are taught to spell, to read, to write, arithmetic and grammar, and then if they have time, and capacity, the higher branches; but not till then. There is no such order as French, and then English, if time allow. Though the modern languages are taught by an accomplished instructor (Mrs. Welter), the leading idea of the school is a thorough English education.

The department of music is under the direction of Dr. Welter, a gentleman of broad culture, and unquestionable ability in his department. All the departments of the school are ably filled, and over the whole, shines the radiant benignty of the ripe scholarship, and lovely Christian character of Dr. Chapman. Those who send their daughters to this school may feel sure that they will breathe the purest air, intellectual and spiritual. 76.

COMMENTARIES ON THE OLD TESTAMENT AND PARTS OF IT.

NO. IX.

Rev. L. C. Vass, Newbern, N. C.:

The unexpected length of the last number crowded out a notice of two works on Isaiah, which are highly deserving of mention. Vitringa, on Isaiah, has been well known, and proved a source of great advantage to students of the evangelical prophet for more than a century and a half. The author not only gives an interpretation based on sound principles, but he examines carefully the views of previous writers, and gives reasons for dissent or agreement. His views are presented with great fullness and abundant illustrative information respecting the surrounding nations, both nearer, as Edom, Moab, Tyre and Philistia, and more remote as Damascus, Syria, Egypt and Babylon. Extensive introductions precede the commentary, discussing the prophet's life, the general scope of the prophecy, style, time of composition and canonicity. It is to be regretted that the work is so voluminous and also so scarce that few can avail themselves of it.

Lowth, the Bishop of London, during part of the latter half of the eighteenth century published a new translation of Isaiah, with critical and explanatory notes and preliminary dissertation. The work created such an impression abroad that a German translation was published at Goettingen, 1779-81. Bishop Lowth's freedom in amending the text on what appeared to many slight grounds, has doubtless impaired the value and circulation of the work. Bishop Stock, in 1804, made an effort to improve Lowth's version, resulting rather in a new and metrical translation. With whatever defects Lowth's work may be chargeable it will be found by the student a valuable aid.

COMMENTARIES ON THE NEW TESTAMENT—(Works included in commentaries on the whole Bible will not be noticed.)

1. Bengel's Gnomon of the New Testament has grown in reputation for nearly a century and a half. In 1858 an English translation, by four of the most accomplished scholars of Great Britain, was published by T. & T. Clark of Edinburgh. Thus this valuable work has received a new and enlarged circulation. The word "gnomon" was adopted by the author as expressive of explanation, involving both exegesis and exposition. He proposes to show or point out the meaning of the Scripture, as the gnomon of a dial points out the time of the day. To an unrivaled and happy brevity he unites the rare merit of perspicuity, and in his terse, weighty and suggestive notes he often condenses into a few lines matter which others require a page fully to set forth. The student will perhaps gain more for the cost of this work on the whole New Testament, than can be otherwise secured.

2. Bloomfield has given, for the special benefit of ministers and candidates and the more intelligent laymen, two critical works on the New Testament. The first is a "synopsis criticorum" published in 1826. He was a most eminent scholar in oriental and classical learning. In preparing this elaborate work he availed himself of the labors of his predecessors from Chrysostom, who led in sonnder methods of interpretation than any of the patristic writers, to the most eminent expositors of the continent and Great Britain, of the early part of this century. He discriminates between the latitudinarian and neological writings of the rationalistic German school and their really valuable contributions to sound exegesis. In such a work we could not expect the author to set forth so fully his own teachings. But in his second work, "The New Testament, with notes, critical, philological and exegetical," published about ten years later and introduced to American readers by Prof. Stuart of Andover, the author has well fulfilled the promise of its title. Adopting the text of Mill substantially, and carefully rejecting conjectural amendments, he has omitted all others, unless sustained by the united authority of the best ancient manuscripts, ancient versions, Fathers and early printed editions. An asterisk denotes readings which have been altered, and explanations of the reason are given in the notes. Brackets indicate interpolations and a line drawn over the clause or sentence in brackets, those words or sentences regarded as spurious, important readings, adopted by the best critics of that era, as Wetstein, Matthæi, Griesbach and Scholz, are noticed, when not accepted. This method of treating the vexed question of "various readings" is truly characteristic of the modesty of true learning, and might well have been imitated by those who followed Bloomfield, possessing his taste though not his ability for such work. His annotations are drawn from careful discrimination of the labors of the others, or original, derived from his extensive resources and excellent judgment. He aims to reproduce for the information of his readers what he concludes by his study was the sense intended by the author, instead of endeavoring, with Cocceius and others, to ascertain and present all possible meanings of the text explained. As against infidels, he endeavors to show that the Scriptures are intelligible to the humble and intelligent student, and that difficulties and obscurities are rather ascribable to the incompetency or dogmatic peculiarities of interpreters. He leans too decidedly to Arminian views, but with candor in statements, so that we not only clearly see his meaning, but often, by the very quotations made from other authors, are provided with means for refuting his own opinions. No one work of our day supersedes this learned and elaborate commentary on the whole of the New Testament, though many monographs on one or more parts may prove more satisfactory.

3. Beza, the colaborer and biographer of Calvin, wrote very fully on the New Testament. He gives, in parallel columns, the Greek text and the Latin vulgate and his own translation. His annotations, with verbal explanations, a synopsis of the teachings of the Gospels and of the Epistles, with commentary on the context involved, make a very full exposition. The work is specially valuable for the ability of the verbal criticisms and the sound exposition, to which subsequent writers on the New Testament were so much indebted. The printing of the work at Cambridge in 1642 is suggestive of the well known reputation in which the author stood among the English Puritans. In the same volume we have the commentaries of J. Camerarius, a French Protestant and very learned Greek scholar. It is very brief and is rather a work of "Notes" on which one may base more extended expositions.

4. DeBeausobre and L'Enfant, on the New Testament, deserves passing notice, not so much for any specially valuable contributions to the interpretation of the New Testament as for being one of the few valuable translations from the original Greek into the French language. The many "excellent and judicious observations" contained in the work comprise the substance of remarks offered by the best interpreters.

5. Doddridge's "Paraphrase and Version of the New Testament, with critical notes and a practical improvement of each section," is a work which lays no claim to originality, but is one of the best specimens of a combination of that "knowledge" which "dwells in heads replete with thoughts of other men," with the wisdom "which dwells in minds attentive to their own." The book is eminently adapted to meet the demand for which its name, "Family Expositor," indicates, which was the purpose of its pious writer in compiling it, and well sustains the reputation of the author of the "Rise and Progress of Religion," for a thorough knowledge of practical or experimental divinity, derived from a familiar acquaintance with the Word of God.

6. Erasmus' Paraphrase on the New Testament, with notes, is among the earliest productions of the writers of the Reformation. His preface is dated 1521. Both his accurate knowledge of the Greek language and his celebrity as the editor of the first printed edition of the entire New Testament in Greek, a work which passed through five editions, have served to impart to this, his only effort in explaining the words of the book, a rare and continued interest. At the same time, it will be found that his paraphrase and notes furnish the germs of the views which more recent writers have developed more fully.

8. Alfords' voluminous critical and exegetical commentary is perhaps the most important work on the New Testament produced in our generation. He gives a carefully, critically revised text, a digest of various readings, marginal references to verbal and idiomatic usage and extended introductions to the several books of the New Testament. However one may differ from some of his dogmatical views, and correctly criticise their fair induction from the Scriptures he explains, the meed of high praise is due him, for his diligent and laborious execution of such an enterprise as the production of a work so full of the apparatus for a critical study of the New Testament.

9-10. Of Wolff's "Curæ Philologicæ" on the New Testament and Wetstein's celebrated critical work, it is only necessary to say that both deserve attention for their acknowledged ability, the first in a discriminating exhibition of the views of others, and the second for full illustrations of the text of the New Testament by quotations from Jewish, Greek and Roman writers.

11, 12-13. Kyphe, Elsna and Raphelius have not written commentaries but rather illustrations of the idiomatic passages, and use of particles, derived from extended parallels gathered from the Greek classics. Any one or all of these works may constitute valuable aid to the careful and minute investigations of the grammatical interpreter.

Yours truly, B. M. SMITH.

"GIVE WHAT THOU COMMANDEST, LORD."

Oh, give what Thou commandest, Lord,
Then as Thou wilt command!
I will return to Thee the wealth,
Which falls from out Thy hand.

Give tears—that I may weeping see
The sins which pierced Thy breast,
Then I will mourn at sight of Thee,
In bloody garments dressed!

Give faith—that to Thy sacred cross
My soul may turn her eye,
That bound and crucified with Thee,
I to the Law may die!

Give life—that I may rise from death,
And leave corruption's bed,
To live in resurrection power,
With Thee, my living Head!

Give love—which from Thy loving eye
Shall draw its light divine,
That body, mind and soul may be
In consecration Thine.

Give peace—O Holy Son of God,
Share Thou Thy peace with me,
And I will trust Thy Father's word,
That I am heir with Thee!

Give hope—victorious Lord, and I,
Through all the heavenly land,
Will praise the grace which bids me trust,
A Brother's strong right hand!

THE RULING POWER.

It is either Christ, or self. When the Lord Jesus comes in, it is as a King; He ascends the throne of our will and affections, interest Himself in all that appertains to our welfare—temporally, spiritually. And so long as there is the daily, simple object to please Him, our actions gratify Him. If self be the end of our desires, then self is the ruling power. Our understanding, our will, our affections, our duties are but empty vessels till Christ fill them; He is not only All but in all—Col., iii.: "Christ is all, and in all." Therefore, if our hearts truly receive Christ, He is in all; "the law of the Spirit of Life in Christ Jesus hath made us free from the law of sin and death." We shall then have a secret disposition to do all pleasing to Him and reject all that would be displeasing. But if Christ be not the ruling power, then self reigns—even though we may be led to do those things which, of their nature, are not contrary to Christ. Zaccheus only went to see the person of the Great Teacher; but the result was the reception of Christ into his heart; and "the half of my goods I give to the poor," marked the beginning of the new reign in his soul.—The Appeal.

A MOTHER'S LOVE.

"There are two kinds of love—love which receives and love which gives; and as "it is more blessed to give than to receive," a mother's love which is always giving, is the choicest love of all. Children honor most the mother that loves most; and religious daughters make pious mothers. One hundred and twenty clergymen, being assembled together, were invited to state the human instrument of their change of heart. How many laid the crown of that mercy on their mother? Above one hundred! Her children rise up, and call her blessed."

It may seem but a thankless toil or a lowly destiny to care for little ones, and bear the weariness and pain that waits upon a mother's lot. But that mother who sees her children born again through her instrumentality, and made a blessing to the world in answer to her prayers, has not labored in vain nor spent her strength for naught.

And even if the fruits of all her toil and pain seem lost in the silence of some little grave, even then she need not be disconsolate. For, to Rachel weeping for her children, "Thus saith the Lord, refrain thy voice from weeping and thine eyes from tears: for thy work shall be rewarded, saith the Lord; and thy children shall come again from the land of the enemy. And there is hope in thine end saith the Lord, that thy children shall come again to their own border." (Jer. xxxi: 17.)—The Christian.

"BE OF GOOD COURAGE."

The power of Satan is great; and it is his appropriate business continually to assault the saints of God. It, then, in some unhappy and evil moment (by thine own fault, be it remembered,) he gains an advantage, lament over it deeply, but do not be discouraged. Remember, if the great enemy gets from thee thy resolutions, thy fixed purpose, he gets all. To be on the contrary, he, and he only, hath victory written upon his forehead, who, in the moment of his severest overthrow, hath still the heart to say, "With the Lord to help me, I will try again."—Upham.

OLD SINS.

Dr. Guthrie, says: "I have read of brave, stout captives, who have escaped from prison, but who brought away with them swollen joints or festering wounds, as marks and injuries of the cruel fetters. And do not old sins continue to hang about a man, even after grace has delivered him from their dominant power? Who does not need every day and hour to resort to the fountain of cleansing, and wash his heart in the blood of Christ, oftener than he washes his hands in water? We need to be renewed day by day; converted as it were, not once or twice, but every day. Surely, the happiness of a child of God lies mainly in this—that sin though it remains within his heart, has ceased to reign there, and that, made perfect at length in holiness, he shall enter at last into the full and glorious liberty of the children of God.

"I CAN'T GET ACQUAINTED."

So said a lady, who had recently been admitted by letter into the membership of a large church, to the pastor.

"I am very sorry, my sister," was the reply;" "the members are generally considered quite friendly, and there is much pleasant social intercourse among them."

"But scarcely any of them speak to me, or, seem to know me when I come to the church, or meet them in the street."

"Do you speak to them?"

"I do not like to speak first. It was so very different in the first church I joined."

"Where you passed the days of your childhood and youth, you were of course more widely known, and when you were baptized, it was a more direct introduction to the Christian sympathies and affection of the church. Do you attend our prayer meetings?"

"No; I have not been yet."

"The best place to form acquaintances among the members is at the prayer meetings. The Sabbath congregations are so large, and so many strangers attend, that members can scarcely become familiar with each other, if they meet only there. But if you are seen regularly at the prayer meeting, you will soon be recognized and welcomed. Have you been to the Dorcas Society?"

"Oh, no! I did not like to go where all were strangers to me."

"But how are they to become acquainted with you, if you do not give them an opportunity? I hope you have visited the Sabbath school?"

"No. I should like to take a class, but I have been waiting for an invitation."

"My dear friend, do you not perceive that you are far more to blame for remaining a comparative stranger among us, than the members of the church generally can be? You are waiting for advances to be made by those to whom you give scarcely an opportunity for friendly intercourse. You give them no reason to think that you desire an acquaintanceship. Now, my advice to you is, attend the more familiar meetings of the church, manifest an interest in its spirituality and prosperity, kindly recognize any whom you know to be members, dispense with the worldly courtesy that requires a formal introduction to these disciples of Jesus, and then if they remain indifferent to you, the blame will rest with them."—Watchman and Reflector.

DOCTRINAL INSTRUCTION.

The religion of Christ is a system of doctrine. The sacred truths of revealed religion are employed in the Holy Spirit in regenerating and sanctifying the soul. The experience of the Church shows that those who have been early trained in the doctrines of the Bible, are her most hopeful and steadfast children. Truth, early imbibed, is like seed thrown into the ground. The idea that doctrines must not be taught until they can be understood, involves the practical dilemma of discovering exactly when a beginning should be made. The safest course is to begin very early. Teach a child to answer "What is the chief end of man?" as soon as you please. Such lessons will expand his mind, strengthen his memory, and lay up stores of precious truth, which God may early use for his salvation. The Sabbath schools of every church should teach the formularies of that church. A Presbyterian Sabbath school that neglects to teach the Shorter Catechism, needs conversion.—Exchange.

PARENTS.

If there is such a thing as pure and perfect joy upon earth, it is that which fills the heart of a parent when he hears of the wisdom, and virtue, and prosperity of a child. If there be sorrow that admits not of consolation, it is the sorrow of a father for the vice and folly of an ungracious, thankless son, and for the misery into which he has plunged himself. We hope our young readers will remember this, and so live as to add to the happiness of their parents.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

FOREIGN.

Gleaned from exchanges:

Among the fruits of a revival in the Rhine Valley are two hundred cases of conversion in the town of Dusseldorf alone.

Many of the favorite Sankey hymns have been translated recently into the Hindoostanee laugnage by the Rev. Isaac Fieldbrave, the native pastor of the church at Lucknow, India.

It is said that so far as is known the first sermon on temperance, and announced by advertisement as such, in the old world, was preached by Rev. Dr. Edgar, of Belfast, in 1829. A jubiloe celebration of the occasion is to be held shortly.

In Central Africa a large number of Jewish negroes have been discovered. Nearly every family possesses the law of Moses on parchment. They trace their origin to the first captivity, when some of the natives fled to the desert and intermarried with the natives.

Count Carlo Pecci, the Pope's eldest brother, who has been paralyzed for some years, died in Rome on the 29th ult., aged 86. The Pope is about to resign the Bishopric of Perugia, and appoints as his successor Canon Foschi. The approaching consistory will be held on or about the nineteenth of September, but the date is not yet absolutely fixed.

The first stone of Cologne Cathedral was laid on August 15th, 1248. It is to be hoped that the next anniversary, the 632nd, will really see the finishing of the great minster. The two towers have now reached their last stage, and have only to be fitted with their massive caps of solid stonework.

Much astonishment has been caused at the War Office by the receipt of an application for a pension from Mrs. Butler, widow of the late Roman Catholic chaplain of the forces at Davonport, on behalf of herself and two children. As the marriage was legally solemnized, and as neither the law of the land nor of the service prescribe celibacy, the authorities had no alternative, but to grant the pension applied for.

The much-vexed question of a successor to Monsignor Bataille, the late Bishop of Amiens, is, it appears, at length solved. Monsignor Gnilbert, Bishop of Gap, a highly Liberal priest, who some time since made a sensation in the French Catholic world by declaring that the Church and the Republic could live together on good terms with each other, is with the assent of the Holy See, to be promoted to the vacant bishopric, he in turn being succeeded at Gap by M. Roche, another Liberal priest.

A Presbyterian convert in Siam not being allowed to marry without indulging in certain heathen rites, the matter was referred to the King. As a result of this appeal, the King has issued a proclamation, setting forth that every man shall be allowed in future without molestation, to worship God according to the dictates of his own conscience. Those who embrace Christianity are not forced to worship spirits, or to work on the Sabbath.

In the course of a sermon at St. Joseph's Roman Catholic Chapel, Liverpool, on "Holy Communion," Cardinal Manning said that of the 18,000 Catholics in the parish of St. Joseph only 3,000 came to the Sacraments of the Church. If he took from the 15,000 two or three thousand—those who might be children or perhaps bedridden—there were 12,000, the sons and daughters of St. Patrick, who were spiritually dead.

The Dundee congregation have unanimously resolved to again call Rev. David Macrae to their pulpit, with the understanding that a church unconnected with the United Presbyterian shall be formed. A minority of two elders and thirty communicants of the Gourock church decline to follow Mr. Macrae, and desire to adhere to the United Presbyterian Church.

The Baptists have 275 churches as the result of their work in Sweden. One of these, at Stockholm, has added to its membership 175 persons during the past year, and now has a total of 1,000 members. Its chapel, with a seating capacity of 1,500, is crowded at each service. A theological seminary, belonging to this denomination in Sweden, has twenty-one students.

Dr. Pusey, English Ritualist, acknowledges that he has for forty years received the confessions of all who came to him, and "these confessions, in many cases, became habitual to the wish of those who made them."

A Roman Catholic bishop in Poggio, Mirteto, says Catholicism is rapidly losing ground, and unless the secular arm of Europe interferes Italy will be a reformed country at the beginning of the twentieth century. Here is what is said by a Roman Catholic journal of Milan: "Since 1870 the Protestants built fourteen new churches in free Rome; opened many schools, asylums, meeting rooms; gave away millions of Bibles and tracts; distributed alms and made use of various means to induce the sheep to enter their fold. More churches and schools are to be built, and another new conventicle will be shortly erected in the Via Nazionale, near the Piazza Odeschalchi. This building is to form another Waldensian establishment. The Waldensian community is possessed of considerable resources, including one in the Corso near the Sciarra Palace. The Waldensians have twelve or thirteen thousand pounds standing in hand ready for purchasing a site for a new church. This money was collected in a few months in Scotland by the exertion of Mr. Stewart, of Leghorn. The Waldensians offered a large sum of money for Dr. Gason's church in the Piazza San Silvestro, but that gentleman refused to sell it. Sir Augustus and Lady Pagot are among the patrons of the Waldensians in Rome, and her ladyship was active in promoting the Waldensian bazaar this summer. The British ambassador is not so liberal towards the British church, and, in fact, has deserted Mr. Wass, the Anglican chaplain, for the American church in Via Nazionale."

HASTY ADMISSIONS.

Undoubtedly one of the worst evils to the Chnrch at the present time resnlts from the hasty admission of candidates to the sealing ordinances of religion. In the Presbyterian Church, candidates for admission are to be examined as to their knowledge and piety, and their qualifications in this regard, the Session as a conrt assembled and properly constitnted is to determine. Not many weeks since—to note disapproval—attention was called to the fact that a member of one of the largest Presbyterian churches in this country, stated in pnblic print that he had been received into the communion of the Chnrch without having appeared before the session, and without having nndergone any examination whatever. The circumstances nnder which the above statement was made, justifies the inference that in the chnrch referred to the practice of admitting persons without examination was general. That very many persons, sincere most probably, yet lacking the advice or instruction which might guard them against self-deception, would be admitted where such disregard of all precaution prevails, is almost unavoidable, and in all such cases the door of entrance is thrown wide open to any who might desire to enter from impure motives. Sometimes, candidates are willing to confer with the pastor, but from various reasons, in general diffidence, or a misnnderstanding of what will be reqnired, they request that they may be received without going before the session, upon the simple report of the minister, or by visitation of a special committee.

To conserve the pnrity of the Chnrch, conformity to those requirements which tend to gnard the entrance into membership, and to exclude the nninformed or nnworthy is essential at all times. The necessity for caution will be apparent from a consideration of that low state of spirituality in the churches, much of which is probably due to improper admissions even where all prescribed forms are rigidly observed. Surely this is not the time, if there ever was a time, when vigilance can be relaxed. Yet, all should remember that it is not the desire of chnrch officers to exclude persons who desire to nnite with those who profess love for the Savior, but to encourage and to welcome them. Examination by the Session is not a cnrious and nnkind inquisition, but most friendly inquiry designed not only to protect the Chnrch, but in an especial manner to serve the individual examined, by guarding him against possible errors which may be fatal. The great danger both to the Chnrch and the individual is that tenderness and sympathy, in themselves most proper, may be allowed to repress free inquiry.

The Second Presbyterian Church of Petersbnrg, Va., we are advised, has recently resolved not to consider an application for membership unless the party has had an opportunity for private conference with the applicant, and fnrther that the vote of the session shall be taken after the applicant has retired. What is proposed may be nnnsnal, yet in both regards it appears to ns to be most highly jndicious. All that any session shonld desire to know is that a party appearing before them is prepared to make a credible profession of faith in Christ. Bnt how is this knowledge to be obtained? It cannot be elicited by a single qnestion, or even a few leading qnestions. Not nntil one has a correct knowledge of sin, its nature and consequences, and of holiness its origin, its necessity and the means of its maintenance and growth; of repentance nnto life, the redemptive work of Christ—all tanght in the word of God, and imparted to the sonl by the Holy Spirit—not nntil he has a correct, albeit it may not be a fnll knowledge of these things, can he make a credible profession of faith. If one who has had no previous interview with the pastor, or other member of the session, appears, it is not at all improbable, that what he feels to be the strangeness of his situation will nnfit him for the intelligent answers which, nnder other circnmstances, he might make; or, if appearing cool and apparently self-possessed, how exceedingly difficult it is to determine whether such conduct results from correct apprehension of the truth, or is the mere consequence of mental intelligence without spiritual appreciation. It is not overlooked that a general acquaintance with one's modes of thought, and habits of life, may go far towards enabling a session to decide in cases like that proposed, bnt every member of this chnrch conrt has doubtless experienced the difficnlties of which we speak. Bnt action mnst be taken, and just here too often enter the feelings which lead to the reception of the applicant, perhaps to the injury of the Chnrch and the peril of his soul. We can scarcely think that a mere desire to increase the membership can influence the decision, bnt there is a feeling, rather a hope, (not justifiable, we believe), that in the Chnrch, and throngh the stated ministrations of the gospel, possible deficiencies will be corrected; the fear also exists, that rejection may cause a revulsion of feeling on the part of the applicant, and turn his thoughts entirely away from the subject of religion. Every member of session too, will bear witness to the fact, that where a pastor can state that the candidate has a clear appreciation of important truths, naming them, and the party concerned assenting, that the latter is placed at ease, and a few qnestions from any members of the session will greatly tend to entirely satisfactory information. Of conrse, no conference with the pastor precindes—or should be allowed to preclnde,—examination by the session.

The propriety of the applicant retiring before the vote is taken, is too obvions to require comment.

CAN IT NOT BE DONE?

The General Assembly recommended that the churches raise during the cnrrent year for Sustentation $40.000, for Evangelistic Work $20.000, and for the Invalid Fund $12,000.

In response to this action, the Presbytery of Lexington determined to raise $2000 for Sustentation; $750 for Evangelistic Work and $600 for the Invalid Fund. The Presbytery of St. Louis also appointed a committee to devise means to raise its proportionate share of these funds. Other Presbyteries have perhaps adopted similar measures. This is a move in the right direction. It is an effort to give practical effect to the recommendation of the General Assembly and to sustain its work in accordance with the exigencies of the Church. Many of the Presbyteries have, however, not yet met. Others of them which have already held their fall meetings but overlooked this matter, will probably meet during the sessions of their Synods. Would it not be well for these to take such action as is invited by the General Assembly? Will it not be possible too for Synods to give some attention to these important interests and to throw their moral weight in favor of a higher measnre of effort in their behalf? The welfare of the Church demands a more liberal prosecution of these indispensable branches of work, and the General Assembly has solemnly commended it. It only remains, therefore, for all who acknowledge the binding obligation of the recommendation, to do what they can to give practical effect by action.

OUR PROGRESS AS A CHURCH.

The subject of our lack of comparative growth, growth compared with other churches, is one of prime importance and demands attention. We propose in our next issue to enter npon its consideration, and plainly set forth the causes which we believe conduce to this most undesirable result. The views to be expressed, possibly may not accord with those of some members of our Synod, and our columns will be open to any who may be disposed to assign reasons for dissent. That the subject may evoke such friendly and courteous discussion as shall awaken the Chnrch to its importance, and lead to an encouraging advance in its prosperity is our earnest desire.

An article making a comparative exhibit of growth in the different Synods constituting our General Assembly, and understood to be from the pen of Dr. McIlwaine, is published in another column.

In this exhibit the Synod of North Carolina appears as having within the last five years, attained a greater ratio of increase than most of her sisters, yet this does not impair the necessity of rigid inquiry into the causes of our laggard advance compared with other leading denominations.

REPLY OF MR. MILLS.

Mr. Mills' book is a proper subject for criticism. Our criticism was free and candid, but we did not impugn the motives of Mr. Mills, certainly did not intend to do so. What we said about Masonry and the Church was in these words:

"Not ourselves a member of the Masonic fraternity, we nevertheless highly respect them, and have not spared our praise for the part they have taken in the support of the Orphan Asylum. All that Mr. Mills says of them is deserved, no doubt, but they are placed in contrast to the Christian Church in a way calculated to create a false impression with regard to Masonry, and to do marked injustice to the Chnrch."

Whether our article was a jnstifiable criticism on the book, can he ascertained by reading the book and comparing it with the article.

We are a friend to the Orphan Asylum, and really think that it does not receive the aid it should from our citizens.

Here is Mr. Mills' reply:

Meekly snbmitting to all criticisms of "Abont Children," and to those purely personal, as they claim to be admissible on account of the connection, I feel bonnd to ask that serions accnsations be made definite and specific. In your last issne I find myself accnsed of making "a false impression with regard to Masonry," and of doing "marked injnstice to the Chnrch." It is always wrong to make "a false impression" of any thing. When such a charge is made, the defender is entitled to precise specifications in order that he may correct his error or repent of his sin. My impression of Masonry is easily stated: In the hands of worthless or wicked men, the institution is worthless or wicked. In the hands of good men it confers many moral and social benefits on mankind, helps the needy and defends the helpless, even when they are nnconscious of danger. When Rev. Thomas P. Hunt was Chaplain of the Grand Lodge in Raleigh, and pastor of the Presbyterian chnrch, he was the spiritual adviser of a large number of influential men, who heard him with reverence and affection. It still seems to me that many ministers accomplish good by working with benevolent societies. After dne deliberation, I am not conscions of making any "false impression with regard to Masonry."

Very sorry indeed if I have done "injnstice to the Chnrch," the hope of mankind for happiness in eternity. I ought to love every Christian Chnrch, and, if possible, help to extend its influence. Yet I am deeply grieved at what I have seen among the churches. Several denominations laboring for a centnry in our State and passing throngh four bloody wars, opened no honse for the reception of orphans. This is a sad fact, bnt it can be stated without injustice. The daughter of a dead Confederate soldier was hired out by her nearest relative to be a servant in a negro family, and to wait on negro boys going to school.

I talked with the girl, standing within one mile of seven chnrches, and was sorry that no one tried to help her. I asked a prominent minister if he had ever given any thought to the orphan work of our State. He said "no, I never have;" and he has not done so yet.

I told a presiding elder how some orphans were neglected and enslaved in his district. He was sorry, promised to nse his influence for their relief, bnt never did. He lives in North Carolina, bnt does not belong to the North Carolina Conference, and I am glad of it. Our people are prosperous, exceedingly prosperons. Our chnrches are rich and able to pay pastors, support missions, and help all benevolent enterprises. The ministers as a rnle, are learned, talented, and consecrated. The ministry of the Presbyterian chnrch is now conspicuous for unnsnal ability. Bnt are these able men, these burning and brilliant gospel lights, making any snch impression on the people as we might reasonably expect? Some of them are, but every observer is obliged to see that many churches (while doing much good) lack the confidence of ontsiders to such an extent as to limit their influence. All denominations need more illustrations of the gospel, as preached; more men and women "going about doing good."

It is so hard to believe in a religion when its "living epistles" contradict its positive precepts! The best revivals are those which begin with big collections for benevolence. In many cases genuine revivals have followed our orphan entertainments. And if you wish to ruin a protracted meeting, just "omit the usual collection for fear of destroying the solemnity of the occasion."

Now I am very sorry if there is any "injustice" in these statements. Perhaps it may be healthy to face the facts, and profit by them.

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

With pleasure we publish the communication on first page relative to the very excellent school of Mrs. Chapman at Goldsboro. We are glad to pnblish this, because we have, where requested, extended the same privilege to all others. But we find it necessary, that we may do even justice to all concerned, to announce that hereafter, nnless a school is distictly a Presbyterian institution, and we are at liberty to so state, such communications will be declined. This conclusion we have reason to know will be in accord with the practice of our contemporaries, and will receive the sanction of those specially interested. This will not preclude the publication of any items of news concerning the schools, if such news is of general interest.

We are requested to call attention to the fact that the time of holding the State Snnday School Convention of North Carolina has been changed from the 7th and 8th to the 14th and 15th of November. We reprint the notice.

Rev. Dr. Whitfield, of Charlotte, as reported in the Biblical Recorder, says:

"O, I had such a royal time with Owen, and Thomas, and Toy, and Jones, and Flippo, at Norfolk. I felt like a Mecklenburg Presbyterian on commnnion Snnday, though I did not keep a face so solemn. Those are splendid fellows. A man could work better if he knew they were in a hundred miles of him."

Qnite so! Splendid fellows, those Mecklenburg Presbyterians. We are out of the hnndred-mile range, but we work the better because of them, although so far away. Happy Dr. Whitfield! here's our hand.

Major Robert Bingham writes with regard to the education of boys who expect th enter the ministry:

"I have one candidate and hope to get five before long. The one I have is No. 1."

"Old Landmarker" says, in the Richmond Religious Herald:

"I do not only believe that all baptized by Dr. Weaver previons to his recent baptism should be rebaptized, bnt wonld recommend the exclnsion from chnrch fellowship of snch as refuse to do this."

After all, this is only to be consistent; bnt it is startling to note where consistency in a wrong course will lead.

The Princess Louise, who as our readers are aware is the daughter of Qneen Victoria and wife of the Governor-General of Canada, exemplifies, says the Canada Presbyterian, the scriptnral principle, "Bear ye one another's burdens," in her visits to hospitals, infants' homes, etc., and the practical sympathy she ever manifests in the happiness and well-being of the nnfortunate inmates. Not merely taking a glance at the misery in general; bnt going carefnlly into the particnlars of individnal cases, thns proving that she is her mother's daughter in the warmth of her affections and her willingness to honor the Divine injnnction.

Presbyterians will please note:

"We have had a precious revival. At its close we made an effort to pnt the Herald into every family in our chnrch, and secnred for yon twenty-seven new subscribers."—Correspondent Religious Herald (Baptist.)

Pere Hyacinthe, from whom so much was at one time expected has retnrned to his old ways. The United Presbyterian states it concisely:

"Father Hyacinthe is conducting services in Paris but little different from the regular order of the Catholic Chnrch, from which he claims in some sense to have seceded. He has mass, prayers for the repose of the dead, and does not hesitate to do any papistically absurd thing that comes in his way. Some of the good people who took part with him in his chnrch are tired of the association, and a correspondent writes to one of the newspapers to say that "French Protestants are keenly feeling their mistake in joining and snpporting by press, pen and purse a man who now seizes every opportnnity for preaching against Protestantism."

NEWS NOTES.

We specially invite news from all quarters for this column.

From a friend we learn that Mr. J. L. Williamson, a licentiate of Bethel Presbytery, has a call to the pastorate of Tirzah and Waxhaw chnrches, in that Presytery.

ASHPOLE CHURCH, FAYETTEVILLE PRESBYTERY

Dr. D. Sinclair writes under date Oct. 2: There has been a delightful meeting at Ashpole chnrch. The services commenced on Thnrsday and continued until the following Monday. The Rev. H. M. Brearly was assisted by the Rev. J. A. Consar and the Rev. Dr. Evander McNair. The gospel was preached with great ability, faithfulness and power every day and night dnring the meeting. The weather was propitious and the congregations large and attentive. Three members were added to the chnrch, two on examination and one by certificate.

MT. CARMEL, FAYETTEVILLE PRESBYTERY.

Rev. S. C. Alexander writes: I have been preaching at this chnrch since last Jannary, one-fourth of my time. In August, we held a protracted meeting for seven days. The Holy Spirit came down in power. Our congregations were large and attentive. Many tears were shed. Nineteen members were added to the church. On last Sabbath one more came in, making twenty additions by examination.

Two prominent citizens over sixty years of age, and several men in middle life, with others younger, were volnnteers for the army of onr Great Captain. The chnrch was greatly revived. One man over eighty years of age, gives good evidence of living faith, hnt has not yet joined the chnrch—he feels so deeply his nnworthiness. I have been told that the Presbytery at one time discnssed the propriety of striking this church from its roll; bnt if the Lord has nndertaken to bnild it np it will yet be a praise in Zion.

I have seldom seen snch a shaking among the dry bones as has been in this valley. All praise to His name!

May sleeping saints be waked np all over onr land, and may onr chnrch go forward in the work of conquest.

A correspondent writes that Buffalo chnrch is beantifully located in abont a mile and a half of Sandford, N. C., and reflects great credit npon the entire commnnity, and especially upon Col. John B. Massemore, the architect. He thinks he can safely say it equals any of the city churches in our State.

Rev. Dr. A. W. Miller, of Charlotte, N. C., has retnrned from his evangelical labors in the mountains, to his pastoral labors. He preached in the Second Presbyterian church on the 28th nlt. Pending the repairs in the First church the two congregations worship together in the Second church. We get the item from the Southern Home.

Rev. Dr. J. R. Wilson has returned to his home, and his labors in the First Presbyterian church of Wilmington, N. C.

A friend writes us that the Second Presbyterian church of Petersbnrg, Va., is ahont completing a substantial brick manse on the church lot, corner of Washington and Gnarantee streets.

SODDY, Tenn., Oct. 1, 1879.

Mr. Editor: After an absence of nearly two weeks, preaching and visiting at Washington, Sweetwater, etc., and attending the meeting of Knoxville Presbytery at Madisonville, I retnrned yesterday evening almost too hoarse to pray at the revival now in progress at the M. E. chnrch at this place.

The meeting of Presbytery was a very pleasant and harmonious one. Bro. McCallie, of Chattanooga, preached the opening sermon and was elected Moderator. Elder Ralf, of the First church of Knoxville, was nominated for Moderator, and only lacked a few votes of being elected. The report of the Executive Committee on Foreign Missions was better than nsnal. So far as heard from, the Snnday schools were generally in a good condition; one reported an increase of 175 scholars during the last six months. Very few accessions to chnrches were reported, bnt the brethren all seemed deeply interested in the Master's work and desirous of a true revival within our bounds. Rev. A. C. Snoddy, of Holston Presbytery, was received and permitted to labor at Lebanon church. D. M.

OFF AMONG OLD FRIENDS.

In response to kind and earnest solicitation from old friends in a former charge, I tore myself away from my new chnrch and all, to spend a few days in the mountains of southwest Virginia. The papers just now seem to be "down" on ministerial vacations—even the bright "Interior" of Chicago, so I remark in passing that I went on a preaching visit. And thought it was a most charming vacation, neither health nor recreation led me to take the trip. I am not afraid to take the affirmative in discussing the qnestion: Is it wise, is it right to give a faithful pastor a vacation? Bnt not now.

Of the journey, in these days of convenient and rapid transportation, I need not say anything. Less than eighteen hours of traveling took me from Sanford to Max Meadow. There were also eighteen hours of waiting, as the connections, were not made in the direction I was jonrneying.

Two things struck me, (metaphorically I mean!) on the cars. One;—What pleasant friends one makes in traveling, and what a pleasure to meet friends too! I rode a hnndred miles with a gentlemen—educated, traveled, cultivated, well-read, modest and a fine converser—I didn't say conversationalist. The hours flew by, scenery, books, papers, scientific theories, fnn—all were charmingly commented on by my unknown companion. The Book of books—the one thing needfnl—the King and His Kingdom—were reverently and appreciatively spoken of. When he left the cars I felt thankful that in the jam, I had shared my seat with him. I learned that he was a professor in a Southern University.

I met other friends too. Among the trnnks and in the hnbbnb at Lynchburg, whom should I see bnt a presbyter of the First Church, Wilmington? Bnt I cannot tell you of all such pleasant snrprises.

The other thing I wished to speak of as noteworthy, was the kind of literatnre sold and read on the train. Ten years and less ago, one could not travel without having the most licentious and offensive reading thrust into his face for purchase. I do not know whether Mr. Comstock has had anything to do with it. I hope it is a change in the pnblic demand,—for the supply always caters to the demand. The great pnblishers have done wisely and well in printing cheap editions of really worthy books. The Half Hour Series—the various cheap "libraries" of novels, the Handy Volnmes, and Little Classics—the great papers, political, scientific and literary—these were the articles offered for sale. In North Carolina—good old State!—on two railway lines, I saw neat racks with Bibles in them, and they were read. I saw more than half a dozen travellers read from the sacred pages the morning I left. In Virginia too, I saw one lady reading Dr. James Alexander's precious volume of "Consolation," and another reading Goulburn's "Thonghts on Personal Religion." Of course, these were exceptional. Light literature is nsually the mental pabulum of travelers. Bnt from observation as careful as it could be, not to be noticeable and impertinent, I saw nothing that might not come into our houses, and be read by ladies or children.

It would hardly be fair to take snch a rnn as I did, on a lovely afternoon, from Lynchbnrg to Wythe county, without saying something of the mountains. The A. M. & O. Railroad crosses the Blue Ridge and the Alleghany, and other parallel ranges beyond. The monntains are not so lofty and ragged as those that guard our State, bnt the Peaks of Otter in Bedford not far from Liberty, and the Salt Pond in Giles, have a world-wide fame. The valley from Bnford's to Christiansburg is exceedingly enchanting, especially near Salem. Long slopes np to the very crest, smooth level valleys, softly rounded hills,—all are covered with verdure.—Since the Augnst rains doubly rich and green, while here and there are herds of cattle grazing in repose and content. Nestling in handsome groves, the mansions stand, surmounted by neat fields and quarters. Often as I have seen this country, by moonlight and sunlight, it still has new charms.

Passing through tunnels, and over ridges, along tumbling waters and it often seemed seeking

"Round purple peaks
Blue inlets and their crystal creeks," we bnrst at length upon the lovely valley of Max Meadows. The beholder is surprised at seeing so fair and sweet a view. Along the waters of Reed creek a valley broadens in some places nearly to the width of a mile, and with its adjacent slopes and hills forms a scene of unusual lovelinss. And now every spot is familiar—every place hallowed by some precious memory—every home sacred in recollection!

It does not become me to speak of matters so personal. Changes in almost every home bring tears to the eye. But they are still the same true, warm, good friends as when I left more than six years ago.

What a pleasure to go back and see them all! Not all! For

"Even friendship's lock yields to the key Held in the icy hand of death."

There are few honds so sacred as the pastoral tie. There is nothing that so sustains the fainting heart of the minister as the assurance that his people love him. There is nothing that so soothes the pang of separation when duty calls as the knowledge that their thoughts and their prayers are for him. All this and more I had. What a pleasure then to greet such friends!

But, after all, the minister's joy is in his work. God had graciously visited His people and refreshed Zion. Many whom I knew and loved, from whom I parted with sadness because "ont of Christ," I now greeted as "in Christ." They had "found the Lord!" Their faithful and beloved pastor had urged me to be with him at a continuation of the meeting that had proven a blessing to so many. If it is a joy to speak the message, if it is a joy to speak it to old friends, how much more was it a joy to tell of Jesus to those who desired to know Him? Snch was the privilege granted me, in the very church in which nearly ten years before I was ordained, and where I first assumed the solemn duties of a pastor's office. I cannot tell you how solemn, how precious, how delightful a time it was to me. The congregations were large, serions and attentive. The message was delivered. It is God's to grant the increase.

After six or eight days of preaching, and a few of visiting among old and tried friends, I bade adien and retnrned, having been absent two weeks. I need not say how cheered and refreshed I have been. I hope I was missed at home, but I am sure not one of my good and true people but was glad that so pleasant a trip and so delightful a season had been enjoyed by me.

OUR FIELD—ITS PROGRESS AND DECLINE.

We present herewith a table showing the strength of the Synods and of the whole Church in the years 1874 and 1879, and the relative increase or decrease in each during the intervening period. We ask our readers to study this table.

SYNODS.	1874. Ministers.	1874. Churches.	1874. Members.	1879. Ministers.	1879. Churches.	1879. Members.	Per Cent. of Increase. Ministers.	Churches.	Members.
Alabama	46	110	6,502	46	114	6104	0	3.6	Decrease, 6.1
Arkansas	35	78	3,387	41	79	3369	17.1	1.2	Decrease, .5
Georgia	90	163	8,161	89	179	9439	Decrease. 1.1	9.8	15.6
Kentucky	88	135	8,238	83	136	9374	Decrease. 6.	.7	13.5
Memphis	71	129	6.234	68	141	5790	Decrease. 4.4	9.3	Decrease, 7.1
Mississippi	73	161	8,161	70	166	8404	Decrease. 4.2	3.1	2.9
Missouri	67	141	8,000	73	131	7512	8.7	Decrease. 7.6	Decrease, 6.3
Nashville	63	115	7,554	61	116	8190	Decrease. 3.2	.8	8.4
North Carolina	94	206	15,453	117	222	17747	24.4	7.7	14.8
South Carolina	92	157	11,033	102	161	11230	10.8	2.5	1.7
Texas	58	106	3,681	80	149	5388	37.9	40.5	46.3
Virginia	191	263	19,552	219	298	24208	14.5	13.3	23.8
Whole Church	968	1764	105,956	1049	1892	116755	8.3	7.2	10.1

The following results appear:

1. Five of the Synods have fewer ministers, one fewer churches, and four fewer members than five years ago.

2. There has been very little growth in the Synods of Alabama, Arkansas, Memphis, Mississippi and Missouri, and in some of them a positive decline.

3. The growth in Kentucky and Nashville has been chiefly in members, both having fallen off in the nnmber of ministers, and having increased only one church each.

4. The growth in South Carolina has been considerable in ministers, but very slight in churches and members.

5. There has been a decrease of one minister in Georgia, but a considerable increase in churches and members.

6. The only Synods in which substantial progress in all the elements of ecclesiastical progress has been achieved are North Carolina, Texas, and Virginia.

7. The growth of the Church, as a whole, has not been large or encouraging.

In connection with these facts, it ought not to be forgotten that the period we are considering has been one of very great financial and social distress in a large part of our territory. It ought to be borne in mind too that the population of some of our States is possibly smaller than it was five years ago, and that the emigration from the congregations in some of these has been large, while the immigration into Texas accounts to a considerable degree for the relative gain in that Synod. Nor ought it to be overlooked that the great epidemic of last year and those of previous years have seriously injured many of our chnrches. When, however, due allowance has been made for these things, they hardly suffice to account for the condition of some portions of the Church. Nor are we able fully to account for it. Nevertheless, it is important that the facts shall be known, the causes of which, the Synods themselves may profitably inquire into, with the view of devising means in the use of which more gratifying results may be obtained. "Behold, the Lord's arm is not shortened that it cannot save, neither His ear heavy that it cannot hear." There must be a discoverable cause for the disparity in results noticed. From one standpoint, there is no good reason apparent, why the results in Virginia, Kentucky, and Missouri, or in North Carolina, South Carolina, and Georgia, should be so different. And yet there must be a sufficient reason, which can be found ont, if it is searched after by those who are familiar with the Church's work and the causes which promote or hinder it in the several Synods. Possibly presbyterial oversight is more thorough and practical in some of the Synods than in others. Probably there is a better Evangelistic system in North Carolina, Texas and Virginia, and they give more attention to strengthening the weak points and to occupy the waste places than is common in other parts of the Church. We do not suppose that there is more zeal or ability among their ministers, or more piety among their members, and yet as a fact, the ontcome of their labors in the extension and upbuilding of the Church is vastly greater, and we must believe that the reason is to be found, in part at least, in the fact that they give more systematic and earnest regard to efforts for occupying and cultivating the field entrnsted to their care. If this is so, then no argument is needed to induce Presbyteries and Synods which may not have taken special cognizance of these matters, to give good heed to them. The facts of the case speak for themselves, and constitute the strongest argument which can be offered. Certainly, there is nothing which claims more earnest attention from our ecclesiastical judicatories, after the preservation of the trnth in its integrity, and a maintenance of a Scriptural standard of piety in the churches, than the increase of the ministry, the growth and multiplication of churches, and the extension of religion throughout the land. Every possible effort ought to be made not only to conserve all the interests of the Church which have already been gained, but also to propagate and extend them far and wide, and to this end our Church courts, from the Session up to the General Assembly, ought to give good heed to devising and executing practicable plans of work for the extension of the truth, the salvation of souls, and the upbuilding and enlargement of Zion. It will not do to be content to stand still. Progress is the watch-word of our faith.—Ex. P., in Central Presbyterian.

PRESBYTERIAL MEETINGS.

St. Louis Presbytery.—Rev. W. E. Burke was received from the Presbytery of Lafayette. The pastoral relation between Rev. W. M. Stratton and Mizpah church was dissolved. With regard to the Assembly's resolution touching special collection of funds for the evangelistic course, the Presbytery recommends ministers and elders to use special efforts in this behalf. Rev. W. B. Y. Wilkie was dismissed to the Presbytery of Missouri. A committee on Sabbath Observance was appointed. A committee was appointed to see that all weak churches are visited by deputations going two and two, and holding protracted meetings.

Lexington Presbytery.—Rev. I. N. Campbell declined a call to Shemariah church for half-time, which call was placed on his hands about a year ago, and accepted a call from Union church for whole time. He will be installed on October 11th. The pastoral relation between Rev. C. W. Humphries and Bethesda church was dissolved. Watkins' Creek church was enrolled. A committee was appointed to collect facts and statistics relative to Sabbath observance. Presbytery required all the churches under its care to make an earnest effort to raise $20,000 as their proportion of the $50,000 asked by the General Assembly for the cause of Home Missions; that the churches also raise $750 for Evangelical work, and $600 for the Invalid fund. Dr. J. L. Kirkpatrick, and Rev. D. A. Penick, and elders J. T. L. Preston and D. M. Switzer, were nominated Commissioners to the next General Assembly. An adjourned meeting will be held in the lecture-room of the First church, Staunton, Oct. 9th, at 11 o'clock a. m., to receive and make arrangements for the installation of Rev. Alex. Sprunt, as pastor of the Augusta church.

Abingdon Presbytery appointed a committee to organize a church at Chatham Hill, in Smythe county, Va. The question of a division of Synod was referred to a special committee.

Indian Presbytery.—The organization of four colored churches was reported, and they were enrolled. Mr. Benjamin Woods was received as a candidate for the ministry. A committee was appointed to ascertain what amount of funds can be raised by the churches for the support of a mission to be sent ont to the Comanches, Kiowas and other wild tribes, and also to find a snitable man for the work. The report from the Narative was hopeful.

Presbytery of Nashville.—Rev. Alexander Cowan accepted a call to the pastorate of McMinnsville church. He will be installed Oct. 19th. Licentiate F. B. Thompson received calls from Madisonville and Hendersonville churches. Arrangements will hereafter be made for his installation.

Presbytery of Paducah.—Mr. Joseph H. McCullough was received as a candidate for the ministry. The standing committees were revised and changes made. The Narrative deplores the coldness and lethargy which exist.

Presbytery of Missouri.—Mt. Olivet church was re-enjoined to elected additional elders if the way be clear. An overture was received from the session of Brownville church relative to sessional duty. A committee was appointed to confer with the session. A committeo was appointed to organize a church at Dalton if the way be clear. Resolutions on Sabbath observance were passed, and a committee of three appointed on the subject. An adjourned meeting will be held in Columbia dnring the fall to receive Rev. W. B. Y. Wilkie from St. Louis Presbytery and to install him pastor of Columbia church.

West Lexington Presbytery.—Licentiate R. Cecil was received from Transylvania Presbytery. He accepted a call from the church at Nicholasville, and Presbytery decided to hold an adjourned meeting on Nov. 13th to ordain him and to install him pastor of that church. Rev. J. H. Morrison was dismissed to the Presbytery of Louisville. John Foxworthy, of Beard church, and Joseph H. Skinner, of Union church, were received as candidates for the Gospel ministry.

Tuscaloosa Presbytery.—Rev. I. P. Oshorno was received from the Presbytery of Columbia. Rev. J. W. Kerr was dismissed to the Presbytery of Mississippi and Rev. Thos. Ward White to the Presbytery of North Mississippi. The pastoral relation between Rev. H. R. Raymond, Jr., and Livingstone church was dissolved. Arrangements were made to organize a church at York Station, and also a colored Presbyterian church at Tuskaloosa. A tribute was adopted to the memory of the late Johnathan Bliss, for many years an efficient and faithful ruling elder. Progress was reported in the work of colportage by Mr. E. T. Going. Narratives from 26 out of 30 chnrches were encouraging, showing that all but two had had preaching during the year, 21 had Sabbath schools, 11 have prayer meetings, and five observe the monthly concert, and that most of them are in a healthy, growing condition. The recommendations of the General Assembly were urged upon the attention of the churches, and plans adopted for carrying them into operation. Gadsden was chosen as the place for the next meeting.

State Sunday School Convention of North Carolina.

The second annual Convention will be held in Greensboro on Friday and Saturday, the 14th and 15th of November, opening at 10:30 a. m. Organized counties are entitled to one delegate from each denomination in the county; other counties to two delegates from each county. The friends of the work will please look after the appointment of delegates. Delegates will please notify the Secretary of the Executive Committee of their purpose to attend. They will be met at the depot and conducted to their homes.

PRESBYTERIAN.

At the communion of Dr. Guerrant's Church, last Sunday, there were eight additions to the membership, seven of them by profession—Christian Observer.

On the 14th of September last, Rev. J. F. Strider, pastor of Rapidan Church, Presbytery of Chesapeake, resigned pastoral charge of the congregation. The congregation reluctantly assented. On 17th ult., the Presbytery dissolved the relation.

Mr. Wm. R. Brady was ordained deacon in the Lebanon Church in Hinds county, Miss., on 21st. ult.

Rev. Roderick Henderson has changed his post office address from Bradford, Canada, to Bishopville, Darlington county, S. C. He takes charge of the churches of Turkey Creek and Centre Point in Kershaw and Darlington counties, S. C.—Christian Observer.

Rev. R. W. Mecklin has changed his post office address from Batesville, Miss., to Water Valley, Yalabusha county, Miss. This does not indicate a change of work, but of location. He has been called as pastor of Sand Springs Church.—Christian Observer.

Rev. J. S. Shaw, without changing his work has changed his post office from Fayette, Miss., to Natchez, Miss.

Rev. G. S. Roudebush will conduct the Peabody school at Crystal Springs, Miss.

The health of Rev. Dr. A. L. Kline, formerly pastor of the Presbyterian Church in Brandon, Miss., has improved.

A correspondent writes to the Southwestern Presbyterian that on Sabbath, 28th ult., a communion service was held at the Second Mission, corner of Pleasant and Laurel streets. There were over forty communicants, and it was a precious occasion. There were three persons received on profession of faith in Christ, and of that number two were Sabbath school scholars, who manifested a clear view of the way of salvation in their examination before the Session, and it speaks well for the thorough instruction imparted in that school, and especially the drill in the Shorter Catechism by its present faithful Superintendent.

During the last few weeks, the pastors of three of the most important churches in South Carolina have tendered their resignations: the Rev. Dr. D. McQueen, of Sumter; the Rev. S. H. Hay, of Camden; and the Rev. Luther H. Wilson, of Yorkville.—Southern Presbyterian.

At the last communion season, seven communicants were added to Nazareth Church, in Enoree Presbytery, under the pastoral care of the Rev. R. H. Reid. At the same time $50 was contributed to Foreign Missions.—Southern Presbyterian.

The post office address of Rev. W. H. Woods has been changed from Middletown, Va., to Marlboro, Frederick county, Va., and the address of Rev. Wm. McCarthy has been changed from Shawneetown, Mo., to Ashley, Pike county, Mo.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Laying the corner stone of the colored Presbyterian church, was performed on Saturday last, in Winston. A Masonic deputation from Danville was present. The procession marched from Hinshaw's Hall to the site of the church, where J. P. Buford, W. M., performed the ceremonies of laying the corner stone. Rev. J. J. Hood then delivered the address.—People's Press.

A correspondent of the Africo-American Presbyterian reports a revival the result of two weeks meeting in Fayetteville, N. C. Fifteen young persons signified a desire to become Christians. Of this number three were added on examination and baptized. Other additions will be made as the meeting progresses.

From a letter of Rev. R. M. Hall to the Africo-American Presbyterian we copy the following relative to a meeting of Catawba Presbytery (Northern) in N. C.:

A member of this Presbytery has recently learned through a member of Mecklenburg Presbytery that one of our churches, Duncan's Creek, desires to change its ecclesiastical connections from this to Mecklenburg Presbytery, and Presbytery passed the following resolution:

"This Presbytery having heard that Duncan's Creek church wishes to transfer its ecclesiastical relations to Mecklenburg Presbytery, cordially approve of the action."

Rev. John H. Blake was granted a dismission from this Presbytery to Brazos (Texas) Presbytery.

SECULAR NEWS.

The Raleigh Observer says that one hundred and sixty-two students have entered at the State University this session.

The Dutch Arctic Expedition, after penetrating as far as Francis Joseph Land, has returned.

Forest fires were raging fiercely last week in the vicinity of Norfolk, Va. Many roads are impassable. The loss is difficult of estimate. Two large barns and a granary, all filled with grain, the products of the summer on the farm of John Tiernan, were destroyed.

The proposition before the trustees of the Peabody fund to ask the aid of the General Government in behalf of the education of colored persons has been postponed.

The following important decision has been rendered: The Assistant Attorney-General, upon a case recently submitted to him for the Postoffice Department, has given his opinion that, under the 226th section of the Regulations, which is section 3,894 of the Revised Statutes, as amended by the act of July 12th, 1876, letters addressed to lottery companies, or to individuals, when addressed to them as agents for such companies, are unmailable per se, and that postmasters should refuse to register a letter when so addressed. A circular has been issued in accordance with its provisions instructing all postmasters to refuse to mail or register letters or circulars so addressed, or to mail or register circulars to schemes against which the Postmaster General has issued orders under the provisions of sections 873 and 1,045 of the Postal Laws and Regulations of 1879. A list of these schemes, nearly 100 in number, may be found in the September and October Guide.

A stand at the Adrian, Mich., fair on which about two thousand persons were assembled, broke down on the 3d inst. Sixteen persons were killed and over seventy wounded, some it is supposed fatally.

Boston has sent a second $1,000 to the Memphis sufferers. The number of new cases reported for the week ending Oct. 4th is 68; whites 33, colored 35; total reported to date 1,347. Total deaths from yellow fever for the week, inside the city, 20; total deaths to date, 403. The disease continues to spread outside of Memphis.

Two hundred and fifty emigrants have arrived from Bremen, and are to settle, it is said, near San Antonio, Texas. Most of them are Prussians—the remainder Bohemians and Poles.

A lawsuit is likely to result from the famous walking match, because the track was a few yards short of a full mile in length.

Capt. D. R. Murchison, President of the Wilmington Compress Company, sent a check of $300 to the Fire Department of Wilmington, in behalf of the Company, and of Messrs. Williams & Murchison, as a testimonial of appreciation of the services of the firemen at the recent fire.

EDUCATION.

To the Chairmen of the Presbyterial Committees of Education:

Please bear in mind that application for aid to students must be made annually. The fact that a student was on our list last year makes no difference. If he wishes aid this year, application must be made by the Chairman of Education in his Presbytery. Brethren will also please state whether the student is in College, or in the Seminary. The undersigned has authority from the Committee to receive all students as beneficiaries for whom application is made in the regular way.

My postoffice address at present is Covington, Tenn., but letters addressed to me at Memphis will be forwarded. Quite a number of letters on the subject of Education have been addressed to Rev. Dr. Waddel, the former Secretary. Brethren will bear in mind that there has been a change of Secretaries.

E. M. RICHARDSON,
Secretary of Education.

PRESBYTERIAL NOTICES.

The Presbytery of Central Texas will meet (D. V.) at Robinsonville, at 11 o'clock A. M., on Thursday, October 23.

L. TENNEY, S. C.

Presbytery of Mecklenburg will meet at Philadelphia church, ten miles east of Charlotte, on the 17th day of October, at 11 o'clock a. m. R. Z. JOHNSTON, S. Clerk.

Lincolnton, Sept. 4, 1879.

Conveyances will be in Charlotte, October 17th, at 9 a. m., to take the members of Presbytery out to Philadelphia church.

The 219th session of Orange Presbytery will be held at Alamance church, Guilford county, on Thursday, the 16th of October, 1879, at 1 o'clock p. m. Sessions are expected to send up written reports on state of religion and reason of non-representation at last meeting. N. B.—Under the Revised Book of Church Order, now the law of the Church, every church is entitled, irrespective of its pastoral relations, to representation in the Presbytery. F. H. JOHNSTON, S. Clerk.

Delegates to Orange Presbytery will get off the cars at Greensboro, where accommodations will be provided them for the night, and conveyances to carry them to Alamance church, six miles distant, on the morning of the 16th. Arrangements with the railroad authorities for the usual reduction of fare will be attended to. W. B. TIDBALL.

BINGHAM SCHOOL numbers 133 for the current session, which is 45 per cent. ahead of the last, and 20 per cent. ahead of any previous session. The new teacher, Capt. Sharp, with a Randolph-Macon A. M., and a Leipzig Ph. D., is making a fine impression. 13 States are represented. The last recruit who has entered, comes all the way from Brazil. The catalogue for 1879 will contain more than 160 names.

Consumption Cured.

An old physician, retired from practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure for Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma, and Throat and Lung, Affections, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative power in thousands of cases, has felt it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and a desire to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge to all who desire it, this recipe, in German, French, or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail by addressing with stamp, naming this paper, W. W. SHERAR, 149 Powers' Block, Rochester, New York.

IT IS WORTH A TRIAL.

"I was troubled for many years with Kidney Complaint, Gravel, &c.; my blood became thin; I was dull and inactive; could hardly crawl about, and was an old worn out man all over, and could get nothing to help me, until I got Hop Bitters, and now I am a boy again. My blood and kidneys are all right, and I am as active as a man of 30, although I am 72, and I have no doubt it will do as well for others of my age. It is worth the trial. (Father.)

At the Anson Institute in Wadesboro, on the 22d ult., Mrs. ANN BROWN, daughter of Owen Holmes, of Sampson county. Aged about 83 years.

She was a woman of remarkably sound judgment and great energy of character. She was left a widow with eight children, one-half of whom preceded her to the spirit world. By her untiring effort she gave them a liberal education. She was a member of the Presbyterian Church. As God had sustained her all through life, He also gave her dying grace. A few moments before her departure she called for the children; when one said, "Grandma, are you willing to die?" she replied, "Perfectly willing," and also said to them, "Meet me in Heaven," and then fell asleep, to awake in the better land. COX.

In Monroe, on the 30th ult., HERBERT, son of Thos. M. and Henrietta Brown, aged 1 year 4 months and 3 days.

"Love shieldeth not our idols from death's unsparing darts."

"Suffer little children, and forbid them not, to come unto me: for of such is the kingdom of heaven." R. A. M.

He was born March 23, 1803. He was one of the original members of the Greensboro church, and was elected its first elder in the year 1821, when he was only 18 years old. He continued to hold the office of ruling elder in that church until his removal to Madison, in the year 1853. That same year he was made elder of the Madison church, and held the position until his death, making 58 years that he held the office of ruling elder—32 years at Greensboro and 26 years at Madison. He was a praying elder, and his minister and church will greatly miss his prayers. He was strict in the observance of all his religious duties. The family altar was erected and long maintained in his house. He loved his Bible and carefully and continually read its pages. He loved to go to the house of the Lord and unite in the worship. We doubt not he is now enjoying purer worship in the upper sanctuary. He long held the position of postmaster at Madison, and was faithful and conscientious in the discharge of all his duties. During the latter part of his life, though often very feeble, he yet felt constrained to be at his post, and he has not unfrequently gone to the office when he had to be supported by his faithful wife. The day before his death, though having had a severe chill the night before, and scarcely able to walk, he went out to the office and prepared a registered letter; returning to the house he fell upon the bed, and soon becoming unconscious, he could not be fully aroused, and died the next morning. He was three times married—his third wife survives him, and three of his children—Mr. Lucius J. Lindsay, of Danville, Mr. Wm. S. Lindsay, of Greensboro, and Mrs. Lydia Olives, of Chatham county.

Faithful old soldier of Christ, his labors are ended, and he has entered into the rest that remains for the people of God. C. M.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

ADOPTED BY THE SESSION OF HAWFIELDS CHURCH.

WHEREAS, It has pleased Him, who orders all things, to remove from us our beloved brother, DAVID W. KERR, a ruling elder in this church, and while we bow in submission to God's Providence, yet we cannot but express our sorrow, at what seems to us in our short-sightedness, so severe a blow to us as a session, to the church of which he was a member, and to the community at large.

2d, While we deplore his loss we can but commend his example to all around as a man and Christian, upright, honest, faithful in his obligations both to God and man, conscientious in all his duties, and fearless in their performance, modest and retiring; yet when the Church of God, called him to the front, he never failed to answer. True to his Church, true to his friends, true to his country, we grieve over his loss as one of Nature's noblemen.

Mebaneville, N. C., October 3d, 1879.

MARRIED.

☞ No notice of a marriage or death will be inserted unless accompanied by a responsible name, which is wanted not for publication but as a guaranty of good faith.

By Rev. C. N. Morrow, at Mebaneville, N. C., Sept. 30th, Mr. ALEXANDER PATTON to Miss JULIA A. WOODS.

On the 23d of September, by Rev. J. Evans, JOHN W. McDONALD, Esq., to Mrs. ELLEN McEACHERN. All of St. Pauls.

MILLINGTON, Kent Co., Md., June 13, 1877.
Messrs. Polk, Miller & Co:
Please send me another lot of "Vest Pocket Cure." I have received great benefit from it already, and can recommend it to others cheerfully.
REV. THOS. W. BROWN, Balt. Conf.

THE MAP OF PALESTINE.

We have sent out this map quite extensively, and it has, we believe, given universal satisfaction; at least, no complaints have been made, and many have expressed hearty appreciation.

It is 28x42 inches in size and sold by publishers at $1 00.

We furnish gratis with one new subscriber at $2 65.

TO AGENTS.

It will not be practicable to write to each one of the Agents of the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN, and ask them to continue their exertions. We now make the general request, and take occasion to thank them and all other friends for the disinterested kindness so fully and so constantly manifested in the past.

OFFERS EXTRAORDINARY.

We offer WORCESTER'S QUARTO DICTIONARY fully Illustrated and Unabridged. Library sheep; marbled edges. Publisher's price $10 00, as a premium for 12 new subscribers to the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN at $2 50 each.

Most of our distinguished writers prefer Worcester's to any other dictionary, and it is recognized as authority by the departments of the United States Government.

SUPERIOR NUTRITION THE LIFE!

IMPERIAL GRANUM

THE GREAT MEDICINAL FOOD

The Salvator for Invalids and the Aged. An Incomparable Aliment for the Growth and Protection of Infants and Children. A Superior Nutritive in Continued Fevers, and a Reliable Remedial Agent in all Diseases of the Stomach and Intestines.

THIS justly celebrated DIETETIC PREPARATION is, in composition, principally the GLUTEN derived from the WHITE WINTER FLINT WHEAT CEREAL, a solid extract, the invention of an eminent Chemist. It has not only been highly recommended but certified to by a large number of Chemists and Physicians—representing a very high degree of medical science—as the Safest, Most Acceptable and Reliable Food for the Growth and Protection of Infants and Children, and for Mothers lacking Sufficient Nourishment for their offspring.

Unlike those preparations made from animal or vinous matter, which are liable to stimulate the brain and irritate the digestive organs, it embraces in its elementary composition—

That which makes strong Bone and Muscle, That which makes good Flesh and Blood, That which is easy of Digestion—never constipating, That which is kind and friendly to the Brain, And that which acts as a preventive of those Intestinal Disorders incidental to Childhood.

And, while it would be difficult to conceive of anything in Food or Dessert more CREAMY and DELICIOUS, or more NOURISHING and STRENGTHENING as an aliment in Fevers, Pulmonary Complaints, Dyspepsia and General Debility, its RARE MEDICINAL EXCELLENCE in all INTESTINAL DISEASES, especially in Dysentery, Chronic Diarrhœa and Cholera Infantum, HAS BEEN INCONTESTABLY PROVEN.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

Charlotte Institute.

THE next session begins September 10th, 1879, and ends June 8th, 1880.

No Institute ever made more rapid progress in securing the confidence and esteem of its patrons than this one during the past session. Before the end of the scholastic year the number of its pupils, attracted by the well-earned reputation of the school, increased to 117, exclusive of the adult ladies who availed themselves of the superior advantages here given in the departments of Music, Art, and Modern Languages. In no respect is this Institute inferior to any other first-class boarding-school in the Southern or Middle States. Such testimonials as will satisfy an one as to the high standard and thoroughness of the instruction here are published in the catalogue. These testimonials are peculiarly trustworthy, inasmuch as they are given by gentlemen engaged in teaching in well known schools and colleges of the highest grade, and who are therefore qualified to express an opinion in regard to educational institutions.

The total expense for the half session or term will be $125. This amount includes board, with washing, fuel, lights, furnished room and servants' attendance, tuition in all the English branches, Latin, with either French or German, Calisthenics, text-books and stationery for school purposes. Pupils are not permitted to incur additional expense without permission of their parents. Parents are thus assured that their bills will not be greater than they expected.

Special arrangements and special terms for young ladies who wish to take only Music, Painting and Drawing, and Modern Languages, severally or collectively.

TALBOTT'S PATENT SPARK ARRESTER.

The Invention of the Age.

It does not destroy the draft.
It does not interfere with cleaning the tubes.
It will not choke up, and requires no cleaning.
It requires no direct dampers to be opened when raising steam (dampers being objectionable, as they may be left open and allow sparks to escape.)
It requires no water to extinguish sparks, which, by condensation, destroys the draft. Besides, when water is used, if neglected, the efficiency is destroyed by evaporation of the water, and the boiler is kept in a filthy condition.
It is simple and durable and can be relied upon.
It can be attached to any boiler.
No planter should be without one of them. Insurance companies will insure gins and barns where the Talbott Engines and Spark-Arresters are used at same rate as charged for water or horse-power.

FOR THE FAMILY.

The Weed's Mission.

Tall grew a weed outside a garden gate,
Inside a gladiole in splendor grew.
"Why do you with the autumn blossoms wait?"
The flower asked. "There is no need of you.
In truth, I know not why you live at all—
Only a few, pale, yellow blooms you bore
And worthless are your seeds. Pray, droop and fall.
I should not grieve at seeing you no more.
I grace the world, for evening's brightest skies
Are not more rich in gold and red than I,
And every day the ling'ring butterflies
Beg me to stay till they must say 'good by.'"

"Yes, you are beautiful," the weed replied,
In patient voice, "and I am plain indeed.
But God knows why." Just then a bird, bright-eyed
And scarlet-beaked, saw the clust'ring seed,
And lighting on a slender branch he ate
With many a little chirp of thankful glee,
Then spread his wings and perched upon the gate.
And blessed his wayside friend in melody.
"Ah!" said the weed, when he had flown, 'proud flower,
A hungry, south-bound bird you could not feed
Though you rejoice in Beauty's gracious dower—
That boon was granted to an humble weed!"

A Little Bit of a Story.

Bertie had been to see his grandmother, and either she had forgotten—it was so long ago—what her little boys used to eat, or else it was just as she said, that her children used to eat everything, and she believed in giving children everything they wanted. At any rate, however it was, this much I do know: she gave Bertie everything he wanted that afternoon. Late strawberries and early currants, three glasses of lemonade, half a cucumber, ginger-snaps by the — but there, please don't ask me how many he had of them, for I don't believe even the small boy himself would have cared to count them, and I'm forgetting the milk that he drank for supper, the currant pie he ate, the cream cakes and hot biscuits. Can you wonder that the little boy went home feeling very uncomfortable, or that he begged to go to bed half an hour earlier than usual?

The little boy fell into a short, uneasy sleep, to dream the most dreadful dreams of being chased by an immense cucumber, that was, after all, a bear, and to wake again to scream and cry for mama, with the most dreadful pain that a disobedient little boy ever had!

Everybody came flying up stairs then—mama and papa, Maggie and Louie close behind them, Sarah, the nurse, with the baby she was rocking to sleep in her arms, and the fat cook with the fish she was cleaning for breakfast in her hands. But Bertie didn't see them; the cucumber bear of pain had tight hold of him, was gnashing his teeth and taking such bites out of the little boy that all he could do was to scream for mama to help him.

So she did help him with all her might and main, until, a good many hours after everybody's bedtime, though no one had thought of going to bed, he was able to sit on his father's lap, wrapped up, weak and sick enough, but free from pain, quite ready to shut his eyes and listen, till he fell asleep to papa's funny song about the frog that would "a-wooing go, whether his mother would let him or no."

Bertie had a tender little heart. He always meant to be a good boy; and when, the next morning, he saw mama's heavy eyes, and heard her say that she had not been in bed all night, no wonder that he had to have a good cry with his arms tight around her neck, or that he promised never to forget and eat so much again.

"What can I do, mama, if I have got to lie here all day? The sheets are all twisted around, and I want to have the pillow turned over. Oh, dear me!"

"There, dear little boy," mama said, as she smoothed the sheet and turned the pillow, "I know it's very hard to lie in bed, but whose fault is it? Mama's? And are you going to punish her by being cross? Try just as hard as you can to be patient and quiet all day long. That will help you to get through this hot day easiest, and then I'll know just how sorry you are."

So Bertie tried and tried. It was pretty hard work, but, first of all, Maggie paid him a visit, and cut him a string of paper dolls as long as the bed. Then Louie brought her pet fan to keep the flies away. Mama sang to him; and last of all, with the sunset, papa came home from the city, pleased to hear that his little son had been patient all day, and quite willing to lend a listening ear to Bertie's request for a story.

"A story! dear me! I've told all mine over and over so many times over. Let me see. Oh! I guess I'd better tell you what happened out in the yard just now.

"You know the grass is pretty long on the lawn under the chesnut trees. Thomas hasn't got around to cutting it yet. Well, there was a grasshopper out in that long grass this afternoon. He couldn't be seen very easily, and he was having a nice time all to himself, singing away. The wise books say that grasshoppers sing with their legs, bob their knees together. That's a funny way to sing, isn't it, Bertie?

"However, this grasshopper was singing, and this is what he sang:

"'O, a grasshopper leads a jolly life,
He dances and sings all day.'

"And while he was singing a sparrow was sitting on a tall rose-bush near him, looking out for something to eat, and when he heard the grasshopper's song, he said: 'Ah, ha! Mr. Grasshopper, I'll be after you. Won't you make a nice supper!' So he listened and listened, till he saw exactly where he was, and then he flew down to catch him. But that grasshopper wasn't to be caught napping. No, indeed; he had his eyes wide open, and he saw just what the sparrow was about, and so he got himself ready for a jump.

Now a grasshopper can jump one hundred and fifty times its own length. Just think of that! If a man could do the same he could jump—let me see—three hundred yards, I think; but I am getting too old to do sums in arithmetic."

"Oh, no, indeed, papa," answered a chorus of three. "You'll never be too old to do anything."

"Well, I'm much obliged, I'm sure, for your compliments. When the sparrow flew down, the grasshopper made a spring and jumped so far that you could have knocked the sparrow down with a feather, as people say, he was so surprised. He flew back to the rose-bush and began to stare with his mouth wide open, and looked as if he was saying, 'Well, of all the jumps I ever saw! Well, to be sure!' and then he scratched the top of his head with his claw and cleaned his bill on the rose tree branch, as birds do when they are thinking very hard, and then tried to make up his mind what to do next.

"And just then the grasshopper began to sing again:

"'A grasshopper leads a jolly life,
He dances and sings all day.'

And the sparrow said to himself, 'Oh, there you are, are you, you chirping monkey? I'll have you yet!'

"So he determined to be very cunning about it, and pretended not to see him or to mean any harm, and he looked around quite carelessly and began to sing his own little songs as cheerfully as you please. But all the while he kept his eye on the place where the grasshopper was sitting, and then he hopped down on the grass and began to pick up seeds, to scratch his head, and look very busy indeed; and all the while he was hopping nearer and nearer the grasshopper, until at last he got so close that he felt sure he could reach him with one good hop more. But now you'll see what happened to him.

"While he was getting nearer and nearer the grasshopper, he didn't know that all this time Louie's gray pussy was creeping up nearer and nearer to him."

"Oh, papa," broke the chorus of three again, "Miss Mittens didn't catch him, did she? Oh, please don't tell us she did!"

"Now just wait and listen quietly, my dears, and I'll tell you all about it. You see, just as the sparrow was going to make another hop and gobble up poor Mrs. Greenshakes, the pussy cat had got within good jumping distance and was getting ready for her spring.

"But people who are going to do cruel things should always look behind. While the cat was so busy creeping up to the sparrow on her velvet mittens, Toby, the dog, who had broken loose from his chain this afternoon, was making his way quietly toward her over the grass, and in half a second more he would have had her in his mouth.

"But Mr. Toby should have looked behind him as well as the cat. It isn't the first time, you know, I have had to settle with Mr. Toby about running after the cat. So I took up my cane and started after him very quietly and had just got so close to him that I lifted my cane to strike him when—what do you think? I put my foot close to a wasp's nest, and all the wasps came buzzing about me. And so, just as I was going to hit the dog, and the dog was going to spring on the cat, and the cat was going to pounce on the sparrow, and the sparrow was going to gobble up the grasshopper, one of the wasps crept up and stung me on the leg so sharply that I let my stick fall and cried out 'Oh!'

"The dog turned around and saw me; the cat turned around and saw the dog; the sparrow turned around and saw the cat; and off they all raced and jumped and flew as fast as their legs would carry them; and the grasshopper rubbed his knees together and sang with all his might:

"'A grasshopper leads a jolly life,
He dances and sings all day.'

"And I dare say if you go down in the long grass to-morrow, before John begins to mow, you'll find him there singing that very same song."

How the children laughed over papa's story; and after they had paid him with interest in kisses, they all agreed, if Bertie was well enough, to go the very next morning and look for that very same grasshopper.

But whether it was really he or one of his brothers, or even his grandfather, perhaps the little children never quite decided.

They did find somebody singing away for dear life in the long grass, and by listening very hard, and by making believe a great deal, they felt very sure they heard him say:

"'A grasshopper leads a jolly life,
He dances and sings all day.'

"My Spare Moments."

A poor country lad came one morning to the door of the head-master of a celebrated school, and asked to see him. The servant eyed his mean clothes, and thinking he looked more like a beggar than anything else, told him to go round to the kitchen. The boy did as he was desired, and soon appeared at the back door.

"I should like to see Mr.——," said he.

"You want a breakfast, most likely," said the servant; "and I can give you that without troubling him."

"Thank you," said the boy; "I've no objections to a bit of bread, but I should like to see Mr.——, if he can see me."

"Some old clothes maybe you want," remarked the servant again eyeing the boy's patched clothes. "I think he has none to spare;" and without at all minding the boys request, she went about her work.

"Can I see Mr.——?" again asked the boy, after eating his bread and butter.

"Well, he's in the library; if he must be interrupted, he must, but he does like to be alone sometimes," said the girl, in a peevish tone. Opening the library door, she said, "Here's somebody, sir, who is very anxious to see you, and so I let him in."

I do not know how the boy introduced himself, or how he opened his business, but I know that after talking a while the Principal put aside the paper he was studying and took up a Latin book and began to examine the new comer. The examination lasted some time. Every question which the Principal asked, the boy answered as readily as could be. "Well!" exclaimed the Principal, "you certainly do well!" looking at the boy from head to foot over his spectacles. "Why, my boy, where did you pick up so much?" "In my spare moments," answered the boy.

Here he was, poor and hard-working, with but few opportunities for schooling, and yet almost fitted for college, by simply improving his spare moments! Truly, are not spare moments the "gold dust of time?" How precious they should be! And yet how apt we are to waste them!

What account can you give of your spare moments? What can you show for them? Look and see. This boy could tell you how much, how very much can be laid up by wisely improving them; and there are many, many other boys, I am afraid, in the jail, in the house of correction, in the forecastle of a whale ship, in the gambling house or the tavern, who if you could ask them when they began their sinful courses, might answer, "In my spare moments." "In my spare moments I gambled for marbles." "In my spare moments I began to smoke and drink." It was in my spare moments that I first began to steal chesnuts from the old woman's stand." "It was in my spare moments that I got acquainted with wicked associates." Take care of your spare moments!—The Children's Record.

MISCELLANEOUS.

A Scotch Heroine.

The other day there died at Kinghorn a heroine of the Grace Darling type. Helen Petrie, a native of Unst, one of the Shetland Islands, is the party to whom we refer. Helen was not brought up to much in the seafaring way, being more generally employed about the croft; but for all that, like most of the other Shetland women, she could put her hand to an oar when required. The 26th of May, 1856, will be long remembered in Unst as one of the stormiest days within the memory of the fishing population. On that day the bulk of the inhabitants were on the beach straining their eyes out to sea in the expectation of seeing the fishing boats return. One after another came in until the last was in sight. This boat with a crew of four men, incautiously, but no doubt in desperation to stem the rapid current, hoisted sail. In a moment it was capsized, and the occupants hurled into the water. Two of them were observed to be immediately swept away and drowned, the other two were noticed clinging to the keel of the boat and fast drifting out to sea. Helen implored those on the beach to pull to the rescue of the unfortunate men, but was everywhere met by the assurance that it was impossible to do so with safety, and that a rash attempt would only culminate in the throwing away of several more lives.

A thin, wiry woman of no great physique, but possessed of a countenance that in every lineament expressed firm determination, Helen pushed a punt into the water and asked for volunteers, declaring that if no one accompanied her she would make the attempt herself. Her sister-in-law immediately jumped in after her and took the other oar. Her father, an old man, over seventy years of age, after trying to persuade her not to run the risk, when he saw her determined, although lame of one hand, got into the stern of the boat and took the tiller. Amidst the prayers and tears of their relatives, the forlorn hope put out to sea. Their noble exertions were crowned with success. As they reached the boat one of the men had lost his hold and fallen into the water, but was caught by Helen by the hair of the head and dragged into the boat. The other drowning man was next got in, and they pulled for the neighboring islands, where they effected a landing, and the two unfortunate men were restored. Two days after this event the Royal National Institution for saving of life from shipwreck presented her with their silver medal, of which during the remainder of her days she felt extremely proud. Nor was this the only occasion on which this noble woman disclosed the same qualities, for two years after this she was again the means of saving three lives in a similar way. For the last twenty years, like many of her fellow islanders, she was employed in Leith as a domestic servant. She was a simple-minded, straightforward, strictly pious woman.

Hay Fever.

At the present time there are probably nearly 50,000 people suffering from hay fever.

When this affection was first recognised it was supposed that it depended upon the irritation produced by the pollen of certain flowers and grasses which floated in the air in the months of May, June, July and August of each year.

Subsequently it was claimed that two distinct forms of the disease existed, and to one was given the name of "June cold," while the other received the name "autumnal catarrh."

Further observation revealed the fact that an affection characterized by symptoms essentially the same as those seen in connection with hay asthma, hay fever, June cold, rose cold, autumnal catarrh, etc., occurred in seasons of the year in which none of the supposed exciting causes of the hay fever could operate, and for some time the reasoning was that it must be some other disease than that produced by the pollen of plants. It was also observed that certain persons were peculiarly affected when brought in contact with certain animals, such as the cat, and by the vapor from certain animal substances, such as warm milk. These observations, and others of like character, have from time to time led to modification of former opinions regarding the nature of hay fever, and at last, have given rise to a theory which has been promulgated as one capable of explaining all the phenomena of the disease whenever occurring.

In this country two books have been written on hay fever: one—the oldest, and for a long time the only systematic monograph upon the subject—by Dr. Jeffrier Wyman, of Boston; the other by Dr. Geo. M. Beard, of New York.

In Dr. Beard's book we find the first open announcement of the theory to which we have already referred, namely, the "nerve theory." This theory is the result of the study of one hundred cases, and it is that hay fever is a neurosis. According to this theory, the disease is subjective; external irritants, which are exceedingly numerous, such as rag weed pollen, etc., are of a secondary and a tertiary character and powerless in themselves to produce the disease, and produce the disease only when acting on a nervous idiosyncrasy.—Medical Record.

Nail's Measure.

Many persons are puzzled to understand what the terms "fourpenny," sixpenny" and "tenpenny" mean as applied to nails. "Fourpenny" means four pounds to the thousand nails, or "sixpenny" means six pounds to the thousand, and so on. It is an old English term, and meant at first 'ten pound" nails (the thousand being understood), but the old English clipped it to "tenpun," and from that it degenerated until "penny" was substituted for "pound." When a thousand nails weigh less than one pound they are called tacks, brads, etc., and are reckoned by ounces.—Scientific American.

The Mariner's Compass.

Since the construction of iron steamships it has been much more unstable than before, insomuch that the captain assured me on our voyage that the proper verification of the compass took off his thought and attention than all other subjects. There are several compasses on the ship, and unless corrected no two of them would point in the same direction. This is due to the disturbing influence of the attraction of the iron of which the ship is made, and which attracts the needle unequally, according to the position of the compass in the ship. For instance a compass amidships is attracted equally before and behind, the mass of iron being equal or nearly so. A compass in the stern is attracted most in front, and the needle will tend in that direction, and vice versa. Not only so, but as the general direction of the needle is north, the disturbing influence of the ship's attraction is felt every time the ship's course is changed. As, for instance, to a compass in the stern, and sailing due north, all the attraction is in the same direction (north). As soon as the ship's course is changed for the east or west, the ship's attraction is in that direction, and the compass is influenced accordingly. Add to this the fact that at different points, geographically, the compass varies so largely as frequently to vary six degrees within one day's sail, and the captain's assertion, that the correction of the compass took more of his thought and attention than all other subjects combined, is perfectly intelligible. The wonder is that in these iron ships, and with all the varying conditions, it can be properly corrected at all so as to be of use. It is only by the most constant vigilance, and by locating the correcting magnets in different parts of the ship as required, that it is finally done.—First Impressions in Europe.

SECULAR NEWS.

The Emperor of Russia is suffering from mental anxiety which is increasing.

The Spaniards are defeating the Cuban insurgents. The end of the war seems to be near at hand.

General Diaz, President of Mexico, in his late message says that the foreign relations of Mexico are of the most amicable character, and the prosperity of the country is general. Gen. Diaz declines a re-election.

At a meeting of the trustees of the Peabody Educational Fund Dr. Sears, the general agent, advises that the general government grant aid to the Southern States to aid them in educating the ignorant classes.

A fire occurred at the Wilmington compress on the morning of October 1st, by which a large amount of cotton, amounting probably from $30,000 to $35,000, was destroyed. The Taylor compress was burned, but the damage to machinery is not rated over $5,000. The entire loss is covered by insurance.

Reports from Memphis have not been so favorable. A riot was attempted at one of the camps and four of the ringleaders were arrested. Two military companies have been disbanded. Boston sent $1,000 and asked for a statement of condition and needs. The fever is spreading in the country near Memphis.

Mobile has removed its quarantine restrictions against New Orleans.

There have been various causes of dissatisfaction existing for sometime past among the Ute Indians in Colorado, the first of which seems to have been the intrusion of white miners on the Indian reservation. Quite recently the government agent had a misunderstanding with the Indians and asked for protection. Maj. Thornbury, with three companies of cavalry, was dispatched to him, and on their way were attacked by the Indians, several hundred in number, and had to retreat. On the retreat Maj. Thornbury was killed, as were also ten enlisted men and a wagon master. Three officers and twenty-five men were wounded. A freight outfit of Indian supplies was burned, and three-fourths of the mules and horses of the command were killed.

Five of the City of Glasgow Bank directors, convicted of issuing false abstracts of balance sheets, and sentenced on the 1st of February last to eight months' imprisonment, were released October 1st amid the hootings of the crowd.

WICKED FOR CLERGYMEN.

"I believe it to be all wrong and even wicked for clergymen or other public men to be led into giving testimonials to quack doctors or vile stuffs called medicines, but when a really meritorious article is made up of common valuable remedies known to all, and that all physicians use and trust in daily, we should freely commend it. I therefore cheerfully and heartily commend Hop Bitters for the good they have done me and my friends, firmly believing they have no equal for family use. I will not be without them." THE GENUINE
DR. C. McLANE'S
Celebrated American
WORM SPECIFIC OR VERMIFUGE.

SYMPTOMS OF WORMS.

THE countenance is pale and leaden-colored, with occasional flushes, or a circumscribed spot on one or both cheeks; the eyes become dull; the pupils dilate; an azure semicircle runs along the lower eye-lid; the nose is irritated, swells, and sometimes bleeds; a swelling of the upper lip; occasional headache, with humming or throbbing of the ears; an unusual secretion of saliva; slimy or furred tongue; breath very foul, particularly in the morning; appetite variable, sometimes voracious, with a knawing sensation of the stomach, at others, entirely gone; fleeting pains in the stomach; occasional nausea and vomiting; violent pains throughout the abdomen; bowels irregular, at times costive; stools slimy; not unfrequently tinged with blood; belly swollen and hard; urine turbid; respiration occasionally difficult, and accompanied by hiccough; cough sometimes dry and convulsive; uneasy and disturbed sleep, with grinding of the teeth; temper variable, but generally irritable, &c.

Whenever the above symptoms are found to exist,
DR. C. McLANE'S VERMIFUGE
will certainly effect a cure.

IT DOES NOT CONTAIN MERCURY
in any form; it is an innocent preparation, not capable of doing the slightest injury to the most tender infant.

The genuine DR. McLANE'S VERMIFUGE bears the signatures of C. McLANE and FLEMING BROS. on the wrapper. —:o:—

DR. C. McLANE'S
LIVER PILLS

are not recommended as a remedy "for all the ills that flesh is heir to," but in affections of the liver, and in all Bilious Complaints, Dyspepsia and Sick-Headache, or diseases of that character, they stand without a rival.

AGUE AND FEVER.

No better cathartic can be used preparatory to, or after taking Quinine.

As a simple purgative they are unequaled.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

The genuine are never sugar coated.

Each box has a red wax seal on the lid with the impression DR. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS.

Each wrapper bears the signatures of C. McLANE and FLEMING BROS.

Insist upon having the genuine DR. C. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS, prepared by Fleming Bros., of Pittsburgh, Pa., the market being full of imitations of the name McLane, spelled differently but same pronunciation.

PREVENT YELLOW FEVER!

It has been well proved that prevention is better than cure. A very simple and effective preventative for Yellow Fever and other fevers has been found in BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTERS. They were used during last season in New Orleans very successfully. The common method of using them was to apply them over the stomach, changing them every week. They are one OF THE MOST ACTIVE ANTISEPTICS and seem to destroy the poison. One reason why they are of special value is that they stimulate the digestion, and thus enable the system to overcome the influence of the malarial poison. They are a cheap and almost certain preventative. Ask your physician about them. Benson's Capcine Plasters are a sure preventative and cure for chills and fever if worn as above. Price 25 cents.

COMMENTARIES.

ON THE NEW TESTAMENT AND PARTS OF IT.

NO. X.

Rev. L. C. Vass, Newbern, N. C.:

14. Burkitt's Expository Notes and practical observations on the New Testament, is designed especially for private families and personal edification. The style and method of presenting the practical "observations" are somewhat those of Mr. Henry; and his sounduess on the great doctrines of grace is clearly evinced. Still to ministers and students of divinity, besides the interest they have in common with Christian people generally, Burkitt's work furnishes a pleasing example of the edifying manner of presenting truth in order to promote clear views of Christ and the plan of salvation.

15. Whitby's Paraphrase and Notes on the New Testament is generally sound on the great truths of Christ's mediatorial office, especially as respects His death as an expiatory offering and His ever prevalent intercession. Most of his critical work is well performed, as he possessed some specially important qualifications for such service. But it must be granted that, measured by a Calvinistic standard, he is defective in his teachings respecting God's relation to the plan of salvation prior to the coming of Christ. The work is too voluminous for a private library of a man of limited means, and more recent commentaries very much supersede it, though it may prove very valuable to the student, and, as it is not much in demand, can probably be procured at tolerably low terms.

16. Wordsworth's "New Testament," with Introductions and Notes, is somewhat on the plan of Alford's, in criticism on the Greek text, though not so fully carried out. Allowing somewhat for the views of a general predestination as opposed to particular, there is, in his statement of a general truth that the plan of salvation has been perfected by God, the ground taken, that according to this plan the admission into the Church is a pledge of salvation, and so the office of the baptism of infants as held and taught by the Church (of England) is quoted to show that those presenting a child for baptism are not to doubt that "Christ will receive and embrace him in the arms of his mercy and give him the blessing of eternal life." But this is no place to discuss these views. They are only presented to show how a scholar, and evidently a man of pious reverence for the Scriptures, may be misled.

17. Olshausen's commentary on the New Testament has been long before the publick. Neither the German original nor the translation by Kendrick present a commentary on the whole of the New Testament, but so much as is to be obtained fully justifies the reputation in which the author has been held for a combination of exact philological learning, careful training of the logical connection and full unfolding of the thought, with hearty sympathy with the spirit of the sacred writers." He clearly and constantly recognizes the organic union of the entire Scripture, and in respect of vitally essential views of doctrinal teachings is in accord with evangelical Christians. The defect of the work is its voluminous character and the mistiness and inconclusiveness of the author's views of many passages the teachings of which are subjects of dispute.

18. Rosenmuller's "Scholia in New Testament" has been before the publick for over sixty years. Rationalistic views and tendencies have rendered it distasteful to evangelical students, and his slavish subjection to mere exegesis has induced a great distrust of his conclusions on critical grounds. The work is valuable in more senses than one.

1. ON THE HISTORICAL BOOKS.

1. Adamson's "Gospel according to Matthew Expounded," is a commentary on the English text, given in chapters according to the translation and divisions of the English version. This does not prevent the author from giving the results, though not the critical processes of his own study of the original text. He deals rather with the truths taught, than in expounding how those truths are derived from the language of Scripture. Indeed the work is rather a series of brief and pertinent treatises on the Christian system, as suggested by the passages before the author. Occasionally he gives such specimens of acumen and exegetical skill that the reader could wish he had adopted more the office of a critical interpreter of the works of the Scriptures than an expounder alone.

2. Alexander (J. A.) on the Gospel of Mark, and (sixteen chapters) of Matthew and the Acts of the Apostles "explained," presents an example of commentary on Scripture just the opposite of Dr. Adamson. In other words we have the text elaborately "explained," in the use of an accurate knowledge of the original Greek. Perhaps no effort to render explanations, based on the Greek text, intelligible to the English reader, have ever proved as successful. The author endeavors to present, in the English word selected to represent the Greek, under its modifications of grammatical accidents, of usage and context, the nearest possible synonym for each word; thus, as far as can be done, placing the reader in the position of one to whom the Greek was vernacular. With an acceptance of the established division of the text into chapters and verses, after giving a brief analysis of the contents of the chapter, he takes up verse by verse, rarely more than one—and proceeds with his explanation. On controverted passages he indulges in the expression of brief but sound and well sustained views of the opinions of others and a clear exhibition of those accepted by him as correct, and his reasons for his conclusions. To the minister these commentaries are wonderfully suggestive, and with those of Eadie, to be noticed in their proper places, constitute the very best aids to expository preaching, and on texts which embody thoughts capable of expansion, furnish the material for sermons of the topic order. These two authors present in their writings, the most sufficient and satisfactory substitutes for works providing "skeletons of sermons."

3. Butler's (J. G.) "Bible Reader's Commentary," is a "Life of Christ" formed by weaving the language of the inspired biographers into a consecutive, complete story. The orderly arrangement of the text in convenient portions or sections, is followed by a brief "Reading," comprising a few sentences of a paraphrastic character, in composition, and experimental bearing in sentiment, with a view of giving a clear bird's eye view of the passages, contained in the "section." Then follow notes and comments, explanations of the words, and the course of thought, and its presentation by the Scripture writers. This part of the plan is designedly a compilation, consisting of extracts or summaries from the writings of about one hundred authors. There are appendices consisting of brief summaries of the teaching of Scripture, on fundamental topics, such as the Trinity, Person of Christ, Offices, Doctrine, Character, Admissions of Skeptics, &c., &c. The work, so far as executed, on the four Gospels, is well suited to be a "hand-book" for students, rather suggestive of subjects and results of studies of others, than as a guide and aid to independent and careful investigation of the ends of Divine revelation.

4. Birch's "Quatuor Evangelia Graece," 1788, is of some historical value, exhibiting the state of Biblical criticism, especially presenting a list of manuscripts then known and the use to which they had been subjected, in illustrating the "various readings," their comparative value and aid in correcting or amending the Textus Receptus. But later and more complete information on these subjects, by eminent critics Griesbach to Tischendorf, have superseded Birch's work for the purposes proposed to be accomplished. Similar statements apply to other writers of that period whose names need no mention.

5. Campbell's "Four Gospels Translated," &c., has received the seal of extensive approbation by its wide circulation. While the translation is justly objectionable, in several particulars, the "notes" form an excellent philological commentary on the Gospels; and the dissertations on important topics and, especially on the meaning of Greek words of decisive influence in shaping Scriptural theology, form, of themselves, a treasure of sacred criticism well worth more than the price of the entire work. An edition published in London by Tegg & Son, 1834, in two volumes, is perhaps the least costly, though none are high-priced.

5. Kuinol's commentary on the Historical books of the New Testament is especially valuable for its philological criticisms and as being less tainted—though still objectionable—by dogmatic hypothesis, than many productions of German divines. To each book are prefixed valuable introductions, characterized by extensive and accurate research in all matters connected with the explication of whatever belongs to the outside work of the interpreter of Scripture.

6. Pearce's work on the Historical Books was highly valued by the generation of 1770-1800. The author was a truly learned man, and his successive promotions under ecclesiastical and royal authorities, attest the high consideration in which he was held. Besides a running commentary on the text, partaking somewhat of the nature of an explanatory paraphrase, he has given "notes" of permanent value, on the words of the writers in the Greek language, presenting instances of grammatical interpretation and illustrations of the places, customs and natural and ecclesiastical conditions of the Jews.

7. Slier's "Word of Jesus" is an effort to present the great teachings of the greatest of Teachers, on their intrinsic merits. He has brought to this effort a pious zeal and a devoted love to the Saviour. He leaves no opportunity unused to enter his protest against Ritualism. Fanciful or infidel interpretations are at once attacked and exposed. None can read this book without feeling that he is under the guidance of one who is profoundly imbued with the mind of Christ. Dr. Steir's work is the more valuable as showing what can be done by an earnest Christian pastor, with all his daily and weekly pressing pastoral duties; and its success is an encouragement to ministers in like circumstances to "give attention to reading."

Yours, &c.,

B. M. SMITH.

THAT "COMET."

MR. EDITOR: Your correspondent, respectfully undersigned, has read a newspaper anecdote which may or may not be illustrative of his position on "The Comet."

Two darkies were overhauling a sermon delivered the Sunday before by their sable pastor: "Now, what did brudder Jones mean when he said dat Jonah swallowed de whale? I allers thought it was plum t'other way." "Ah, Sam," was the reply, "I've noticed for a good while dat whenever brudder Jones opens his mouf he's mighty apt to put his foot in it."

Now, the question is, when your correspondent opened his "mouf" about that "comet," a few weeks ago, did he "put his foot in it" or not? Brother "Didymus" has made him nervous in regard to the whereabouts of his pedal extremity, for he has taken up a notion that brother D. knows a thing or two, and has skill to judge of the position of one's foot, whether it is in the right place or not.

I gather from the brief communication of "Didymus," that Gnion's book is regarded by the learned as a sort of extravaganza or caricature, perhaps with a view to show that about as good arguments might be produced in support of his grotesque positions, as those held forth in support of the received or established positions of the science of geology.

Your correspondent was not aware of such verdict of learned men touching the book, or indeed that there was any verdict at all. His pursuits in life having been, necessarily, more after victuals and clothes than science or theories of any sort, he is not qualified for satisfactory investigation of matters of this nature. Like Didymus, he was fascinated with the brilliant style of the book, the positions and arguments of which seemed so ingeniously to corroborate the sacred narrative, for which he cherishes habitual reverence, that he gave perhaps too easy credence to the production.

But is "The Comet" a mere fanciful extravaganza?

Ransy Sniffle pounded the earth with his fists, clawed up the sand and stuck his thumbs into the ground in the way of gonging, "jest to show how he could ha' fout."

An English prelate once wrote a book to prove that Napoleon Bonaparte was a myth, and astonished the literary world by the ingenuity of his arguments.

About forty years ago a man named Locke, in New York, wrote the celebrated moon hoax—about the discovery of inhabitants in the moon who had wings, &c. It was so cleverly done as to impose upon even learned men. A committee of savants went down from Hartford to New York to see about it, and found, to its disgust, that it, the committee, had put its foot in it, or, in the more polite phrase of the wags of that day, got Locke on the understanding.

It is disagreeable to a fellow to find out that he has been fooled, and the chagrin is not mitigated by the consciousness that he has been accessory in the business himself.

But I am inclined to think, from what I have heard of the character of the author of "The Comet," and from certain internal evidences in the book itself, that it was written in good faith and with serious intent. And, although I unaffectedly confess to sad lack of learning in this behalf, I am further inclined to think that the main position of the author is not altogether unworthy the consideration of educated men.

An analysis of the work cannot be here attempted, but the general idea as I apprehend it is about this: That previous to the Flood the strata of the earth had been undisturbed, except by such gentle forces as produced an undulated surface, rising nowhere near the height of the mountains of our day; that each successive step or period of creation, from chaos to habitable earth, substantially took place in the order described in Genesis—the flora, the fishes, the fauna and the fossil remains thereof, each occupying its regular and appointed period and place. But that, at the Flood, when all the fountains of the great deep were broken up—the internal elements and forces of the globe put in violent agitation—then continents were submerged in the waters; the bottoms of seas raised to the surface; the strata of the earth rent into fissures—heaved into mountain heights—sunk into the abyss, or mixed, in places, in that inextricable confusion which now so puzzles the geological inquirer.

A deeper insight than that of the writer hereof into the discoveries and inferences of science, perhaps shows irreconcilable disagreement between this theory and historic geology; but it seems to me to account, with considerable show of plausibility, for existing geological phenomena.

Was the Flood universal?

I am aware that the weight of modern comment, theological as well as geological, is in the negative, the opinion being held that the deluge was confined to the valley of the Euphrates and perhaps some parts adjacent, as the then only inhabited portion of the earth, or at least the only portion inhabited by man—that a bigger flood was unnecessary to effect the divine purpose.

Is there any ground for suspicion that Scripture has been somewhat wrested, in this instance, in order to accommodate it to assumed truths of geology? While we ought by no means to take advantage of the veneration entertained for the Scriptures to sustain a falsity in science, he it equally far from us to wrest Scripture into the support of any scientific theory whatever.

Whatever is to be allowed (and much must in many cases be allowed) for idioms of ancient language, and for oriental figures of speech, as well as for errors and unavoidable shortcomings in translations, it is a strain upon the common mind to make much of such allowance in case of certain direct, positive, particular expressions in the scriptural account of the Flood. The moral cause and the physical fact of the Flood are set forth with wonderful plainness of speech. Permit me to transcribe a few passages, as more likely thus to fix the attention of the reader than a mere reference to the text:

"The earth also was corrupt before God; and the earth was filled with violence. And God looked upon the earth, and, behold, it was corrupt; for all flesh had corrupted his way upon the earth. And God said unto Noah, the end of all flesh is come before me; for the earth is filled with violence through them; and, behold, I will destroy them with the earth." * * * * "In the six hundredth year of Noah's life, in the second month, the seventeenth day of the month, the same day were all the fountains of the great deep broken up, and the windows of heaven were opened. And the rain was upon the earth forty days and forty nights." * * * * "And all flesh died that moved upon the earth, both of fowl, and of cattle, and of beast, and of every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth, and every man; all in whose nostrils was the breath of life, of all that was in the dry land died. And every living substance was destroyed which was upon the face of the ground, both man, and cattle, and the creeping things, and the fowl of heaven; and they were destroyed from the earth: and Noah only remained alive, and they that were with him in the ark. And the waters prevailed upon the earth a hundred and fifty days."

We look in vain for tropes in these passages. It is all plain and literal as our English language can make it.

Let it be noted that, in the process of creation, the fishes of the sea, the fowls of the air and the beasts of the field were created before man, and occupied the earth, perhaps the whole face of the earth, when Adam was made. If I am not mistaken, this is the teaching of geological science as well as that of the book of Genesis.

Now, if this was so, and the deluge was only partial in extent—confined to the valley of the Enphrates, as the only abode of primeval man—why should Noah take two and two of every species of fowl and brute into the ark?

But enough, Mr. Editor, for this once. If you think it will not worry the patience of your readers the subject will be pursued somewhat further next week.

LABOR ON SUNDAY.

BY A MEMBER OF THE NEW YORK BAR.

The opinion of courts as to what may lawfully be done on Sunday is by no means a trustworthy guide to what is right. But it is worth considering. Courts do not undertake to say what moral duty dictates, but what the laws prescribe or forbid. Now, as these laws are distinct, and many of them quite different, in the various States, it has naturally come to pass that the decisions differ; the same kind of business may be lawful in one town and unlawful in the town adjoining for the reason that a State boundary line runs between the two. But these distinctions are in details. However the laws are phrased and whatever particular things they may forbid there is pretty general agreement in this principle: to forbid ordinary business and labor except works of necessity or charity. Probably few persons have practical difficulty in deciding what may be done by way of charity. But there has been much doubt and perplexity over "works of necessity." Necessary is a very vague word.

One view in which the judges have agreed is that the law does mean that work must be "absolutely necessary," as the phrase is. The necessity meant is a relative one. Scarcely anything is absolutely necessary to be done, in the strictest sense. Says one judge: "If nothing but absolute necessity was intended it would, in general, be unlawful to prepare a meal on the Sabbath; because it might, without difficulty be previously prepared, or most people might safely enough fast for twenty-four hours. To supply gaslight would be equally unlawful, for people might use candles previously provided, or might retire to bed at twilight." Other judges have discussed this topic in many ways. The gist of what they say may be stated thus: The law contemplates that the community has a general need that all should rest on Sunday; most of the affairs and doings of week-day life are less important than this need of a rest day; but some few are superior. To keep the body physically sustained by food, to provide facilities for worship during some hours of the day, and for restful mental occupation during others; to nurse and heal the sick; to provide prompt burial for the dead—these and some other objects are superior to the need of general repose. Necessary work includes all that is indispensable to be done on Sunday in order to secure attainment of whatever is more important to the community than its day of rest. Where the complaint was that a servant girl rode to her employer's house Sunday morning to cook breakfast, and that a coachman harnessed the horses and drove the family to church, the judges held that the work was lawful.

Another view adopted is that the law does not mean a personal necessity, but one arising out of the nature of the thing to be accomplished and the need of the community for it. That one is very poor and in great need of wages is not the kind of necessity that allows him to labor. There was a man in Arkansas who had a little wheat-patch, but was too poor to own a cradle needed for gathering it. He worked for neighboring farmers through the week in cradling their wheat, on Saturday night borrowed a cradle, and on Sunday cut his crop. The decision was that his being poor made no difference; there is no general necessity that wheat shall be reaped on Sunday; therefore no one may do it. There was a shoemaker in Massachusetts who could not quit his work in the shop on week days without throwing the other hands out of work, for they need what he produced; so his garden got in a sadly weedy condition. At last he got two days off, Friday and Saturday, and hoed all he could, working by moonlight till late Saturday night. But he did not get quite through; and yet he must go back to the shop on Sunday morning. So he hoed the last few hills on Sunday. He argued that this was necessary work; but the judges said that that was not the right kind of necessity.

Another view widely established is that the Sunday law against work is not designed to prevent or destroy any lawful vocations altogether. Therefore if the nature of a business or a process is such that it does not admit of a cessation once a week, whatever must needs be done on Sunday to keep it going is necessary. Examples are, the work of seamen on a voyage, the duties of a policeman or watchman, the prosecution of a manufacture which cannot be completed in six days or stopped and resumed. An Indiana brewer escaped a fine upon this ground. He proved that the process of malting barley was such that it required ten days, and that any neglect during that time to turn it three or four times a day would spoil it. The court said that he might go into his brewery on Sunday and turn the barley enough to preserve it. Probably the maple-sap cases rest on this ground. There have been two instances, one in Vermont and one in Indiana, where farmers who went out to their maple trees to bring in the sap have been prosecuted. They said that the sap would not stop running, and the nature of the business did not allow providing buckets large enough to hold what would flow in a day and two nights. The judges said that going to empty the buckets might be called necessary. A man conscientious about obeying the fourth commandment would very likely submit to the expense of buying large buckets or to the loss of what ran over from small ones. But the courts are agreed that they have nothing to do with a person's obeying the commandment; that is a question for his own conscience; the judicial duty as to Sunday work consists only in restricting it to what the nature of vocations more important than rest, or which cannot be suspended, requires.

With respect to all those business matters which depend upon the course and events of nature, courts act on the common sense principle that whatever can, by good judgment and forethought, be anticipated or postponed cannot be deemed necessary; but exigencies which cannot be foreseen, such as storms, shipwrecks, conflagrations and the like, create a necessity. There was a Massachusetts paper mill the machinery of which became clogged in consequence of sand accumulating in the "wheelpit." To stop the wheel on a week day would throw the hands out of work; so a man volunteered to dig out the pit on Sunday. While he was doing this the engineer carelessly started the wheel, and the digger was hurt. He sued the mill company for damages; to which they answered that he himself was to blame; he had no business to be cleaning out the wheel-pit on Sunday. Such work could be done on a week day. And the judges so decided. At Scitnate, in the same State, there is a beach where, years ago, the tide would wash up a kind of sea weed which was valuable to farmers for manuring lands. As the ebbing tide would wash it away again, some of them went on Sunday to gather it, and were prevented. The judge said the case was a knotty one; if a vessel were wrecked upon the beach, to work in saving the cargo would be lawful; but the fact that the fish in bay were unusually abundant some Sunday would not justify casting the nets. How it would be if a whale were stranded was, he said, a puzzle. On the whole, he thought the farmers were justified in saving their kelp. There are an indefinite variety of these instances, and many diverse decisions. Sometimes the same question is decided in opposite ways: as, the question whether cargo may be put on board ship on Sunday when the river is about to freeze, so that if the work is delayed navigation may close and prevent the voyage.

Upon the whole no one need, or can, object to the general rule of the Sunday laws against business and labor—there are some statutes which forbid particular vocations by name; these are another matter—who does not object to the general feeling in the community that a week rest-day is needed and useful. Whatever must be done on Sunday to prosecute a business or attain objects which the community at large need more than the rest day is necessary work, and allowable under the administration of the law as it is conducted throughout the country at large. The person who is asked to labor in opening the church for worship; in selling medicines; in cooking meals; in preparing Monday morning's paper; in selling dry goods and groceries; in serving drinks over a bar; may form a good judgment whether the ultimate object of the task is more valuable or less to the community than the regularity and quiet of the day of rest.—Christian Union.

THREE TYPICAL PREACHERS.

It has been my recent privilege, says a correspondent of the "Examiner and Chronicle," to hear three London preachers who enjoy a world-wide renown. Poles apart in their ecclesiastical relation, schools of belief and methods of thought, they agree in the fact that each after his kind is a leading and representative man.

CHARLES H. SPURGEON.

Not much need be written of him who was first in the order of my hearing. It goes without saying that Mr. Spurgeon is a most royal preacher—considered merely as a preacher, probably the foremost man in Christendom. His Tabernacle constitutes one of the very biggest institutions in big London. It is now all but universally recognized as such. The newspapers that once sneered at him as a charlatan or mountebank have quite laid aside their contemptuous airs, and now speak of him with respect. It is at last pretty well understood that a man who for twenty-five years can hold a regular audience of from five to seven thousand people, must be a somewhat potential unit in this world's affairs. When I heard Mr. Spurgeon the other Sunday he was, I think, at his best—much better, according to the information of friends, than on the Sunday immediately preceding and following.

Mr. Spurgeon I think to be the foremost preacher in the world, not because of preeminence in genius, but by virtue of the fact that he possesses nearly all the elements of good preaching in harmonious combination. Others surpass him easily enough in this or that particular quality of pulpit excellence, but none equal him in the happy union of all these qualities. Many preachers are more learned, more profound, more logical, more inspiring and suggestive to the intellect. Many surpass him in the lofty flight and broad sweep of their imagination. Many are more contagious and magnetic on the emotional side; but where is the man that has all these, and yet others, in such respectable degree and so admirably blended? And he has a voice such as nobody else possesses—a voice that gives to a platitude the dignity and effect of an apothegm. I suspect he could pronounce the word "Mesopotamia" in such a way as to throw an audience into tears. Best of all, Mr. Spurgeon is an unconpromisingly loyal preacher of the gospel. He packs the Tabernacle by no sensation, but just by telling over the old, old story. For this I do greatly honour him. He has done a work of infinite value, by showing us what we want "to draw," is not "another gospel," but the ancient Gospel uttered as if it were God's truth.

CARDINAL MANNING.

On the next Sunday seeing Cardinal Manning announced to preach in the Pro-Cathedral, South Kensington, I went in search of his Eminence. (Rome is careful not to call things by names that anybody else uses. By Pro-Cathedral, I believe is meant a temporary Cathedral.) I sought the Cardinal with large expectations. I was prepared to see a splendid edifice crowded with a vast throng, and rather looked to find some ducal coronets at the door. Judge of my not unpleasant disappointment on being ushered into a house of exceedingly moderate pretensions, both as to its size and architectural character, not merely filled, and the audience in social quality evidently not much above a Romish audience in America. It is said that the Cardinal is expecting to get back Westminster Abbey and the other edifices that Henry the Eighth stole from mother Church, but judging from what I saw at the Pro-Cathedral, the day of this recovery is considerably distant.

Presently his Eminence mounted the pulpit, duly preceded and followed by candlebearers and the rest. He is an old man of slender figure, with a sincere, benevolent, classical face apparently worn with study and care. He somewhat resembles Dean Stanley. His preaching was simple, earnest, conversational in style, and characterised by admirably pure and nervous English. In substance and tone the sermon, as was to be expected, leaned towards the value of works and ascetical practices. In contrast with Spurgeon's sweet, encouraging presentation of divine truth, it adopted a strain somewhat harsh and depressing, though there was very little in its doctrine or spirit to which a Protestant hearer could take exception. The Sunday proved to be that of the unhappy St. Lawrence, whose pictorial agonies as he writhes on his burning gridiron are nearly as familiar to us, and much more horrible, than those of poor St. Sebastian, stuck as full of arrows as a pin-cushion is of pins. Glancing at the life of the martyr, the Cardinal said that the obvious lesson of his example was a lesson of "fortitude;" and so, taking for a text the words, "Be strong in the Lord," he proceeded to enforce the importance of this virtue.

The sermon was able and interesting, though without anything to mark it as the work of about the most eminent Roman Catholic prelate in the world. In the course of his observations the Cardinal surprised me by asking his "children"—in this tender phrase he often addressed his hearers—"Who of you fast now?" "Who abstains from meat on Friday?" I was not prepared to hear from such lips the confession of extensive revolt against the absurd tyranny of the Church.

STOPFORD A. BROOKE.

In the evening of this same Sunday I listened to the above-named clergyman in his chapel in Bloomsbury. Said chapel is a miracle of inconvenience and discomfort, and would not be tolerated for a day anywhere in the world but in dear, stupidly conservative old England. The perpendicular backs of the pews come up to the sitter's ears, and the ponderous galleries project themselves nearly in the middle of the audience-room. Mr. Brooke is a florid, burly, typical Englishman, some forty years of age, I should say, with what is very uncommon in this island, a bad voice, and what is lamentable common, a bad delivery. He has a little impediment in his speech that I rather like, which compels him to wrestle gently with the letter r, so that when he would say round or rain, he says wound and wain.

Having in view the witty distribution of the English Church people into Platitudinarians, Attitudinarians, and Latitudinarians, it is well known that Mr. Brooke is a shining light in the last division. On this occasion he stuck to his class. His sermon was a very nice little æsthetical homily on what constituted "the light of home." He described this light as consisting mainly in good temper, the allowance of freedom to the various members of the family and in work. The discourse was put in very sweet and beautiful English. Some of its illustrations were exquisite, and I have no doubt that, if printed, it would make very charming and useful reading. My feeling while hearing it was, that as an occasional sermon it was proper enough, especially if it had been somewhat tinctured with the Gospel; but regarded as regular Sunday food, it struck me that it would be gruel of a very watery sort.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

FOREIGN.

Gleaned from exchanges:

A dispute in Madras as to the ownership of a supposed hair of the Prophet's beard has been decided.

On Sabbath five adult Israelites were baptized in the Episcopal Jews' Chapel, Palestine Place.

Arrangements are progressing satisfactorily for the holding of an All-World Sabbath school Convention in London next year in connection with the Raikes Centenary.

The Rev. Dr. Porter of Belfast, author of the "Giant Cities of Bashan," has been appointed president of Queen's College, Belfast, in place of Rev. Dr. Henry.

A Roman Catholic Assurance Company, for the purpose of carrying on the business of life and fire insurance in Great Britain and Ireland, and in the States of Continental Europe, is being formed.

The Rev. M. Cornelio, Archdeacon of Piedimonte de Alife, province of Naples, has been excommunicated for holding Liberal opinions. The act of excommunication was affixed to the church door with a hell and candle. There is great indignation among the populace.

Thirty thousand people recently assembled in Bengal, at a mela, or fair, to hear the Gospel. Two rows of huts, each 500 feet by 10, were erected and a large pavilion built. Articles were bought and sold, and the services each day were crowded to listen to the hymns and addresses.

Advices from the West Coast of Africa present a curious picture of the festival attending the public presentation of Prince Dukeii the future King of Old Calibar. His Majesty was attired in a robe of bright colored cloth; on his head was the worn-out hat of an admiral, and at his back was a long brush of peacock's feathers.

The Bishop of Gibraltar has issued a pastoral letter, urging the establishment of an English Church in Cyprus. At Nikosia, he says, there is a church which was erected by the Crusaders, and the bishop advocates the securing of this interesting structure, which is now in the hands of the Turks, and used as a granary and stable.

It is stated that the Duke and Duchess of Norfolk, as soon as the latter is sufficiently recovered, will make another pilgrimage to Lourdes. Last autumn they went there to pray for the consummation of the event which is now being celebrated among the Duke's people, and on this occasion they will go to offer up their thanksgiving.

M. Gorden of St. Petersburg, secretary of the Association for the Diffusion of Knowledge among Russian Israelites, and well known as a Hebrew author and poet, has been summarily transported to Siberia without any legal proceedings or trial. The specific charge seems to have been that he was discovered reading the Nihilistic journal, Land and Liberty.

Next October the Orthodox French Protestants will hold a general Synod of a non-official character: The object of this Synod is to deliberate on the situation of Protestantism in France. The government refuses to give the approaching assembly an official character. Many provincial consistories are convoked to choose delegates who will represent them at the October assembly.

A superb present has been made to the Church of the Oratory in South Kensington. It is a memorial by Lord Bute of his marriage, which took place in that church four years ago. The gift consists of a couple of handsome lamps or candlestands for use in the sanctuary, each having seven lights, and being an exact reproduction of the seven-branched candlesticks of the Jewish Tabernacle. They are of bronze, heavily gilded, and stand on blocks of marble, with the arms of Lord Bute and the Pope engraved thereon. These marble blocks alone cost £4,000, and with the fine carving took over four years to complete.

A movement is in progress for erecting a Presbyterian church at Canterbury, England. A circular soliciting funds, says: "Presbyterianism is no new thing in Canterbury. The old English form has died out, but the French form has never been extinguished; and the Presbyterian service begun three hundred years ago for the Huguenot refugees is continued to this day in the crypt of the cathedral."

Central Madagascar keeps the Sabbath. In Antananarivo, a city of 100,000 people, there is no trade of any kind going on, and no shop open on that day. There are no less than twenty chapels in the city, some of them holding more than a thousand persons, and these are all well-filled on Sunday. This shows the hold which Christianity has taken upon the nation.

Little work is often held out as an inducement to those who buy advowsons, but we do not remember before to have met with a case in which the living was boldly advertised as a sinecure. Such a "sinecure rectory," however, is offered for sale at Norfolk, by a firm of solicitors at Fakenham. No church, no residence, income derivable from commuted tithes £169 6s. per annum. Present incumbent in his seventy-ninth year.

From the fifty-sixth annual report of the Berlin Society for the Promotion of Christianity among the Jews, it appears that the total number of the Hebrew race to-day is about what it was in the days of King David—between six and seven million. Of these, five million are in Europe, one million five hundred thousand in America, two hundred thousand in Asia, and eighty thousand in Africa. The majority of the African Jews live in the Province of Algiers. But they are to be found in Abyssinia, and all along the north coast, and even in the Saharan oases, frequently acting as intermediaries between Mohammedans and Christians. Of the Asiatic Jews twenty thousand are assigned to India and twenty-five thousand to Palestine.

WILMINGTON, N. C.:

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 15, 1879.

WHAT IS THE MATTER?

A few weeks ago a valued correspondent sent us an article—which we published—showing the vast difference in numbers between our own church and the Methodist and Baptist churches in North Carolina. He desired an answer to the question "Why is it that others have gone so far before us in this great work of carrying the gospel to the people of our State?"

We will endeavor to give an outline of the principal reasons, as they appear to us, for this state of things. Various reasons have been suggested at different times. But many of the suggestions seem to be wide of the mark. To any candid mind, the question will arise, is it because of the superior piety and zeal in those churches? We never heard anyone affirm this to be so, but the question arises so promptly that it must be met; and that, too, on the very beginning of such an inquiry as we are now making. If the fact be as the question intimates, we need seek no further. Deeper and more ardent piety, and greater zeal, will account for all. But an acquaintance of many years, and of some extent with the ministry and people of the three Churches convinces us that this is not the case. We would not disparage, and we do not disparage the brethren of those Churches when we say that they are not more devoted nor more zealous than our own. A proof of this is to be found in the fact that we are outstripping them in the foreign field as far as we are behind them in the home field. So their larger success at home is not to be explained by a claim of greater purity.

It has been said as an explanation that our doctrines are unpalatable to the natural hearts of man and that for this reason we are unpopular. We cannot accept the explanation. These doctrines are the same that they were when they swept with such power over Scotland and Holland, and the human hearts they encounter are the same in character. But even here experience proves the fallacy of the reasoning. One, of the very churches compared with ours in that statement is a church that teaches Calvinistic doctrine as fully, if not as uniformly as we do.

We cannot accept the statement that our scriptural Calvinism is a bar in the way of the progress of our church.

Is it then true that the Presbyterian Church is in government and organization unsuited to the times and the people? We cannot admit that this is so for we hold that the Lord gave to His Church a government as well as a faith, and we claim that we have not been disobedient to the Divine Teacher. If now our Church is organized on the principles revealed in the Word of God then it is clear that it is not the fault of our form of government that others have been going before us.

This seems to have brought us face to face with what we hold to be a correct answer to the question we set out to meet.

It is not in our doctrine; it is not in our government; then it must be in our methods—in our methods of work, our modes of administering the divinely revealed principles of government, and our modes of preaching this divinely revealed System of Doctrine.

An examination of this position will, we apprehend, show it to be true. Let us look at some of the particulars involved:

The most remarkable deficiency in our methods of work seems to consist in the neglect of the evangelistic office in the ministry of the Word. Our forefathers came from a country in which the office and work of the pastor were considered sufficient to meet all the ordinary needs of the Church. The evangelist had well-nigh ceased to be regarded as one of the Master's chosen instrumentalities for propagating the Gospel. The age in which the habits of the Church had been formed was not a missionary age. And in consequence, the habits and traditions which came with them across the sea were such as were in a large measure unsuited to the needs and conditions of the work on this side of the water. Churches were formed here and there by immigration. Or they were gathered by the independent labor of some minister who, uncalled by presbytery or people, was engaged in evangelistic labor. In any case the church so formed called a pastor or stated supply and gave themselves only to the work of maintaining the Gospel among themselves. The thought of sending it to the destitute regions around seems not to have been entertained. And while clamorous necessities and equally clamorous opportunities were rising on every hand, no thought seems to have been entertained that the Lord was calling them to undertake the work. The Methodist and Baptist Churches were more fortunate in the traditions which they brought with them to this country. The work of the evangelist has from the beginning been made prominent by them both. In the Methodist Church it has perhaps had an undue prominence. Almost every pastor is also an evangelist. Most of them in former times had more work to do as evangelists than as pastors.

It is given to us to see and note the results of this difference in methods of work. The two denominations referred to are to be found in every part of North Carolina. They are everywhere strong, confident and aggressive. And the task of winning new territory for our Church is now harder by reason of the fact that they have gone in and taken possession of openings which we might have occupied and did not.

We are unwilling to dwell on the sad mistake now noted. For it was not a bare mistake; it was unfaithfulness as well. If our Church had felt a due sympathy for the needy; if any adequate desire to glorify our Master had possessed us, then our zeal would have found a way to the vacant places around us, and our Church would have gone with at least equal step by the side of others to gain and possess the land for the Lord.

But let us not be understood as charging a peculiar dereliction upon our Church. Only two in all the number which occupy the State with us have outstripped us. We are glad of all that has been done. We are thankful for all that our Church has had grace to do. We are hopeful for the future; and not less hopeful—nay more so—for the wide-spread spirit of discontent, with the unaggressive policy of the past. In the hope of directing this awakened spirit to wiser measures and better results, we have written the above, and shall write again.

DEATH OF REV. JOHN DOUGLAS.

Early on the morning of the 8th inst., before the day had dawned, Rev. John Douglas passed from earth to heaven. The meagre data at hand do not admit of such extended notice as his valuable services to the Church demand. Other friends will doubtless supply the lack.

Mr. Douglas was about 70 years of age. He was born in South Carolina, and reared in Chester county, near Purity church, which, during a part of his ministerial life, he supplied. Toward the close of the late war he removed from near Charleston, resigning his labors on the islands in that neighborhood, we have heard, and took charge of the churches of Steele Creek and Pleasant Hill, in Mecklenburg county. He remained with these churches until his death. Steele Creek in communicants outnumbers any other Presbyterian church in North Carolina.

Mr. Douglas died of catarrhal fever. His end was unexpected, for a very few days before he was apparently in robust health. But a few weeks ago, in a contribution to our columns, he announced the blessing God had bestowed upon him and his church in the outpouring of His Spirit, and expressed his gratitude to God for the signal favor. From this crowning mercy of a long and useful life he was called to his heavenly reward.

The Southern Home justly says of him:

"Steele Creek will never have a more beloved and faithful pastor. His genial humor, Christian sympathy and large liberality endeared him to all who knew him, and his death will be a great loss to the Presbyterian Church, of which he was a prominent minister."

It had been intended to inter the remains in Chester county, but this was found to be impracticable, and the obsequies were performed at Steele Creek church, and in its graveyard the remains were deposited.

The Charlotte Observer says of his work:

"The influence of his life and teachings was made manifest at his grave when the elders of the congregation appointed a meeting to take steps to continue the work which he had begun, that the elements which he had combined might continue to work together without cessation—that the spirit which he had been the means of infusing into the church might not lose any of its vitality for lack of one to fill his place."

After writing the above we received the following, written from Rutherfordton, by Rev. W. E. McIlwain:

"DEAR BRO.: I sent you a telegram from Charlotte, informing you of the death of Bro. John Douglas, but suppose I was too late for this week's issue. I therefore send you a more extended notice for next week's issue:

"Leaving my home on the 8th inst., I proceeded to Charlotte on my way to this place, to aid Bro. McGilvary at his approaching meeting at Little Brittain church. Before reaching Charlotte I was informed of the death of our brother, and having a few hours to spend in the city I made a hasty visit to Steele Creek church, and found the home of Bro. D. filled with his sorrowing people. Soon I was permitted to fix my eyes upon the noble form, now prostrate, and that happy face scarcely changed in death, and as I looked and thought, and thought and looked, could not refrain from mingling my tears with the widowed wife and the widowed church. This done, I repaired to another room, where I found Mrs. Douglas and Miss Sue Baker, the adopted daughter, surrounded by sympathizing friends, and bearing up under the blow as grace only could enable them. Having only a short while to remain I read the xlvi Psalm and commended the family and friends to Him who is "our Refuge and Strength." From Mrs. D. I learned that the health of Bro. Douglas had been declining for several months, but he had not, on this account, missed a single appointment. He had lately attended a meeting of the Board of Directors of Columbia Seminary, and stopped on his return home to attend the meeting of the A. R. Synod at Union church, in Chester county, arrived at home on Saturday evening, and although suffering from a violent cold, preached at Steele Creek on Sabbath. He was able to visit some of the sick on Monday, but was confined to his bed on Wednesday, and in one week his disease, gastric fever, terminated in death. He did not seem to realize that death was so near. He gave no instructions as to his burial and uttered no farewell words. He leaves behind him an adopted daughter, and a devoted wife who has walked with him for more than forty-two years and who, by her genuine piety and unusual intelligence, has added greatly to his happiness as a man and his success as a minister.

"Perhaps for your next week's issue I can furnish a few facts of his history."

THE PROSPECT IN ZULULAND.

A venerable missionary is credited with having said a short time ago that the Zulu war had set back the missionary cause fifty years. At the time we expressed our hope and persuasion that this opinion might not be verified. The London Weekly Review advances some very sensible reasons for supposing that the settlement of the war proposed by the British Government will greatly conduce to the evangelization of the land. The future government of the country will be a British protectorate with home rule. The territory will be divided among chiefs independent of each other, but dependent upon the British government. A British resident will represent the latter, and no arms or even merchandise can be imported without his consent. The ruthless military system of the former chief will be, of course, abolished, and freedom to marry according to the ancient customs of the land will be accorded. Under the former government missionary operations were always precarious to say the least; under the new order even without the direct influence of the government, circumstances favorable to missionary operations will be greatly increased. Instead of bloodshed and rapine as a chronic state of affairs, peace will reign. Deprived of opportunities for exercising their savage propensities, and under direct encouragement from their conquerors, they will turn to the development of civilized life and engage in peaceful pursuits. Absolute protection will be vouchsafed and the natives will be allowed free ingress or egress into or from any of the British provinces. The Zulus are said to be intelligent and there is a reasonable prospect that soon native preachers can be raised up to proclaim Gospel tidings at home and carry them to other parts of Africa.

God seems indeed in this case, as in so many others, to be about to show that he can cause the wrath of man to praise Him.

THE USUAL COURTESIES.

We are requested to say that all the lines of public transportation in the State have been applied to for customary courtesies to the delegates of Synod. The following have responded: C. F. & Y. V. R. R. (Fayetteville to Gulf), C. C. R'y (Wilmington to Shelby), pass delegates and return for one first-class fare; W. N. C. R. R. (from Salisbury to Swannanoa Gap)—"Members of Synod, on paying fare to Statesville, will be returned free of charge." Atlantic Coast Line 3 cents per mile each way. The Atlantic, Tennessee & Ohio Railroad offers reduced rates to delegates passing over their line (from Charlotte to Statesville), equivalent to a little more than 3 cents per mile. The Raleigh & Augusta and the Raleigh and Gaston Railroads will pass members and visitors to Synod for 6 cents per mile for both ways. R. & D. R. R. (Goldsboro to Charlotte says—"All agents in North Carolina are instructed to sell to delegates and visitors to the meeting round trip tickets to Salisbury at 6 cents per mile. The tickets will be on sale October 20th, 21st and 22d, and will be good to return within ten days from date of sale. The certificates printed on the tickets must be filled up and signed by the stated clerk, or the tickets will not be good to return. The steamboat companies on Cape Fear river, as always, grant reduced fare.

COLUMBIA SEMINARY.

As the fact, we presume it is a fact, that the Columbia Theological Seminary has lost seriously by the failures in Charleston has become current, it becomes proper for us to refer to it. That the truth should be known is desirable, to prevent exaggerations or misconceptions which may arise. The Register of Columbia recently had this to say:

"Our readers will share with us in feelings of deep regret at the announcement that the Theological Seminary of the Presbyterian Church, situated in this city, will probably suffer serious loss by the failure of Adger & Co. The extent of their loss has not yet been accurately ascertained, but those who are in a position to know, think it will hardly be less than $25,000 or $26,000. If this proves to be the case, the institution will be left without the means of continuing its exercises. The request of the Board of Directors to Rev. Dr. Plumer that he would visit the churches of the State in behalf of the seminary was made before the failure of Messrs Adger & Co., was known, and now the necessity for his doing so is of course greater than it was then. We sincerely trust his mission may be abundantly blessed, and that some means will be providentially found for the maintenance of this most useful institution. There are now twenty-one students training for the gospel ministry within its walls; thirteen of them are in the senior class, six in the middle and two in the junior, and its graduates are scattered not only over the Southern States but over the American continent and the world."

NEW ORLEANS BETHEL.

It is right hard to keep up with the New Orleans Seamen's Bethel; they move around so lively, and get up so much that is novel and interesting, and of real, solid, good service withal. Whatever adds to the moral or religious enjoyment of seamen always commends itself to Christian hearts. The surest method to counteract the evil influences of vice, by which seamen are specially beset, is to win them to virtue by presenting opportunities for social and religious enjoyment. We clip the following from the New Orleans Daily City Item:

"The new room of the Upper Bethel, one hundred feet long, could not seat or stand the audience that was assembled last evening. Many could not get into the building, but stood outside and kept perfect order. There were at least 800 persons present although the weather was threatening. It was a great success. Dr. Matthews made a speech that never will be forgotten, especially by the men of the sea. Although it was highly humorous in its body, yet it ended with a burst of eloquence that touched every heart.

"Miss DeGruy gave some fine pieces on the piano, but it was the songs of the seamen that charmed and amused the large audience. The concert was given by the seamen of the English ship Iron Cross, Capt. Randall. The captain took no part, but was delighted to see his sailor boys, under the direction of his son, Johnny Randall, an apprentice boy of the ship, hold spell bound at least 800 people for over an hour. The handsome bouquet of flowers thrown from the ladies of the audience, was a pleasing feature of the evening.

"The children of both Homes near the Bethel, Jewish and Episcopal, were present by special invitation of the chaplain.

"The favorite English ship Belgravia, that visits New Orleans every season, will be invited to give the next concert, on Monday evening next. The Monday night concerts are free, and designed for the innocent amusement of seamen, boatmen and river men, and all connected with the marine interests of New Orleans, and their families and friends. Temperance Friday evenings.

EDUCATION.

To the Chairmen of the Presbyterial Committees of Education:

Please bear in mind that application for aid to students must be made annually. The fact that a student was on our list last year makes no difference. If he wishes aid this year, application must be made by the Chairman of Education in his Presbytery. Brethren will also please state whether the student is in College, or in the Seminary. The undersigned has authority from the Committee to receive all students as beneficiaries for whom application is made in the regular way.

My postoffice address at present is Covington, Tenn., but letters addressed to me at Memphis will be forwarded. Quite a number of letters on the subject of Education have been addressed to Rev. Dr. Waddel, the former Secretary. Brethren will bear in mind that there has been a change of Secretaries.

E. M. RICHARDSON,
Secretary of Education.

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

Thanks to the Synod of North Carolina are due, and will be formally tendered, to the various railroad and steamboat companies which have extended the facility of reduced fare to delegates to the approaching meeting of Synod. We reprint the list in this issue with such additions as have come forward.

As a report has gained currency that diphtheria is epidemic at Raleigh and the result is damaging to the schools of that city, Mr. J. B. Burwell, principal of Peace Institute, applied to the health officers for a correction of the statement. Here is the reply:

"SIR: We are in the receipt of your note stating that great injury had been done the schools of Raleigh by exaggerated reports of the ravages of diphtheria, and have laid the same before the Board of Health. We are authorized to state to you as the unanimous opinion of the Board that there had been a few sporadic cases of diphtheria as there is always in the spring and fall, but that it has never assumed an epidemic form, and has now almost if not entirely disappeared. The Board of Health are keeping an accurate account of the death-rate from all causes, and will be prepared to show that Raleigh is the healthiest town on the Atlantic slope—the death-rate from all cases not being more than 1½ per cent., whereas the Carlisle table, the usual guide for life insurance societies, estimates the death-rate of healthy persons within a small fraction of two per cent. All cases are reported promptly to the Board, and no case has been reported in either of the three excellent female seminaries or in the two institutions of the deaf and dumb and the blind. You will therefore please inform your correspondents that their fears have been unduly excited, and there will be no danger in a prompt return of the pupils. (Signed) Rich'd B. Haywood, M. D., President of the Board of Health; James McKee, M. D., Superintendent of Board of Health."

Let us suggest that the churches in our Synod will promptly and carefully prepare the necessary lists of their elders and deacons as called for by the Stated Clerk of the Synod. Read the call carefully and comply exactly. The matter is one of importance.

Amusing blunders sometimes occur from papers having a plurality of editors. A joke is told of the Religious Herald that one editor having prepared two articles intended to be regularly consecutive on the same subject, and then leaving his post, the associate reversed the natural order, and published the last first. Even worse than this: the same paper in one issue heartily condemned Dr. Weaver's views and course on alien immersion, and in a subsequent issue as heartily approved it. The Christian at Work catches the Interior in a similar blunder. During the absence of the managing editor on his vacation, the Interior heartily endorsed an article on "Nude Art." On the return of the editor mentioned he scored Dr. Crosby saying just the reverse of the previous utterance.

A London paper publishes a list of notable persons who have become Roman Catholics. They are quite numerous. The Christian Union sums them thus:

"The list includes the names of one duke, two marquises, five earls, fifteen barons and lords, irrespective of courtesy titles, seven baronets, three knights, one general, one admiral, ten members of parliament, four queen's counsel, four professors, 168 beneficed clergymen, 67 of whom have become priests, and 198 gentlemen, sons of peers, fellows and the like, 51 of whom have taken sacerdotal orders. Among women five duchesses, 38 peeresses, wives of baronets, knights and others, and 33 ladies of position have gone over to the Church of Rome. Many persons prominent in society, art and literature are included in the movement. Some of these are Thomas Arnold, brother of Matthew Arnold and son of Dr. Thomas Arnold of Rugby; Thomas Burnand; Emily Bowles, the authoress; Florence Marryat, the novelist; Miss Froude, niece of the historian; Miss Gladstone, sister of the ex-premier; Coventry Patmore, the poet; "Prof." Pepper; Adelaide Anne Proctor, grand-daughter of Sir Walter Scott; Elizabeth Thompson, painter of the 'Roll Call;' and the eldest son of the celebrated philanthropist, Wilberforce."

The article on our first page, furnished to the Christian Union "by a member of the New York bar," will be found interesting as showing how the Sunday civil laws are construed by the highest legal authorities in the various States. We would be glad to have, and we speak also for our readers, from any of our eminent lawyers a report of any decisions by the courts of North Carolina.

Our readers will doubtless like to know what Mrs. General Booth has to say in defence of the "Hallelujah Lasses." The London Weekly Review reports the following from a lecture by her in Glasgow City Hall:

"Mrs. Booth said that the principles of the army were those of aggressive Christianity. The efforts were directed chiefly to the lower classes of the population, and those at the head of affairs had acted on the principle that novelty is better than stagnation. They had accordingly used every means in their power, such as the "Hallelujah Lasses," converted thieves, and ruffians of every description to attract attendances from the slums. The extraordinary expedients adopted drew the very lowest to their meetings. They went for a time from motives of curiosity, but at last God got His hook in their jaws, and they were then obliged to attend. The army consisted of 120 corps, with 180 officers. They had 3,256 speakers who were ready to preach under any circumstances and at any risk. They had 143 theatres, music halls and warehouses where they held annually 50,000 meetings. Besides these, there were 40,000 open-air meetings, at which over 2,000,000 people were obliged to hear something of the Gospel. Their income was £20,000 yearly, £14,000 being subscribed by the people."

One cannot contemplate the outbreak of the Indian war from a moral point of view without wondering why at present, and in all past time as well, our government should overlook the solemn responsibility which is upon it, to observe its solemn treaty obligations with the Indians. A vast amount of money is expended, and valuable lives are lost, because a few persons, passing by millions of acres, intrude upon the domain reserved to the Indians by treaty stipulations, and appropriate it to themselves. Does the government owe this sacrifice of faith and honor to the few adventurers who thus involve it in war? Can they not be arrested and summarily punished? Protected by the government in their crimes, nothing less than extermination of the Indians will satisfy them. Would our government deal with British or other national territory in this way? The answer to that question is enough to cause the brow of any American to mantle with shame.

There is something touching in what is recorded of the King of the Zulus, heretofore known only as a ruthless tyrant, now a helpless captive in the hands of his conquerors. On seeing the soldiers at drill on board a British man-of-war he expressed his surprise and admiration: "Oh! I was only born yesterday. I am a mere baby. I never should have fought against such good men as the English, who intended to take away my country and govern it so much better than I could. They shot at us to make us Christians; I ask pardon for shooting back at them."

On another occasion he remarked to the Governor of Cape Colony: "I was a child of the British Government. My father (the English) came to chastise me for wrong doing. I caught the stick with which he wished to beat me, and broke it. I did wrong to fight him and am punished. I am no longer king. The English are a great people. They will not kill those who fought with them. I hope the great queen will pardon me, and allow me to return to my country, and give me a place, and permit me to build a kraal."

When first captured his bearing was calm and stately, as he passed between the lines of soldiers drawn up before and around him. Wearing a red blanket upon his breast in the manner of a Roman toga, he stepped slowly, looking round with head thrown back and haughty gaze at the soldiers around him. When captured he asked the rank of the officer who had taken him. He treated the Native Contingent contemptuously.

There seems indeed to be a great work of Protestant evangelization going forward in France. We clip from the Christian Union:

"Every week brings new facts to illustrate the spread of the evangelical movement in France and the popular interest in it. At an assembly lately held in a Protestant church in Paris in connection with the Evangelical Society of France, a French lawyer stated, as a most remarkable fact, that on his journey through France he had had opportunity to ascertain that at no former time could the Gospel be preached so freely as now; and that among the people there prevailed a great hunger and thirst after the word of life. Wherever in the provinces Biblical expositions were announced no hall could be found large enough to hold overflowing masses. They came from two and three miles around, not for curiosity, but from a desire to hear the word of God. The people are turning away with discontent from the empty shows of the Romish Church; they have found out that the desire of the soul is not stilled by it and they are greedy to hear the teaching of a pure faith. The Sunday-schools, which are established in all the large cities, meet with more and more favor, and are well attended. The secretary of the Central Evangelical Society of Paris thinks if that Society had the means it could establish a new Protestant church in France every week."

NEWS NOTES.

We specially invite news from all quarters for this column.

THYATIRA CHURCH, CONCORD PRESBYTERY.

MILL BRIDGE, Rowan Co., Oct. 9.

Dear Brother: While I am writing, I will give you a word or so for your News Notes.

We had our communion at Back Creek the fourth Sabbath of September. Brother Wharey, from Rocky River, was with us, and gave us some solid Gospel food, which was enjoyed very much, and by which we will be enabled to grow stronger in the faith.

My communion at Thyatira was held the first Sabbath of this month. I was alone, as Brother Wm. W. Pharr, who was to assist me, was detained by sickness. We were all sorry not to have him, and especially sorry to hear of his continued sickness. There were eight additions on profession of faith. Some others are deeply interested as to their salvation. We have had no special protracted services; these additions are but the evidences of God's blessing upon the ordinary, regular preaching of His word. To Him be all the praise.

Yours truly,
J. ALSTON RAMSAY.

Buffalo church, in Fayetteville Presbytery, is not the only one rejoicing in a new house of worship. The people of Smyrna church have just finished within the year a neat and commodious building, in which Presbytery held its fall meeting a year ago. The congregation of Union church, in Moore, are now building a more substantial and suitable house of worship; and the good people of St. Paul's, Sherwood, St. Andrew's, Lumber Bridge, Lanrinburg, and others perhaps, are renovating, inproving and completing their sanctuaries. We are glad to chronicle such tidings. It is doubtless true of other Presbyteries. Let us hear.

FARMVILLE CHURCH, VIRGINIA.

FARMVILLE, Va., Oct. 9.

Dear Brother: Rev. Dr. Pryor, of Nottoway Court House, has just finished a preaching service of eleven days for me. God blessed us greatly. Thirteen have confessed Christ openly; others will soon do so. Much interest pervades my congregation still, and the church is greatly revived. We are blessing and praising God with glad hearts.

Yours fraternally,
HERBERT H. HAWES.

Four persons have been received recently into the communion of the First Presbyterian church in Wilmington, N. C. On Sabbath, 12th inst., they publicly professed their faith in Christ, and took their seats at the Lord's Table. One adult and two children were baptized.

The first communion service held in the new church of Buffalo took place on the first Sunday in October. The congregations on Saturday, and especially on Sabbath, were very large, attentive and solemn. Ten persons were received into the communion of the church. It was a precious season and exceedingly enjoyed by all.

Rev. Dr. J. G. Hamner, of Baltimore, well known and greatly beloved in this Synod, and in the Southern Church, adds to a business note in a contemporary journal: "I have been sick for six months; I shall never be able again to preach, yet I am now in my eighty-second year. I commenced the study of theology with Dr. Moses Hoge, and at his death, in 1820, I went to Princeton. I am just ten days younger than our friend Hoge. I now tremble from head to foot. You see I do not write as I used to do."

The postoffice address of Rev. T. J. Allison is changed from Rockingham, N. C., to Mebaneville, N. C. His labors at the latter place begin on next Sabbath, 19th inst.

Rev. A. J. Witherspoon, chaplain of the Seamen's Bethel in New Orleans, writes that they recently had nine seamen, while in the port, to connect themselves with that church.

MONROE CHURCH.

MONROE, N. C., Oct. 13.

Mr. Editor: On yesterday our Monroe session received six into full communion, four of our young people by examination and two by certificate. If you desire, give this to your readers. Such does me and I reckon others good.

R. A. MILLER.

CONCORD, (IREDELL.)

STATESVILLE, Oct. 11.

Dear Brother:—We have just closed a delightful meeting at Concord (Iredell) Church. Brother Rumple came on Friday, the 3rd inst., and has preached us a series of sixteen most excellent sermons. There was serious and prayerful attention from the first; and our congregations were large both day and night. There were more than fifty anxious inquirers, and about forty are rejoicing in hope. One of the most delightful features of the meeting is the revival of God's people. Christians are greatly refreshed and encouraged. Our hearts are full of joy! To God be all the praise.

P. P. W.

THIRD CREEK, CONCORD PRESBYTERY.

The following gratifying intelligence we clip from the Carolina Watchman of Salisbury, N. C.:

"A very interesting revival of religion has been going on at Third Creek church, in this county, for eight days, under the ministration of Rev. A. L. Crawford and Rev. R. Z. Johnston. Forty-four persons, embracing all ages and sexes, have made a profession, and on examination were received into the communion of Third Creek, on Sunday last. The occasion attracted thither a very large congregation, and old members of the church were greatly refreshed and encouraged by this gracious outpouring of the Spirit among them."

In addition to those mentioned above we learn that five persons were received by certificates. Five adults and a goodly number of children were baptized.

NORTH CAROLINA S. S. CONVENTION.

In pursuance of the call of a committee appointed by the National Sunday School Convention, which assembled in Atlanta, Ga., two years ago, delegates from the Sabbath Schools of North Carolina met in Raleigh last fall to organize a Convention for the State. At this last assembly a committee was appointed to draw up a constitution to be presented at the approaching meeting in November next, due notice of which has been given in our columns. An Executive Committee was also designated to announce the time of the approaching meeting and to prepare a programme of exercises.

Appropriate topics of discussion have been settled by the Committee, and the services of persons prepared to discuss them will be secured.

The general object of the State Convention is to develope Sabbath School organizations in the various counties and townships throughout the State, and to promote their usefulness.

The outworking of the whole plan will lead to organizations successively in townships, in counties, and in each State. The National Sunday School Convention, composed of delegates from each State, meets quadrennially and devotes special attention to the matter of Uniform Lessons.

The topics brought under discussion in the State Convention will be as indicated above "How to promote Sabbath School organization in counties and townships;" "The proper basis of the Sabbath School;" and others connected with the Sabbath School system.

We presume that necessarily the discussion will be limited to those questions upon which all can agree, and will not trench upon denominational usages or privileges. How far this latter consideration may consist with uniform lessons we are not advised. Under no circumstances could we favor an abandonment of the teachings that enforce the distinctive doctrines of our Church.

Whether or not such conventions will work for good, must depend upon a judicious selection of topics for discussion, and upon the wisdom and earnest piety of those who debate them. It is of the first importance then that organizations sending forward delegates should select the best informed and readiest men as their representatives.

OFFICIAL LISTS.

To the Ministers and Sessions of Presbyterian Churches in the Synod of North Carolina:

I am required by Rule 12, of the Standing Rules of the Synod (see printed Minutes of Synod for 1878, p. 44) "to publish the names of the Ruling Elders and Deacons belonging to the churches under its care, in the Appendix to the Minutes, at least once in every five years."

This publication ordered by Synod, should have been made in connection with the minutes of 1878. But for obvious reasons it could not then have been done. It is designed to comply with this requirement, in the issue of the Minutes of the Synod for 1879.

The Stated Clerks of the different Presbyteries are required to forward to the Stated Clerk of Synod "a correct list of the names of the Elders and Deacons, and their postoffices, in the different churches."

To enable them to do so, I earnestly request you to send at once to the Stated Clerk of your Presbytery, a complete and correct list of the Elders and Deacons of your church, with their respective postoffices.

May I ask immediate and careful attention to this request?

As such a list would be unsatisfactory and in a measure useless if not full and accurate, I especially request that particular attention be paid to the initials of the names, and to the postoffice of each Elder and Deacon. Let the Clerk of the Session be indicated also.

A circular postal card has been addressed to all the ministers in the Synod having charge of churches, and to every vacant church. As some ministers may not meet their churches for some weeks, I ask that each session respond promptly to this public notice.

The Stated Clerks of the Presbyteries are of course known to each church. Their names and address may be found in the Appendix to the Synod.

Be so good as to attend to this matter at once.

WM. S. LACY,
Stated Clerk of Synod of North Carolina.

For the N. C. Presbyterian.

A SUGGESTION.

Editor N. C. Presbyterian: DEAR SIR—In your paper of 10th of September I see an article headed "On Business Principles," and soliciting suggestions from any one who may find any solution of the one great want in our Church of supplying vacant pulpits. As I have some idea of business, so far as secular matters are concerned, I would suggest the following plan: At the meeting of our Synod a committee of one or more be appointed and located at Raleigh, who will be known as keeping an "intelligence office of vacant churches and unemployed ministers." Whenever a vacancy occurs in a church, or a minister is unemployed, let them report at once to this office with all needful information. By this means our churches and ministers would know at once where to go for any information of that kind. A sufficient sum could be raised in different ways to pay what small expense might be necessary to sustain the office: one way of raising the amount to defray such expense would be, say a fee of one dollar or more from such churches or ministers who may receive the benefit of such information. In large cities such offices are kept in order that women and men may find employment when out of service. It works well there, why not supply our need in the same way?

I make these suggestions. Should the Church see fit to do anything of the kind, of course improvements could be made in many ways.

SENEX.

For the N. C. Presbyterian.

MORE PREACHERS.

From the statistics published in your last issue, showing the relative increase or decrease in the strength of our Synods during the last five years, it is seen that in 1874 the whole number of ministers in the Church was 968, and in 1879 the whole number is 1,049, a small and discouraging increase indeed. This showing is bad enough, and the future seems to promise nothing better, but only worse, as will appear from the following facts:

Last year the total number of divinity students at our two seminaries was 80; this year the total number is only 69, 21 at Columbia and 48 at Union. Last year 30 new candidates began their theological studies, 6 at Columbia and 24 at Union; this year only 9 new candidates are reported, 7 at Union and 2 at Columbia. These figures make it painfully evident that we are going backward. The table you published gave North Carolina Synod a high place as to increase in the number of ministers, the per cent. being 24.4, second only to that of Texas, and larger than that of any of the older Synods. Of course the next five years ought to show still greater progress; but, supposing that North Carolina should depend on her own churches for her ministers. She will undoubtedly fall short of that per cent. unless there is a change. Perhaps it is not generally known that from the whole Synod of North Carolina there was this year but one addition to the number of our theological students. These facts show that if Presbyterians do not awake and work, the Church must prove faithless to the charge of her Great Head in failing to furnish preachers of His Gospel. Nay, more; the condition of her own life is that she speak the Word of Life to others. And this state of things justifies an appeal to the young men of our church who are gathered at Davidson and other colleges, and also to those who are not pursuing a college course, and do not propose doing so. The great majority of them are training themselves to become teachers, physicians, editors, lawyers, farmers, engineers, merchants, and have never seriously considered this question: "Am I called to preach the Gospel?" Without considering anything but their unworthiness of the glorious privilege, they have answered, "No." But if all the Christian youth in the Presbyterian Church were to think over the question as carefully as they think when comparing the similar professions and examining their fitness for one and another with a view to choosing, and if they were to pray over it, I feel sure that "yes" would be the answer of enough of them to check this decline in the number of ministers; and not only so, but to make the per cent. of increase much larger in the future than it is for the last five years. Now, that is no doubt that some young men are deterred from entering the ministry by erroneous and possibly superstitious notions of the call to preach. "A call is an expression of the Divine will that a man should preach the Gospel." How is this expression given? "The Holy Spirit enlightens and influences the man's understanding and conscience, to interpret the Bible truths and the personal qualifications which reasonably point out preaching as his work." In his little treatise entitled, "What is a Call to the Gospel Ministry?" Dr. Dabney shows that a man may decide the point in this way: "As a redeemed sinner I owe God my best service. If I have wholly dedicated myself to Him, the question for me is: "In what profession can I best promote His glory?" This is resolved into two others: 1. What are my capacities? Study 1 Tim. iii: 1-7 and Titus i: 6-9, whence it is gathered that the main requisites of the minister are a hearty and healthy piety, a fair reputation for holiness of life, a respectable force of character, some Christian experience and aptness to teach. 2. What are the demands of God's cause now? "The harvest truly is plenteous, but the laborers are few; pray ye therefore, the Lord of the harvest that He will send forth laborers into His harvest."

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

SOUTHERN.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Five additions to the Second church, Louisville, Ky., (Dr. Robinson's) on Sabbath, October 5th.

The committee appointed by the Presbytery of Transylvania, duly installed Rev. W. Crowe, pastor of Paint Lick church, on Sabbath, the 28th ult.

Last Saturday, at a special meeting of Charleston Presbytery, the Rev. John G. Law, of Darlington, S. C. was dismissed to the Presbytery of Harmony.—Southern Presbyterian.

The church of Mt. Horeb, Augusta county, Va., Rev. T. M. Boyd pastor, has recently provided itself with a complete set of new furniture, handsome organ, &c.—Central Presbyterian.

A correspondent informs us that at the late communion at Nazareth church, near Reidville, S. C., seven persons were received upon profession of faith. At the same time the congregation contributed fifty dollars to the foreign missionary cause.—Christian Observer.

The Rev. W. W. Ratchford writes us that thirteen communicants were recently added to Bullock's Creek church, and ten to Shiloh church—all on profession of their faith. Thirteen of the twenty-three were baptized. These churches are in Bethel Presbytery, S. C.—Southern Presbyterian.

Rev. G. A. Wilson was installed pastor of the church at Appomattox Court House, Va., on the 28th of September. Rev. Drs. Dabney and Stoddert conducted the installation services. This church, planted by Rev. G. W. Leyburn, about twelve or thirteen years ago, in a village destitute of any regular church services, bids fair to become a power for good in that community.—Christian Observer.

The Rev. S. L. Morris, pastor of the church at Walhalla, S. C., writes to the Southern Presbyterian: "During the past week, the Rev. J. R. Riley and I preached four nights in succession at the Flat Rock school house, about four miles from Walhalla. The fourth and last night the session of Walhalla church accompanied us, and ten were received on profession of faith into our church. Seven others applied, but, being members of the M. E. church, they are waiting to get certificates and unite by letter. About twenty signed a petition asking Presbytery to organize them into a church. If this organization takes place others have given their names that they will unite with it. A Presbyterian church can be organized in that section with a membership of about twenty. Ten years ago Walhalla Presbyterian church was organized with thirteen members, and it now has about one hundred and thirty."

The Christian Observer says of the Portland Avenue church, Louisville, Ky., of which Rev. James H. Morrison is pastor: The members and officers of this church have shown most commendable promptness and liberality to God's house. On a recent Sunday morning the announcement was made that on the following Sunday a collection would be taken up for the purpose of putting a new roof on the church. The Monday following the shingles were in the yard; Thursday the roof was on, complete. On the return of the pastor, after two weeks' absence, the officers of the church informed him that the roof and work were paid for. "God loveth a cheerful giver." Where the pocket is converted, there is evidence that the heart is indeed converted by God's grace. With the accession of twenty-five members to the communion of the church, and an increasing Sunday School, and a new roof to cover it all, this church enjoys God's blessing, and with the spirit of zeal and prayer, has a hopeful outlook.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

The Sunday Magazine for November, with its wealth of contents and profusion of expressive pictures, is on hand. The article "Religion of Shakespeare" is worth the cost of this number, and besides there are fifty-six articles of every variety of religious, moral and historical reading. Besides these there are the departments "At Home and Abroad" and the Editor's Portfolio. The illustrations number fifty-six. $3 a year, 25 cents per number. Frank Leslie's Publishing House, 57 Park Place, New York.

The Carolina Farmer for October is at hand, with contents so numerous that we can mention only a few of the articles: Exclusive Use of Mineral Manures; Robinson on Rice; Suggestions of Planting; Budding the Peach; Petroleum; The Age of Wonders; Cotton; Practical Self-setting Dog Law; Hawks and Owls; Turnips; Early Peaches; Hard Soap; Sherbet; Shade for Sheep; Cleaning Dishes—selections here and there from a large number of valuable articles. W. H. Bernard, publisher. $1 50 per annum.

The South Atlantic for October is on the table. Contents: Grandfather Mountain and Jim Riddle; Carmelita, continued; Settlement of the Eastern Question; Dorothy—Gift of God—a Ballad of the New Orleans Plague of 1878; A Daughter, translated from the German; John Davidson's Wife, concluded; Constantinople to Athens; A Ghost Story in Dixie; Recent Literature. $3 a year. Mrs. Cicero W. Harris, editor, Wilmington, N. C.

The Ladies' Floral Cabinet for September is before us. It comes in a new dress. This journal appears to be very popular with the ladies. Henry T. Williams, New York; price 12 cents per copy.

The Preacher and Homiletic Monthly for October is before us. The departments are: Sermonic; The International S. S. Lessons; Exegetical; Brotherly Talks with Young Ministers; Prayer Meeting Service; Preachers and Reporters Studies in the Book of Revelation; Preachers Exchanging Views; Sermonic Criticism; Queries and Answers; Helpful Data in Current Literature; Themes and Texts of Leading Sermons Preached During the Month; and Suggestive Themes. Per year $2 50; single numbers 25 cents. Rev. I. K. Funk, 21 and 23 Barclay Street, New York.

The Sanitarian for October. A. N. Bell; A. M., M. D., editor. New York, $3 a year. Every month this magazine is freighted with valuable articles on preservation of health, mental and physical culture. Disinfection by Heat. The Unsanitary Condition of Savannah, and Georgia's Necessity will attract attention in this number.

The Presbyterian Monthly, Original, Eclectic, Illustrated and Devoted to Literature, Science, Art, Patriotism, and Religion, is on our table. The editor is Rev. Dr. Alfred Nevin, and twelve among the ablest ministers in the Northern Presbyterian Church are announced as contributors. This October number contains 160 pages of very choice variety of very interesting matter. Time is not permitted to do more than glance over its pages, but we lay it aside for a period of leisurely enjoyment. The magazine is published by William Syckel Moore, Philadelphia.

DRUNKEN STUFF.

How many children and women are slowly and surely dying, or rather being killed, by excessive doctoring, or the daily use of some drug or drunken stuff called medicine, that no one knows what it is made of, who can easily be cured and saved by Hop Bitters, made of Hops, Buchu, Mandrake, Dandelion, &c., which is so pure, simple and harmless that the most frail woman, weakest invalid or smallest child can trust in them. Will you be saved by them? See other column.

SECULAR MISCELLANY.

A London weekly paper, styled The Bicycling Times, is devoted entirely to events and news pertaining to the bicycle.

A memorial tablet in honor of the late Baron Lionel de Rothschild was recently unveiled in the East London synagogue.

Mrs. Grinnell, the widow of the late Henry Grinnell, of New York, will receive from the English Lords of Admiralty a handsome piece of furniture made from the timbers of the old Arctic exploring ship Resolute.

The proprietor of the Pullman car invention reports that paper wheels have run 400,000 miles under his cars without repairing, while the average running power of an ordinary wheel is from 55,000 to 60,000 miles.

The following interesting information in regard to the children of the Late General John B. Hood is furnished by the Hood fund committee of New Orleans: The surviving children of the late General John B. Hood are ten in number, viz: Annabel and Ethel Genevieve, twins, aged 9 years; John Bell, Jr, aged 8 years; Duncan Norbert, aged 7 years; Marion Maud and Lillian Marie, twins, aged 6 years; Odile Musson and Ida Richardson, twins, aged 3 years; Oswald, aged 13 months; Anna Gertrude (at date Sept. 15), aged 7 weeks. All are at present under the care of their material grandmother.

The ex-Empress Eugenie has accepted an invitation from Queen Victoria to visit the Highlands of Scotland, and will reside at Abergeldie Castle.

The St. Petersburg Golos says that 11,854 persons were imprisoned in the Central Prison at Moscow during the summer, 10,477 of whom were condemned to exile in Siberia.

There are said to be fully 200,000 beggars tramping through the German Empire, and they are estimated to get as alms not less than $18,000,000 annually in money, not counting the food and clothing given them.

There being a drouth in the Zuni country during June, the Puelos took an image and carried it in procession sixty miles to their sacred spring, hoping thereby to secure rain.

Hale's Weekly has entered the journalistic field, as previously announced. It presents a bright and attractive appearance, and bears promise of working itself into general favor. Its editor wields the pen of a ready and forcible writer, is well known throughout the State, and carries with him into his new enterprise the best wishes of a host of friends. The terms of the paper are $2 per year, cash in advance.

Mr. Editor:—It is with feelings of profound regret that I announce the death of Mr. Erasmus H. Evans, which occurred at his residence, in Cumberland county, on Thursday, October 2nd, in the fiftieth year of his age.

Mr. Evans in early life chose farming as his profession, and paid strict attention to its duties the remainder of his life, and by close application to business, became one of the largest and most successful farmers in the county.

He leaves a large family and many friends to mourn his loss. Rockfish.

MARRIED.

☞No notice of a marriage or death will be inserted unless accompanied by a responsible name, which is wanted not for publication but as a guaranty of good faith.

At Thyatira church, October 9th, 1879, by Rev. J. Alston Ramsay, Mr. JOHN M. RICE and Miss SARAH J. GRAHAM.

On Wednesday, the 8th instant, at the residence of Mr. George McN. Rose, by the Rev. H. G. Hill, assisted by Rev. John M. Rose, Mr. WM. B. PHILLIPS, of Chapel Hill, son of Rev. Charles Phillips, D. D., to Miss MINNIE R. McNEILL, of Fayetteville, N. C., daughter of Rev. George McNeill, deceased.

At the residence of Mr. H. W. Williams, in Limestone county, Texas, on the 1st inst., by Rev. H. Moseley, Col. W. P. MOSELEY, of Mexia, to Miss MARY, third daughter of David Murphy, Esq., of Cumberland county, N. C.

North Carolina Gazette requested to copy.

DIED.

☞Obituary notices must be paid for in advance. The first ten lines are inserted free. The excess over ten lines is charged for at the rate of ten cents per line. Correspondents can ascertain what an obituary will cost by counting eight words to a line, and multiplying each line by ten cents.

At his residence in Goldsboro, October 1st, 1879, Mr. JOHN EVERETT, in the 77th year of his age. A long life of usefulness, and ten years of great affliction, prepared him for the change as few men are prepared. For five years he has been as dependent as a child on the constant care of his devoted wife, and children. During all these weary months, he has never been free from physical pain, yet in all this he "maintained his integrity," and "sinned not with his lips." He died as he had lived, with his faith in the Redeemer unshaken.

Mr. Everett was the senior elder of his church. This office he filled worthily, being always ready to meet its obligations, and perform its duties. The beauty of his Christian life was simple faith—its strength was consistency. He served God in "word and in deed." He was among the earliest friends of the Presbyterian Church in this place, and for a number of years, almost the only efficient male member. Through his activity, aided by a few others, a most comfortable house of worship was erected, and will remain for many years as a reminder of the largeness of his liberality.

When the church was organized it was with eleven members, and almost as many discouragements. It now has a young, vigorous and independent congregation. This result is due to the Christian life, of this venerable elder, more than to the efforts of any other man. If his successors shall foster the vine in the same spirit with which he watched its tender years of infancy, they may hope for a large reward—a rich vintage.

His race is run, his work is done; and when we stood around his grave, the hearts of all the people said: "Well done thou good and faithful servant; enter thou into the joys of thy Lord." B. F. M.

At the residence of her son, Mr. Augustus Monroe, in Putnam county, Florida, Mrs. EFFIE MONROE, in the 80th year of her age.

She was born in the Isle of Skye, Scotland, in March 1800. Her parents, Daniel and Nancy Shaw, moved to this country when she was three years old, and settled in Montgomery county, N. C. There she was married, January 6, 1825, to John Monroe, of Scotch descent, and in her 26th year entered the communion of Mt. Carmel Presbyterian church. In 1855 she removed with three sons to Putnam county Florida, her husband and two daughters having died before her removal. On Saturday morning, August 30, 1879, she gently sank into rest—her life wearing away, like the sun's setting at the close of day.

Hers was a life of eminent, practical piety, kindness and sympathy, which greatly endeared her to her family and many friends. Her last words, in keeping with a life of continued trust in Jesus alone, were the prayer, "Lord save me!" E. H. Briggs.

Charlotte Institute.

THE next session begins September 10th, 1879, and ends June 8th, 1880.

No Institute ever made more rapid progress in securing the confidence and esteem of its patrons than this one during the past session. Before the end of the scholastic year the number of its pupils, attracted by the well-earned reputation of the school, increased to 117, exclusive of the adult ladies who availed themselves of the superior advantages here given in the departments of Music, Art, and Modern Languages. In no respect is this Institute inferior to any other first-class boarding-school in the Southern or Middle States. Such testimonials as will satisfy an one as to the high standard and thoroughness of the instruction here are published in the catalogue. These testimonials are peculiarly trustworthy, inasmuch as they are given by gentlemen engaged in teaching in well known schools and colleges of the highest grade, and who are therefore qualified to express an opinion in regard to educational institutions.

The total expense for the half session or term will be $125. This amount includes board, with washing, fuel, lights, furnished room and servants' attendance, tuition in all the English branches, Latin, with either French or German, Calisthenics, text books and stationery for school purposes. Pupils are not permitted to incur additional expense without permission of their parents. Parents are thus assured that their bills will not be greater than they expected.

Special arrangements and special terms for young ladies who wish to take only Music, Painting and Drawing, and Modern Languages, severally or collectively.

TALBOTT'S PATENT SPARK ARRESTER.
The Invention of the Age.

It does not destroy the draft.
It does not interfere with cleaning the tubes.
It will not choke up, and requires no cleaning.
It requires no direct dampers to be opened when raising steam (dampers being objectionable, as they may be left open and allow sparks to escape)
It requires no water to extinguish sparks, which, by condensation, destroys the draft. Besides, when water is used, if neglected, the efficiency is destroyed by evaporation of the water, and the boiler is kept in a filthy condition.
It is simple and durable and can be relied upon.
It can be attached to any boiler.
No planter should be without one of them. Insurance companies will insure gins and barns where the Talbott Engines and Spark-Arresters are used at same rate as charged for water or horse-power.

THE BUFFALO LITHIA WATERS,
For Affections of the Kidneys and Bladder.

—o—

RELIEF OF INFLAMMATION AND ULCERATION OF THE BLADDER.

After the Life of the Patient had been despaired of by his Medical Attendant.

[Extract from Letter of Dr. T. B. Greer, of Rocky Mount, Franklin county, Va., of June 3, 1876.]

"I have recently had occasion to try the 'Lithia Water' in a case of Inflamation and Ulceration of the Bladder, caused by the retention of urine, the result of stricture of twenty years standing. I had exhausted all of the resources, both of experience and authority, and when my patient commenced the use of it, had no hope of his recovery. He has been using the water five weeks, with results so favorable that he now has every prospect of complete recovery, and without some unexpected change in his condition, will be on his feet in a short time. The effects of the water in this case have been marvelous. For the sake of humanity I shall keep a record of the case, and report to you as it advances."

In a subsequent communication Dr. Greer, referring to the above case, says:

"In the case of 'Inflammation and Ulceration of the Bladder,' heretofore reported, the patient recovered and I attribute the recovery entirely to the Lithia Water."

STONE.

Case of Mr. C. Wolffe, of Point Coupee Parish, La.

Point Coupee Parish, La., April 2, 1878.

Mr. Thomas F. Goode, Proprietor Buffalo Lithia Springs, Va.:

Two years ago I began to suffer with a severe and constant pain in my kidneys, which was soon followed by violent attacks, averaging about two a week, causing excruciating agony, from which I was frequently relieved by the discharge of stone of from four to six grains in weight: at other times by the passage of smaller stones, and sometimes by sand in considerable quanties.

I sought, but in vain, the best medical assistance, and as the result of this state of things, I was reduced to such a condition that my medical advisers told me frankly that I had nothing to hope from remedies; that my condition was a hopeless one, and I looked to death alone for a termination of a miserable existence. Mr. J. L. Lyons, a druggist of New Orleans, about six months ago, advised me to try the Buffalo Lithia Water, Spring No. 2, which I did. About a week after I commenced the use of it I had an attack of less than usual severity, in which I passed two small stones, one of which I placed in a tumbler of the water, and in about three hours found it dissolved to fine powder. That gave me confidence, and I determined to persevere in its use. I have had no attack whatever since, nor has there been any discharge of stone or sand.

The pain in my kidneys has entirely disappeared; my weight, which had been greatly reduced, I have fully regained, and my general health has been entirely restored. I very cheerfully acknowledge my indebtedness to the Buffalo Lithia Water for my life, and the comfort which I now enjoy.

Respectfully, C. WOLFFE.

FOR THE FAMILY.

The Butterfly.

BY F. M. S.

She has such lovely velvet wings!
Soft plumes of richest brown,
With dainty golden pencilings
That glitter in her flutterings
Like flame a gust hath blown.

She poises on a clover bloom,
The upright wings are seen;
Pure silver stars the shades illume;
This perfect beauty is,—for whom?
What can it mean?

Do flowers, and winds and streams have eyes,
That this fair thing should be?
These tender lines, these sumptuous dyes?
Of Beauty's conquering witcheries
What need hath she?

Could I but grasp the haunting hints
That come, and quickly go,
Like the gleaming of her argent tints,
Life's secrets, with its deep intents,
I should surely know.

But, is it strange a thing that is
A winged thought of God,
Should come in beauty like to this?
Or from a treasury like His,
Perfection be bestowed?

Little Gretchen's Narrow Escape.

Many years have passed since the perilous escape from death we have to tell of happened. It occurred abroad. In some districts of Alps the Protestant churches are far apart. Far, that is, if you calculate the climbings and descendings of the winding roads. But the simple-hearted, pious people will face, not only the toil but also the great risks which are added at some seasons. Gretchen Heilberg, a little stout hearted maiden of about twelve, the only daughter of a well-to-do Tyrolese gentleman, was one of this sort. The church nearest her parent's chalet was somewhat more than two miles distant. But bad, indeed, must the weather be to prevent her, when Sunday came, from setting out. The church itself was not in sight, being built on the other side of a great projecting spur of one of the mountains; but the road, after vanishing from sight for a little way, again became visible for a moment, more than a mile off, just where it rounded the side of the mountain. It was at this point that the members of the household used to look out for little Gretchen in going and returning, whenever she made the journey alone.

Nearly every part of the year had its special peril for this road. In the winter the winds were frightful. At the most exposed spots walls for shelter had been built, but in spite of these there was at times positive danger of the wayfarer being caught by the fierce gusts and hurled over the steep precipice. The dangers in the early spring were of another kind. It was the avalanche—the snow thunderbolt which then had to be feared. As soon as the sun's beams attained strength enough to melt the snow which lay on the lowest slopes of the mountain, slips of many tons weight might take place. In some seasons the first of these falls might come on very suddenly; once they had begun it was possible for them to follow one another nearly as quickly as salvos of artillery.

On one Sunday morning in the year we tell of little Gretchen, Bible in hand, had set out alone. Her father and her brother were making a business journey in Bavaria. Besides the domestics a grown-up male cousin, then on a visit to them, was the only one left at home with Frau Heilberg, who was something of an invalid. For some time before the weather had been fine, and a treacherously soft breeze had been wandering about the upper valleys. It promised soon to make the snow-drops and violets spring again in the more sheltered nooks; but, alas, it had another task—to set the avalanches sliding.

This had been mentioned before Gretchen started, but nobody thought the danger was near. It was believed that everything was safe for yet a couple of days to come. All the household knew how great a privation it would be to Gretchen not to be present at church. She was permitted to go.

The little black spot which they so well knew marked her arrival at the far off bend of the road we have spoken of duly appeared. It moved on—it vanished round the bulging side of the mountain. So far they know all was safe. But hardly a quarter of an hour had passed before a slight rumble was heard. Frau Heilberg, looking up, saw through the window a sight, the fatal significance of which she knew almost before she saw it. Where for months before the low southern slope of the mountain, that fronting towards the chalet, had shown a steady, unfailing covering of white, there was now visible an irregular darkish path, while from below it was rising up a mist, a vapor.

The snow had slipped. That dark patch, she knew, was the mountain side; the vaporous curling beneath was the spray of the snow sent back upwards by the sharp concussion. A scream which instinctively escaped from her mother's heart quickly brought to her side Jean Marcel, the cousin, who had been sitting in another room. The house was all astir in a moment. The domestics had heard the dull, far-off rumble, and though it had meant nothing to Jean Marcel's French ears, they knew at once what it signified. Great was the ringing of hands at poor Gretchen's danger.

Clearly, if faintly, as the noise of the avalanche had reached the chalet, they knew, both mistress and servants, that not a murmur of it would reach the valley on the other side. Owing to the peculiar formation of the mountain it never did so. Everything depended upon whether Gretchen should reach the bend of the road, and perceive that the fall of snow had begun, and then be able to retrace her steps round the angle before another down rush came. Nay, there was one other chance hanging on a hair finer yet. If the avalanche did fall she might be saved if it fell just at the moment when she stood at the curving point of the road. The rocks immediately overhead formed a kind of pent house, shouldering the snow off on either side. She would indeed be made a prisoner, but the villagers of the other valley would be nearly sure to rescue her.

What a time of suspense for the invalid mother! The window was thrown open, and there she sat at the aperture, supported by her nephew Jean, never taking her gaze from where that bit of road was discernible. The sun shone steadily on, seeming to her cruelly pitiless in its splendor. Was not every atom of its brilliancy, every instant of its unceasing glory, melting the snow, and thawing the fragile ice-chains which supported the avalanche underneath which Gretchen might at any moment appear? The bell of a neighboring convent had in the meantime began to ring; the kind Roman Catholic inmates had also perceived what had happened. It was all but hopeless that the signal would be of any use. For it to be so it would have to be heard by some one on the higher road across the main valley, who could communicate with the other village.

Slowly the moments crept on; fiercely the sun flamed on the snow. Then the time, instead of lagging, made for itself wings and flew; for it was the hour for the black spot which meant dear little Gretchen to reappear at the bend of the road.

"It is not her!" gasped the mother. "I will not believe it; my eyes are strained with watching." It was the mother's heart trying to persuade herself against the evidence of her eyes. There was a spot; it moved along. It is undoubtedly Gretchen. Now the mother lost faith as well as hope. "She will come on past the penthouse of the rocks; she will be killed for going religiously to church."

Jean Marcel could say nothing. He was a brave young man, but there was nothing he could do. Gretchen was a mile and a half away, with the near part of the road between them blocked with the fallen snow. Eagerly he divided himself between attending to his aunt and leaning toward the window.

"Yes," repeated Gretchen's mother, as the far off dark spot kept moving, seeming to be just leaving the place of shelter, "yes, she will be cruelly killed for going to worship God."

"She is gone!" cried Jean Marcel.

Slowly the mist cleared. It went off on either side; the rocks had split the falling snow into two parts. Fainter grew the rising vapor of snow spray; slowly it cleared, and with a shriek of joy the mother announced that her instinct-sharpened eyes had been the first to see again the dark ball which signified Gretchen. The girl was safe.

At the convent, it was afterward told, that they had seen her through a telescope. They, when she came visible, saw that she was on her knees praying; the uplifted hands appearing to be raised to the white mountain overhead. But this was an illusion. Little Gretchen was supplicating the Maker of the mountain—He who causeth snow and hail to praise Him. And He heard her.—Presbyterian Journal.

A Curious Clock.

The Scientific American describes and illustrates a remarkable clock which, it is claimed, surpasses all other horological achievements, not excepting the great clock of Strasburg. The new timepiece is the invention of Mr. Felix Meier, of Detroit, Mich. The clock is 18 feet high, 8 feet wide, and 5 feet deep, and weighs 4,000 pounds. The framework is entirely of black walnut, elegantly carved. Above the main body of the clock is a marble dome, upon which Washington sits in his chair of state, protected by a canopy, which is surmounted by a gilded statue of Columbia; on either side of Washington is a colored servant in livery guarding the doors, which open between the pillars that support the canopy; on the four corners of the main body of the clock are black walnut niches containing human figures, emblematical of the march of life; the two lower ones are supported by two flaming torches; one of them contains the figure of an infant, the second the figure of a youth, the third of a man in middle life, the fourth of an aged graybeard, and still another, directly over the centre, containing a grinning skeleton representing Father Time. All of these figures have bells and hammers in their hands. The infant's bell is small and sweet-toned; the youth's bell larger and harsher; the bell of manhood strong and resonant; that of old age diminishing in strength, and the bell of the skeleton deep and mournful. At the end of every quarter hour the infant in his carved niche strikes with a tiny hammer upon his bell. At the end of each half hour the youth strikes, at the end of three-quarters the man, and at the end of each hour the graybeard. Death then follows with a measured stroke to toll the hour, and carved cupid projects from either side, with wings to indicate that time flies. At the same time a large music box, manufactured at Geneva expressly for this clock, begins to play, and a surprising scene is enacted upon the platform beneath the canopy: Washington slowly rises from his chair to his feet, extending his right hand, presenting the Declaration of Independence. The door on the left is opened by the servant, admitting all the Presidents from Washington's time, including President Hayes. Each President is dressed in the costume of his time. The likenesses are good. Passing in file before Washington, they face, and raise their hands as they approach him, and walking naturally across the platform, disappear through the opposite door, which is promptly closed behind them by the second servant, Washington retires into his chair, and all is quiet save the measured tick of the hugh pendulum and the ringing of the quarter hours, until another hour has passed. Mr. Meier has spent ten years of patient labor and $7,000 in cash in perfecting his clock.

Caesar, His Men, and His Arms.

He was the ablest Roman then living, and he had the power of attracting and attaching the ablest men to his service. He had five years in which to look about him, and to act at his leisure—as much time as had been given to Pompey of the East. Like Pompey, too, he had been left perfectly free. No senatorial officers could encumber him with orders from home. The people had given him his command, and to the people alone he was responsible. Lastly, and beyond everything, he could rely with certainty on the material with which he had to work. The Roman legionaries were no longer yeomen taken from the plough, or shopkeepers from the street. They were men more completely trained in every variety of accomplishment than perhaps ever before followed a General into the field, or even since. It was not enough that they should use sword and lance. The campaign on which Cæsar was about to enter was fought with spade, and pick, and axe and hatchet. Corps of engineers he may have had; but if the engineers designed the work, the execution lay with the army. No limited department would have been equal to the tasks which every day demanded. On each evening after a march a fortified camp was to be formed, with mound and trench, capable of resisting surprises, and demanding the labor of every single hand. Bridges had to be thrown over rivers. Skips and barges had to be made and repaired, capable of service against an enemy, on a scale equal to the requirements of an army, and in a haste which permitted no delay. A transport service there must have been, organized to perfection. But there were no stores sent from Italy to supply the daily waste of material. The men had to mend, and perhaps make, their own clothes and shoes, and repair their own arms. Skill in the use of tools was not enough without the tools themselves. Had the spades and mattocks been supplied by contract, had the axes been of soft iron, fair to the eye and failing to the stroke, not a man in Cæsar's army would have returned to Rome to tell the tale of its destruction. How the legionaries acquired these arts, whether the Italian peasantry were generally educated in such occupations, or whether on this occasion there was a special selection of the best, of this we have no information. Certain, only it was that men and instruments were as excellent in their kind as honesty and skill could make them; and however degenerate the patricians, and corrupt the Legislature, there was sound stuff somewhere in the Roman constitution. No exertion or no forethought on the part of any commander could have extemporized such a variety of qualities. Universal practical accomplishments must have formed part of the training of the free Roman citizen. Admirable workmanship was still to be had in each department of manufacture; every article with which Cæsar was provided must have been the best of its kind.—Froude.

The Dead-Point in Mind Tension.

It is a common subject of marvel that criminals in the presence of immediate execution are usually self-possessed, and often exhibit singular composure. The doomed creature sleeps through the night before his violent death, and rises composed to pass through the ordeal. The exceptions to this rule are few, and there is no reason to suppose that the individuals who display greater emotion, or who are prostrated by the agonizing prospect of death, feel their position more acurately than those who preserve control of their demeanor. It is a prevalent but groundless error to suppose that the state of mind in which most capital offenders meet their doom is one of scare or paralyzing amazement. They retain every faculty, taste, consideration and even fancy. They frequently give tokens of especial thoughtfulness, and are punctilious in the observance of rules and the adoption of measures to minimize their own pain, and the trouble and sympathetic suffering of those by whom they are surrounded, or who will be left burdened with their memories. Mentally and physically the criminal, during the last few hours of his life, in the immediate presence of a cruel death, is self-possessed and tranquil. His pulse is even less disturbed than those of the officials who are compelled to take part in his execution. Why is this? The answer will be obvious on reflection. The mind has reached what may be designated a "dead-point" in its tension. The excitement is over, the agony of anticipation, the trembling doubt between hope and fear of escape, has exhausted the irritability of the mind, and there is, as it were, a pause, an interval of passive endurance between the end of the struggle for life, and the bitterness of remorse and agony of disappointment which may begin at death. In this interval the mind is released from the tension of its effort for self-preservation, and almost rebounds with the sense of relief that comes with certainty, even though the assurance be that of impending death. In the pause there are time and opportunity for the recognition of surrounding circumstances which have been, as it were, overlooked in the yearning for life. The clearness of mental vision the cognizance of details displayed at such a moment, are remarkable, not only on account of the strange circumstances under which they occur, but in degree. Men and women who have for some time previously exhibited no trace of delicacy or refinement exhibit characteristic traits of thought always. They are, so to say, lifted out of themselves and placed in new conditions calculated to awaken feelings of courtesy, which seldom fail to respond. The mental state of a criminal during the hours preceding execution presents features of intense interest to the psychologist, and, rightly comprehended, it is to be feared they would throw new light on the supposed preparation these unfortunate persons evince for a fate which, being inevitable, they at the final moment are able to meet with a composure in which hypocrisy or self-deception find the amplest scope.—The Lancet.

Proposed New Polar Expedition.

Our readers are probably aware, says the London Graphic, that an influential Central Committee has been formed, to which forty-nine provincial committees are affiliated, for the purpose of organizing an expedition to the North Pole on the plan recommended by Commander Cheyne, R. N., who is strongly of opinion that balloons will form an important element in all future Arctic explorations.

An illustration (in the Graphic) depicts three balloons as ready to start from the winter quarters of the ship during the first week in June, their destination being the North Pole. The average temperature in the early part of June is about 25 deg. Fah. The balloons are named Enterprise, Resolute, and Discovery; each will be capable of lifting a ton in weight, the three carrying a sledge party intact, with stores and provisions for fifty-one days. The ascent will be made on the curve of a roughly ascertained wind circle, a continuation of which curve will carry them to the Pole, but should the said curve defect, then the required current of air can again be struck by rising to the requisite altitude, as proved by experiments that different currents of air exist according to altitude; this fact Commander Cheyne himself observed when, in charge of the government balloons in his last expedition, he sent up four at the same moment to different altitudes, being differently weighted, they took four different directions to the four quarters of the compass, giving him his first practical idea of ballooning in the Arctic regions. Captain Temple's experiments with the war balloons from Woolwich Arsenal have fully confirmed this important desideratum in aerostation.

About thirty hours would suffice to host our aeronauts from the ship to the Pole, should all go well. We asked Commander Cheyne how he was going to get back; his answer was cautious: "According to circumstances," he said, "My first duty is to get there. When there leave it to us to get back. We have many uncertainties to deal with, and a definite programme made now might be entirely changed when the time came to carry out the journey south. Condensed gas would be taken in steel cylinders, hills would be floated over by expansion and contraction of the balloons, and in the event of any accident occurring we always have our sledge party with sledge, boat, stores and provisions for fifty days intact and ready for service." Scotland has taken up this novelty in Arctic exploration with avidity, and England, though more cautious in the matter, has at last given her adhesion to the project being carried out. Canada is likely to join, and Commander Cheyne has received an invitation from the Canadian Minister of Finance, Sir Samuel Tilley, K. C. B., to deliver his lectures in Canada, with the promise of a warm reception.—Scientific American.

THE GENUINE

DR. C. McLANE'S

CELEBRATED

FOR THE CURE OF

Hepatitis, or Liver Complaint,

DYSPEPSIA AND SICK HEADACHE.

Symptoms of a Diseased Liver.

PAIN in the right side, under the edge of the ribs, increases on pressure; sometimes the pain is in the left side; the patient is rarely able to lie on the left side; sometimes the pain is felt under the shoulder blade, and it frequently extends to the top of the shoulder, and is sometimes mistaken for rheumatism in the arm. The stomach is affected with loss of appetite and sickness; the bowels in general are costive, sometimes alternative with lax; the head is troubled with pain, accompanied with a dull, heavy sensation in the back part. There is generally a considerable loss of memory, accompanied with a painful sensation of having left undone something which ought to have been done. A slight, dry cough is sometimes an attendant. The patient complains of weariness and debility; he is easily startled, his feet are cold or burning, and he complains of a prickly sensation of the skin; his spirits are low; and although he is satisfied that exercise would be beneficial to him, yet he can scarcely summon up fortitude enough to try it. In fact, he distrusts every remedy. Several of the above symptoms attend the disease, but cases have occurred where few of them existed, yet examination of the body, after death, has shown the LIVER to have been extensively deranged.

AGUE AND FEVER.

DR. C. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS, IN CASES OF AGUE AND FEVER, when taken with Quinine, are productive of the most happy results. No better cathartic can be used, preparatory to, or after taking Quinine. We would advise all who are afflicted with this disease to give them A FAIR TRIAL.

For all bilious derangements, and as a simple purgative, they are unequaled.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

The genuine are never sugar coated.

Every box has a red wax seal on the lid, with the impression Dr. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS.

The genuine McLANE'S LIVER PILLS bear the signatures of C. McLANE and FLEMING BROS. on the wrappers.

Insist upon having the genuine DR. C. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS, prepared by Fleming Bros., of Pittsburgh, Pa., the market being full of imitations of the name McLane, spelled differently but same pronunciation.

PREVENT YELLOW FEVER!

It has been well proved that prevention is better than cure. A very simple and effective preventative for Yellow Fever and other fevers has been found in BENSON'S CAPSINE POROUS PLASTERS. They were used during last season in New Orleans very successfully. The common method of using them was to apply them over the stomach, changing them every week. They are one OF THE MOST ACTIVE ANTISEPTICS and seem to destroy the poison. One reason why they are of special value is that they stimulate the digestion, and thus enable the system to overcome the influence of the malarial poison. They are a cheap and almost certain preventative. Ask your physician about them. Benson's Capsine Plasters are a sure preventative and cure for chills and fever if worn as above. Price 25 cents.

COMMENTARIES.

NO. XI.

Dr. L. C. Vass, Newbern, N. C.:

Continuing a notice of works on the "Historical Works of the New Testament," there ...a considerable number which are monographs. Sometimes, however, one author has written several on different parts of the Gospel and Acts. The notices may therefore be still arranged by authors.

1. Godet on Luke in two, and on John in three, volumes, are the works of a French writer of very decided evangelical sentiments. In both works we are guided to a full apprehension of the meaning of S. S. by summaries of the teachings, both historical and didactic, and their clear, verbal explanations and an analysis, both of grammatical structure and the logical purport of the passages. Occasionally the writer enters into discriminating discussions of the views of others, both predecessors and contemporaries. It is refreshing to know that French Protestants have other sources of understanding the Scriptures than the writings of Renan and his school. The work on Luke has been translated.

2. Jacobus on the Gospels and on the Acts. The distrust of Dr. Barnes' works of Biblical exposition, which grew up in the Presbyterian Church over thirty years ago, opened a demand and a field for other expositors. Into this field, and to meet a demand Dr. Jacobus entered, with zeal and the ability derived from long critical study of the Scriptures. Of the dogmatic character of these expositions there need be no suspicion. While not putting forward criticisms on the original Greek the author has clearly availed himself of the knowledge he had thus derived, and set before us results tending greatly to encourage the study of the Word of God, and aid in acquiring familiarity with its contents. Perhaps he has extended too far illustrations derived from his personal observations while a traveler in the East. And it is at least doubtful whether a success attended his effort to carry out a harmony of the Gospels, according to the method of textual references at the heading of the sections. A harmony, to be of practical value, ought to present the text of the several Gospels in one view, and that better in parallel columns. Few will take the trouble to look up the references, and still fewer derive advantage from reading them separately, or, if together, apart from the "Notes." The work, mainly designed for the young and for families, has yet strong claims on students of divinity and ministers.

3. Van Doren's suggestive commentary on Luke, in two volumes, is certainly suggestive of impracticability in deriving much benefit from the execution of his plan. His "suggestions" are all good, but have no thread of continuous connection with each other, and often the relation of many of them to the text is of that sort that they might as well be placed with other passages. The vast number of suggestions is correspondent to the nearly one hundred authors consulted.

11. Owen on the Gospels is professedly a compilation, yet a critical study of the New Testament in Greek for a quarter of a century gave the author a familiarity with the work, by which he was well prepared to write a critical, expository and practical commentary for ministers, students, private Christian Bible classes and Sunday schools." There is an absence of all pedantry or "parade of learning" and the matter of the work seems well chosen. Dr. Owen was, perhaps, hasty in adopting the recent (1866) "emendation" of the text of the Bible.

12. Kyle's Expository Thoughts is full of eminently pious and edifying "thoughts." There is little effort to explain the text and the author's efforts do not appear to have in view any special critical examination of the original language.

13. Lampe on John, in three thick folio volumes in the Latin language, and printed one hundred and fifty years ago, still retains its reputation of being "the most valuable work on John's Gospel." With extensive learning, both in classical and Biblical literature, and the judgment to bring his vast resources to bear on the work of explaining the Word of God, he has left little to be desired in unfolding the profound and affecting truths revealed by the "beloved disciple" respecting the Divine Master's life and teachings. It would be a valuable contribution to the apparatus of the student should some competent hand give us, in a translation, a somewhat abridged edition of this work, in which any important elements of interpretation derived from modern investigations might be incorporated. The work is specially adapted to the mature student.

14. Morison on Mark's Gospel is a work of profound scholarship. One knows not which most to admire, the extensive erudition of the author or his protracted and tedious labor in the collection and judicious use of the material which is incorporated in this volume. It is a well printed volume of 500 pages 8 vo., of rather finer than medium print. Besides the usual amount of excellent critical exposition, both of words and topics, the author has given thorough and satisfactory investigations of some of the most minute topics connected with the accurate translation. He appears entirely at home in respect of all the literature of the Gospel of Mark, and no question belonging to "Introduction" has escaped his diligent study. His exposition is arranged according to the chapters of our version, and the text printed at the top of the page. Then, in his verbal criticism, we have before us the English words; not only each under clause is introduced for examination, but the whole context in which it stands. The opinions conflicting with his own interpretation are concisely and candidly stated, examined in a scholarly manner, and adopted, modified or rejected, according to the methods he approves and results he obtains.

15. Whedon's Commentary on the New Testament was prepared on "Suggestions in behalf of the tract department of the Methodist Episcopal Church." Of course, notwithstanding the long list of authors consulted by the writer, the doctrinal character of the commentary was settled when the writer undertook the composition of the book. The work being designed to meet the wants of the Tract Department, is prepared for popular use. Without pretending to present a critical exposition, or the results of careful critical study of the Gospel in the original language, Dr. W. has made a judicious use of the volumes mostly used in preparing this work. It is liable to the criticism already suggested in respect of the work of Dr. Jacobus touching the plan adopted to combine, with the Exposition, a Harmony.

17. Gloag's "Critical and Exegetical Commentary on the Acts of the Apostles" is, according to this title, rather an explanation of the Greek text than an exposition, and the text used is that of Tischendorf's (seventh) edition of the New Testament. He by no means, however, slavishly follows the distinguished critic, whose work he has adopted as preferable to the Textus Receptus. The author does not profess to contribute to doctrinal theology nor practical religion. But in his critical work he is fully on guard against the spirit or principles of the Terbingen school as well as the rationalism of the elder German critics. It must not be understood, however, that Dr. G. restricts his work to mere skeletons of criticism. On the contrary he makes a proper use of this part of the apparatus of a biblical scholar, for explaining difficult passages and refuting the theories and schemes of those whom he regards as incompetent or erroneous teachers. Though prosecuting his labors according to the usual division of chapters, he has failed to present the text along with the notes, but arranged the whole preceding them. He has also nicely divided the book into sections, according to the several subjects of the history, in order.

18. Hatchett on the Acts has been long before the public and obtained justly a high reputation for critical ability and a judicious use of his knowledge of German interpreters, and the materials of criticism of which they have been always recognized the most successful as well as laborious collectors. Apart from the writer's peculiar partialities, due to his denominational (Baptist) relations, the work may be ranked with the preceding, as worthy of the student's careful study.

19. Humphrey's Commentary on the Acts of the Apostles is also exegetical as distinguished from expository, and in a small 12 mo. volume of about 200 pages he has succeeded in presenting to the reader a valuable amount of judicious explanations of the original Greek. This brief work, and especially Dr. Gloag's are eminently useful by presenting to the student the Greek words, which are explained, along with the explanation, and, when necessary, the entire clause containing such words. Dr. Alexander gives explanations of the same sort which, as observed, he does most successfully for the English reader. To the Greek scholar, however, the method of these critics is more satisfactory.

There are two kinds of works on the New Testament which, though not commentaries, are of inestimable value in the study of the Gospels. These are "Harmonies" and "Lives of Christ." Of "Harmonies," not to mention scores inaccessible to readers generally, or superseded, or with notes and explanations of German compilers, in the German language, there are three—McKnight's, Newcome's and Dr. Robinson's (on the basis of Newcome)—worthy of notice. No criticism on the execution of these works is here attempted, since, to be at all useful, much more space would be required than is available. All alike present in parallel columns the passages of the several evangelists who narrate the same event of the history.

Of "Lives of Christ" the last quarter of a century has been prolific. There are three which deserve special notice.

1. Hanna. This work can be commended with almost entire approbation. Its style is easy and pleasing, and reverence for the authority of Scripture predominates over every other sentiment connected with the work of preparation.

2. Lange. Fuller, and exhibiting too much tendency to draw on the fancy, and suggests fillings in supposed gaps. Speculation is not intrinsically wrong on such a topic, provided it is presented as speculation and not so insinuated (it may be inadvertently) as to mislead.

3. Farrar, with a charming style, invests some of the most well known passages of our Lord's life with fresh interest. But the compiler has forgotten his legitimate office in many cases and becomes a misleading commentator and expositor instead of historian. On the facts recorded by the evangelists respecting demoniacal possessions, Dr. F. is specially to be criticised, but more specially when he informs us that the sacred historian has stated the possession of the swine by demons, merely in accordance with the popular opinion. This is virtually a denial of the historian's inspiration, even in the lowest form. Either the historian was inspired to record as fact what was a mere popular opinion or was uninspired in writing what he did write!

In closing, notice may be taken of a "Life of Paul," the great apostle, by Conybeare and Howson. The work has become a sacred classic. It has now been published in a cheap abridged form. Yours, &c., B. M. SMITH.

For the N. C. Presbyterian.

THAT "COMET."

II.

WAS THE FLOOD UNIVERSAL?

It is suggested as matter for thought, that Eden with its Garden of Delights was probably obliterated by the Flood. Few subjects have been such trouble to the antiquary as the search for Paradise. The traveler who grows sentimental over some traditional or supposed site of the Garden, looks about as ridiculous as Mark Twain weeping at the grave of Adam! The conjecture of Mr. Guiou, that Eden slumbers beneath the waves of the Pacific ocean is hardly more unreasonable than several other conjectures concerning its whereabouts.

The river that went out of Eden to water the garden and from thence was parted and became into four heads, is an enigma, the solution of which might identify the site; but nobody has been able to solve it, and, I presume never will be.

Noah and his family of course talked in the same language after as before the Flood. After landing from the ark and beholding the new and strange phase of creation, it was natural that they should bestow old names upon objects bearing real or fancied resemblance to those familiar to them before. Thus, the names of some of these ante-diluvian river heads may have obtained their counterparts, as the Euphrates, for instance; while other names, as Pison, Gihon, &c., may not have been applied to any of their new streams. At all events, there is no river system now which answers to the description in Genesis.

The theory of a partial flood confines it to a comparatively small spot of earth, east of the Mediterranean sea, as sufficient for the destruction of the then world of mankind.

This is very unsatisfactory. The increase of population in the ante-diluvian epoch must have been in far greater ratio as to time than at present; for the average life of man was then over five hundred years, instead of less than one hundred years, as it has been since. It was two thousand years from Adam to the deluge. It was about the same length of time from the deluge to the establishment of the Roman Empire or the birth of Christ. Thus the race from Noah having so nearly an equal start, it is reasonble to presume that the increase from Adam, in that undoubtedly prolific period, was at least as rapid as the increase from Noah.

The population of the Roman Empire, about the time of Christ, was one hundred and twenty millions. The Empire then occupied the territory on all sides of the Mediterranean sea, extending from the Atlantic to the Euphrates, three thousand miles in length, and from Dacia on the north, to the Atlas mountains, on the south, two thousand miles in breadth. Though so important in the written history of the world, it was but a small portion of the globe of the earth; and we know not what multitudes of Barbarians lived outside the limits of the Empire—in the farther East, in Africa, perhaps also in America. So far from being an extravagant supposition, that the numbers outside approximated the numbers inside the Empire, the probability is they were greater. In such case the population of the earth could not have been less than two hundred and forty millions, at a period two thousand years after the Flood. Is it reasonable to suppose that the population was less at the deluge, two thousand years after man's creation? And, could a flood confined to the valley of the Enphrates, or even to as large a territory as the whole Roman Empire, have wrought the destruction of the human race? I trow not!

It is hard to bring the mind up to an adequate idea of the magnitude of this wonderful event, in its purpose and effect; the tendency of our poor faculties is to stop far short of a true conception of the awful reality.

If the universality of the deluge be admitted, the premises of "The Comet" do not seem so unreasonable, however grotesque some of its minor deductions may appear. On a subject so grand and so fascinating, the author of lively imagination may unconsciously permit fancy to interfere somewhat with the slow process of investigation.

A universal flood may be considered as at once cause and consequence of the changes which resulted in the present status of the crust and surface of the earth.

How came the old sea shells upon our highest mountains? Mr. Guiou's theory, as I apprehend it, does not require that the waters of the Flood should have risen to the tops of the mountains, at their present altitude, but that the mountains, with all their fossil wealth, were heaved up above the surface of the waters in the convulsions attending the deluge.

No matter how long the times occupied in the great periods of creation; no matter how numerous and varied the productions, vegetable, animal and mineral, of each successive layer or stratum of the earth—when all the fountains of the great deep were broken up by the Almighty fiat; that is when the internal forces of fire, or water, or both, were set in terrible commotion, and the solid frame of the globe convulsed and torn by the shocks thereof; then the strata of the old earth above the waters and below the waters, down to their deep foundations, were shaken and wrinkled like sheets of old parchment—heaved from the abyss into rounded hill and ridgy height—or spread out in plain, or vale, or riven into horrible fissures, with their edges turned up to the skies in millions of splintered crags, the mountain summits of our modern earth.

To the superficial observer, and possibly to some profound investigators, the great geological phenomena of earth suggests the idea of violence—of such an earthquake as shook the globe from centre to circumference. The facts attest that from its depths to its scarred surface, our planet has suffered violence at the hand of the Maker. The fearful convulsions at Lisbon, at Carraccas, and other earthquakes at divers places; the eruptions of Etna and Vesuvius and Stromboli, of Cotopaxi, Hecla, Mauna Loa and others, may be considered as lingering echoes of the grand catastrophe when the primeval nations were suddenly destroyed with their sins upon their heads.

Let not man object that the result of the Flood, in the destruction of mankind, was more than commensurate with the cause, to-wit: the corruption of mankind. In the Divine economy, moral government is paramount, and the physical creation, in the hands of God, subservient. Witness, the Flood; the destruction of the cities of the plain; the plagues of Egypt; the razing of Jerusalem, and a thousand other instances in profane history, if we could read them in the light which Inspiration lends to its records.

What dignity almost divine—what disgrace almost infernal—does the moral power of choice bestow upon man! By his own consent the imagination, the purposes and desires of his heart became only evil continually; consequently his overt sins so abominable, that, in the strong language of the East, "it repented the Lord that he had made man on the earth, and it grieved him at his heart." Hence the Flood.

"Before the mountains were brought forth, or ever thou hadst formed the earth and the world, even from everlasting to everlasting, Thou art God."—Ps. xc: 2.

This is from a Psalm entitled "A prayer of Moses, the man of God"—the man skilled in all the learning of the Egyptians; acquainted with all the traditions of his own people, reaching directly back to Noah; with whom the Angel of the Lord had communed at the flaming bush in the plain of Midian, and the Lord on the thundrous brow of Sinai; whose hand wrote or compiled the Book of Genesis; who knew whereof he spake.

I trust this paraphrase may not be considered an irreverent speculation:

"Before the mountains were brought forth" —before the crust of the earth was rent by the breaking up of all the fountains of the great deep, and the mountains brought forth from the abyss of waters. And then, away back before that, "or ever thou hadst formed the earth"—the Adamland before the Flood, where dwelt the first creation of man; "and the world," that is the earth and the surrounding heavens, the system of created things. "Even from everlasting to everlasting thou art God"—even from before each of these wondrous acts of Omnipotence away down into the mysterious future, the self-existent, the eternal.

"He fills His own eternal now;
And sees our ages wasted."

"Thou art God." These three words have an awful emphasis, overwhelming to the understanding and the imagination of man, because connected with these specified exhibitions of Almighty power.

Now, if the reader has not found out that I have written nothing new, it is not my fault. I have merely set forth, with little regard to order, some prominent thoughts gathered in support of a position which I am inclined to regard as mainly true. The reason for the faith that is in the writer may not satisfy others. I wish I could "turn on the light;" but, alas, what can the flicker of my poor taper show where torches have blazed in vain?. NO GOD.

BY MRS. SIGOURNEY.

"No God!—no God!" The simplest flower
That on the wild is found,
Shrinks as it drinks its cup of dew,
And trembles at the sound.
"No God!" astonished echo cries
From out her cavern hoar,
And every wandering bird that flies
The solemn forest lifts its head,
The Almighty to proclaim;
The brooklet in its crystal urn
Doth leap to grave his name;
High sounds the deep and vengeful sea
Along his billowy track,
And red Vesuvius opes his mouth
To hurl the falsehood back.

IS PROHIBITION A FAILURE?

Persons interested in the liquor traffic are in the habit of asserting that the prohibitory law now in force in the State of Maine has proved a failure; that there is as much drinking done there now in secret as was done in public before the law came into operation; and that the proper way to diminish drunkenness is to afford the greatest possible facility and encouragement to the open and public sale of liquor. In reply to such assertions an ex-Mayor of Portland furnishes the following comparative statistics. If the prohibitory law has been the means of effecting the wonderful changes indicated by his figures it is an abuse of language to speak of it as a failure. Ex-Mayor Kingsbury says: "In 1830, in Maine, there were 2,000 open bars, 460 taverns with open bars, and nearly every grocery store kept the article on sale. The estimated sales amounted to nearly $12,000,000. Now there is not an open bar in Maine; and no tavern or grocery keeps it for sale, and the estimated sales do not reach half a million. In 1830 the use of liquor was nearly universal. It was found in every house. Now it is a rare and exceptional case. The large majority of the people are total abstainers. Public sentiment is so strong in that direction that even the political parties are compelled to make their nominations for office in obedience to it. In 1830 there were 10,000 persons (one ont of every 45 of the population) who were inebriates and 200 deaths from delirium tremens. But now not one in three hundred is a drunkard, and there are not fifty deaths annually from delirium tremens. These facts are but a few illustrations of the many that might be given of the marvellous changes wrought ont by the combined workings of the prohibition law, moral suasion, and public opinion."—Canada Presbyterian.

CHRISTIANS SHOULD BE OBEDIENT.

Christians are Christians just in the measure in which they are obedient. Faith is as obedient as it is confiding; love is as dutiful as it is affectionate; humility is as submissive as it is lowly; penitence is as much afraid of sinning as it mourns for sin; joy is as quick to do the will of God as it is enraptured and transporting; and zeal is as warm and steadfast in opposing all that is wrong, as when it burns with its boldest and most active spirituality. It is a dry doctrine—a dead orthodoxy, no more resembling true piety than a marble statue does a living man—that does not express itself in obedience.

SIN PUT AWAY.

"Blessed is that man to whom the Lord will not impute sin." Our sins cannot hinder us, nor withdraw us from prayer; for they are gone, they are no sins, they cannot be hurtful to us. Christ dying for us, is as all the Scriptnre, both of the Old and New Testament, witnesseth, "He that taketh away our sorrows." Like as when I owe unto a man a hundred pounds: the day is expired, he will have his money; I have it not, and for lack of it I am laid in prison. In such distress comes a good friend, and saith, "Sir, be of good cheer, I will pay thy debts;" and forthwith payeth the whole sum and setteth me at liberty. Therefore, though our sins condemn us, "we have an Advocate with God the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous." We have one Advocate, not many; neither saints, nor anybody else, but only Him and no other, neither by the way of meditation, nor by the way of redemption. He only is sufficient, for He only is "the door;" let Him have all the praise. "Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world."—Latimer, burned A. D. 1555.

MANAGEMENT OF CHILDREN.

There is too much mistaken kindness in the management of children. The law of love is great but united firmness is greater. Your children can be your aids to good housekeeping. Make them helpful and useful, and you make them happier. Let them early form habits of neatness and order, and when you are weary you will not have to wait on their carelessness. Teach them to give you courteous speech and manner, and they will live to honor you. Let no part of your house be too good for your family. Let the boys as well as the girls' bed-rooms be light and cheery. Take great pains to have the home attraction stronger than can come from outside influences. So few children confide in their parents or guardians. Would it not be well to take an interest in them, and draw them toward us, instead of repelling?

SUNDAY RECREATIONS.

BY A MEMBER OF THE NEW YORK BAR.

The Sunday laws aim to secure a day of general rest from ordinary labor, but no one is obliged to devote it to religion. Hence the question remains: If one may not work and wishes somewhat else than religious occupations, what may he do under the Sunday laws? What recreations are allowable?

Amusements. Amusement is not in itself contrary to the spirit of modern Sunday laws. People may amuse themselves, if they are quiet and peaceable. A man in Missouri went hunting one Sunday and was prosecuted. The district attorney argued that it was work, but the judges said, not so. There was no law to sustain the prosecution but a law against working; now hunting for pleasure, they said, is not "working." But it makes a difference whether what one is doing is for his own pleasure or for wages and to amuse other people. In Buffalo the proprietors of a public garden engaged an aeronaut and staff for an ascension on Sunday. When they sued for their pay the proprietors defended because it was a contract for unnecessary work, and the court sustained the defense. Many of the amusements for the masses, the shows, plays and sports which persons provide for profit, are practically found to be adverse to the usefulness of the rest day, and are prohibited by special laws. These vary in different regions of the country. There is a law in New York State, passed last winter, which forbids shooting, hunting, trapping or caging birds or wild beasts. There is another, an older law, which forbids dramatic entertainments. It does not follow that these things are unlawful across the line, in New Jersey, or Connecticut. In England an act forbids opening "places for public amusement." A few years ago a company opened an aquarium, with a reading room in connection, and a band of music. They were prosecuted. The judges said they were sorry to decide against such an establishment, but they must: it was clearly a place of amusement. The managers then discontinued the band and closed the reading room. But they were prosecuted again, and the judges said the changes made no difference.

Excursions. More travel is tolerated upon Sunday than the law permits. Two grave difficulties embarrass any enforcement of State Sunday laws against conveyances and travelers: one is the right of way of the United States mail, and the other is the impracticability of separating the sheep from the goats among passengers. The State courts have considered that the responsibility is upon Congress of saying whether or not a mail shall be carried to and fro; and that if a railroad train, for instance, is carrying mail bags in performance of a contract with the Postoffice Department to transport a mail on Sunday, the engineer and conductor can neither be stopped on their way nor punished afterwards because the law of the State may prohibit traveling. Moreover there are some motives for travel which almost any Sunday law recognizes as justifying it: one may lawfully use a public conveyance for going to church, or to attend the sick, or to seek a doctor. Again, the tendency of public opinion has been turned toward some allowance of facilities of travel. The result has been a general toleration of a good deal of travel which probably comes within the prohibitions in the statute book. It is so likely that a train or steamboat carries a mail, and so difficult to ascertain whether each passenger is upon secular or Sunday errands, that the conveyances run without so much interference from the courts as, theoretically, there might be. Questions of running railroad trains and steamboats are practically decided by the directors in view of the requirements of the mail service and the demands of the public wishing to travel; horse cars and omnibuses in cities are allowed in the discretion of the city authorities; and rural stages are for the most part willing to rest, and not much tempted to run.

Excursion conveyances, however, do not carry mails or passengers who could confuse the question by pleading an errand of necessity or mercy. And recent experiments in Connecticut have shown that if the law of the State prohibits Sunday travel—different States have different laws—it can be enforced against an excursion boat if energetic effort is made. An interesting aspect of this topic is presented where excursionists have been upset, or run off the track, or blown up, and their suits for damages have been met with the objection that they were traveling on Sunday. For example, a man is driving along a highway, and comes of a sudden upon a hole in the road; his horse stumbles and breaks his leg, and the driver is thrown out and hurt. He sues the highway officers for leaving the road in that condition, but their lawyer cross-examines him as to where he was going, and for what, and elicits that it was only a pleasure drive. The judge then tells the jury that the town is not under legal obligations to keep highways in order for pleasure driving on Sunday, for it is against the law. Verdict for defendants. Many cases of the kind have been known years ago, especially in New England. But, in later years, and in the Western and Middle States, when railroad corporations have urged the same doctrine they have not succeeded so well. The courts have held, in effect, that railroads and steamboats need not run on Sunday, unless they wish, to accommodate excursionists; but if they do they must take the same care, and bear the same responsibility as on other days. Taking the country at large it is no excuse for an engineer's negligence in wrecking or blowing up a party of excursionists that they were pleasure traveling on Sunday.

Newspapers. These present the question in two aspects: Is it lawful to publish a paper on Sunday morning? and, Is it lawful to work on Sunday to publish a paper on Monday morning? The theory of Sunday laws would be that the judges should take the general judgment and experience of the community as to whether the publication of a morning paper on either day is one of those general needs which is equal to the need of a rest day. If it is, then the work necessary to be done on Sunday to publish either is lawful. But the community is not agreed on this question. What shall the courts do under that state of facts? Publishers of newspapers are not agreed. In some cities or offices the choice is to publish Sunday and omit Monday, and thus give editors and type-setters a Sabbath day. In others the preference is to omit Sunday and publish Monday; which comports with the view of giving readers a Sabbath day. Other papers are issued on all days alike. And religious people are not agreed. The general practice in the larger cities of advertising church services in Sunday morning papers is adapted to make a judge suppose that a considerable per centage of active managers of churches both think it right that papers should be published and also believe that a proportion of church-going people do read the aforesaid papers before church time. And the number of persons who refrain from buying a Monday's paper because it was probably produced by Sunday's work is trivially small. The courts have been perplexed, like the community. But there is good ground for saying that the law will sustain a paper in taking either day for rest. A statute which commanded publication of an advertisement in a "daily paper" has been held to be obeyed by publishing it in a paper which took Monday for a holiday; the judges said that the phrase "daily paper" was subject to the general right to observe a rest day. On the other hand, the law does not forbid publication on either day or both. In New York it was formerly decided that Sunday morning papers were unlawful; but the Legislature passed an act to permit them.—Christian Union.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

FOREIGN.

Gleaned from exchanges:

The Church of England is to have a new church edifice in Rome.

In China an idol temple has been presented to the Missionary Society of the Methodist Free Church.

At Gourock, on Saturday, the foundation stone of a new Roman Catholic chapel and school was laid by Bishop Macdonald, D. D.

The Rev. Professor Chalmers will be the new principal of the London College (Presbyterian) as successor to the late Professor Lorimer.

A Quaker lady, Hannah Hall, is visiting Sydney on a religious mission from America. She has had good audiences at her meetings.

In February next there will be five Sabbaths. This fact occurs but three times in a century. Thus, after 1880 we will have to wait until 1920 before the shortest month in the year can again boast of five Sabbaths.

The Norwegian Methodist Conference was recently held. It returns: preachers 23, local preachers 16, members 2,823, churches 23; total collections $3,765, Sunday schools 41, teachers and scholars 2,454.

M. Loyson, better known as Pere Hyacinthe, has returned from Aix-les-Bains, and officiates at his church in the Rue Rochechouart. He has now some 4,000 disciples. The expenses are, however, very heavy, the church alone costing £400 in rent.

A "House of Rest," of which the Archbishop of Canterbury is president, is to be opened at Mentone, for the benefit of Church of England clergymen who have broken down in health, and who are unable to bear the expense of a winter abroad.

The Presbyterians of New South Wales are raising funds to send a deputy to Great Britain to try and procure twenty Presbyterian ministers. There are many vacant charges, and religious services are almost unknown in many parts of the interior, although populated by Scotchmen.

The English Episcopal Bishop of Lahore, India, appeals for aid to build a cathedral at the capital of the British province of the Punjanb. Mr. Gilbert Scott has designed a building to cost £30,000. It is expected that the government of India will subscribe one-sixth of this amount.

Prof. Lias of St. David's College, Lampeter, in the latest volume of the "Cambridge Bible for Schools," gives an exhaustive note on St. Paul's "thorn in the flesh." After detailing the various hypotheses advanced by previous writers, he concludes that hastiness of temper was probably the apostle's thorn.

A sad accident occurred at Alum Bay, Islo of Wight, on Monday, resulting in the death of a clergyman, the Rev. Mr. Mackenzie, a visitor staying at Bournemouth. He went in the excursion steamer from Bournemouth to Alum Bay, and whilst walking along the edge of the cliffs facing the Solent he slid over, and was picked up at the bottom soon afterwards, quite dead, being literally dashed to pieces, having fallen a distance of nearly five hundred feet.

One hundred and fifty more amnestied Communists arrived at Paris on Sabbath from New Caledonia. They were welcomed by a considerable number of people, but no incident worthy of note occurred. The funeral of one of the amnestied Communists took place on Sabbath. The Socialist party meant it to be a political demonstration, but they seem to have been signally unsuccessful.

The Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol, addressing a church gathering near the latter city on Monday afternoon, spoke with apprehension of the disquietude and restlessness manifested in the Church of England generally, and expressed a hope that it would work itself out without touching those things which all good Church people wished to hand down to their children's children. He trusted in God that we were not going to have the whole Prayer-book pulled about, and spoke of the tremendous risk of offering that venerated book to the caprices of revisers. Mr. Monk, M. P., concurred in those remarks.

At a meeting of the Swansea Town Council on Wednesday, Mr. Alderman Phillips objected to the Mayor and Corporation officially attending church on Tuesday next, on the occasion of the opening of the Church Congress, when a sermon will be preached by the Archbishop of Canterbury. He spoke of the "paraphernalia" and show of such like ceremonies, and said he refused to be compelled to attend church by resolution. The motion in favor of attending church was, however, carried.

Another instance of priestly intolerance at Rome is attracting attention. Franceschi, a Protestant, being very ill, requested the ministrations of Dr. Ribetti, Waldensian pastor, while his wife wanted him to have a Catholic priest. She drove Dr. Ribetti off, and the priest took his place. Ribetti seconded in writing the declaration of Franceschi that he was a Protestant, and called on the city authorities for protection. The priest placed himself by the sick man's bedside and, calling in the police, had Dr. Ribetti put out of the house.

A recent letter from a correspondent at Pekin contains the following information concerning the recent prevalence of typhus fever in China: "Six Protestant missionaries and seven Roman Catholic sisters were carried off. Dr. Dudgeon, so well known in Scotland, has been almost the only recovery. The fever followed the dreadful famine of the previous year, and spread over the whole of North China, wherever the refugees flocked. There was hardly a house without one or more of the inmates being laid down."

The project of the late Monsignor Dupanloup, Bishop of Orleans, for the decoration of Orleans Cathedral with ten painted windows representing scenes in the Jeanne d'Arc, has met with more success than might have been expected. A sum of 125,000f. was quickly subscribed, and a competition was opened to which all the glass-painters in France were admitted. The result of this competition, as already mentioned, has been that the design of M. Lorin, of Chartres, has carried off the first prize of 4,000f. and that he is commissioned with the execution of the historical memorial.

JOHN McLAURIN. - - - Editor.

WILMINGTON, N. C.:

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 22, 1879.

WHAT IS THE MATTER?

We have heretofore noted one of the reasons which, as we think, accounnt for the greater and more rapid progress of other Churches in comparisou with onr own. That reason we stated to be onr own neglect of evangelistic work. We did not attempt to show that this was a blunder. Nor shall we do so now. We are satisfied that auy one who will consider the nature and demands of the work, in these times when settlements were new and popnlations widely scattered, will agree with ns that it was a sad mistake.

Another question now presents itself. Are we making now a fair proportionate uso of this arm of effectiveness? We think not. We can see in most of onr presbyteries room aud opportnnity for the employment of mauy evangelists, if we had the men and the means. And nntil we shall devise and execute some plan for meeting this deficiency we may expect to see others preoccnpy and hold the gronnd; or worse, we may expect to see it left to be possessed by the world and the devil.

We know of but few subjects of more importauce at this time, and few which more imperatively demand thorough investigation at our hands, or one more practical in their issnes than that of the natnre, scope and necessity of the evangelist's office aud work.

Another prominent defect in our work is that so little is done. Indeed almost nothing is done in most of onr churches to employ the talents and energies of onr church members. Even onr ruling elders have formerly been tanght to think that they had nothing to do as pastors of the flock. And a jealons fear of mistakes and disorder has kept back the private members, has repressed their zeal, or at least has not fostered and gnided it. The result is that a working congregation is almost unknown among us. The writer of this article has never known one. Congregations we have known in which a number of active and working members were to be fonnd, bnt we never knew one in which these working members were uot a meagre minority. A working congregation! Where is one to be fonnd? But some one will say, "Neither can you find one in either of the other denominations." We are not snre of that. We think we can find some in which the drones are an exception. Their methods may not be such as to commend them to ns, but they are such as do enlist their people and bring all the force of their congregations to bear upon the objects they have in view. They do at the time and in the way they intend bring ont the working power of their people. We, on the other hand, leave church work to our ministers, except in the Sabbath school. And with the Sabbath schools not excepted we leave it to the ministers and a few consecrated men and women, who are willing to be singnlar and conspicuons in order to do good.

Shall we stop to show that this is a blnnder and a sin? Is it not plain enongh from the bare statemeut? Now who can estimate the loss of efficiency thus incnrred? Who does not knowv that onr aggressive strength would be reinforced and multiplied many fold if this evil conld be corrected?

Here, then, is another subject for investigation. A wise directory for congregational work—or, if the word is preferred, church work—wonld meet a most imperative need. It is not enongh to leave it to pastors and sessions. Some men, able and nsefnl in other ways, have no capacity for organizing snch movements. They need to be told how and to have the momentnm of the church itself to carry them forward. Our Chnrch is in need of somethiug which shall bring forward and bring ont all onr strength.

A special form of the defect jnst referred to is the neglect of the Church to employ the talents of the rnling elders in the very service to which they have been called. They are pastors of the flock by the very terms of their ordination vows. It is their dnty to guide, to feed and to control. How much of either are they in the habit of doing. Yet many of them are exceptionally well qnalified for this work.

And to see them spend week after week among their flocks and take no thonght of them, nor of the Master's interest in them, is indeed a sad sight, and the more is it sad because it is commou. And to see them Sabbath after Sabbath only listeners to the Word when they might he going after the wanderers along the highways and hedges and bringing them in, is also a sad sight, and not the less sad that it is so common. If the day shall ever come wheu our churches, ministers, officers and people shall move together for Christ, then also will dawn the period of onr most abonnding success. And in proportion as we approach that standard of nnited effort shall we approach that measnre of prosperous increase.

To these reasons we add another which has already been treated in these columns. For various reasons, it has long been the case, that onr presbyteries have exercised but little control over either ministers or churches. The right of snpervision is seldom called into use. The formation and dissolution of the pastoral relation are almost the only cases in which the Presbytery takes action at all. And in these cases, its action rarely, if ever, passes beyond ratifying what has already been done by the churches and the ministers. Dnring the whole period which intervenes, from the begining of a pastorate to its close what presbytery ever steps in to see how the parties are fnlfilling the covenant formed nnder that presbytery's sanction? Aud yet to the presbytery belongs the pastoral authority, and npon it rests the pastoral responsibility of the whole church within its bonnds. Is a session unfaithfnl, who else but the presbytery can interpose and bring them np to their duty? Is a pastor growing negligent, idle and careless of his dnty, from whom would a word of connsel come with such weight and effect? Has a church forgotten or withheld the money support promised its pastor or is it refnsing to him and to the sessions due encouragement, support and obedience in the discharge of their arduous dnties, who has the right, and wields the moral power, and on whom rests the obligation to admonish that delinqnent church and recall it to the discharge of its dnty? We wonld not ventnre to visit with irreverent censure these venerable courts; (it is written Thon shalt not speak evil of the rnler of thy people) yet we wonld with due respect, point to this also as an evil sorely needing remedy. If presbyteries are neglectful who shall see that those nnder their charge are faithful?

Does any one ask, is not this the case in these churches also which are here compared with ours? The answer is, No; it is not at least in anything like the same degree. In the Baptist church they have no supervising authority. And while the lack of it is, as we hold, an element of weakness, it will not compare for evil effect with one that folds its hands and goes to sleep. Presbyterial oversight and the power thereof actively and wisely employed will form an immense power for good. Unemployed it is only an incnmbrance; a weight to be borne; a clog upon the activities of the church.

In the Methodist church this oversight is diligently employed. The character and work of each minister is every year called up before the annual conference for review. Four times a year in the quarterly conferences, the state of the church and its work in each charge and congregation are examined and snch action taken as may be considered wise and right. Thus every minister and every church are looked after with carefnl regnlarity. Their mode of applying the principle may be objected to by some. We are not discussing the mode. We are calling for the application of the principle and are willing to adjonrn all discnssion of methods till the time when that shall become a practical question.

Meanwhile we wonld ask, can any one doubt as to the good results of a faithful and godly discharge of this pastoral dnty by our presbyteries?

We believe these venerable courts through all onr bounds are becoming more wakefnl and intent upon their dnty. We are glad to believe it. We hail this awakening as another sign of the approach of a day when the Lord will abnndantly revive, refresh and bless our church.

May the day be hastened!

ANOTHER MISSIONARY DEAD.

It is with much regret that we learn from the Christian Observer of the decease of Mrs. Leyburn, the widow of the late Rev. George W. Leyburn, beloved missionary of onr Church to Greece. Some two weeks ago she went to Louisville to attend npon an invalid daughter, the wife of one of the editors of the Observer. In the brief space of six days she herself became ill, grew worse and died, in the sixty-ninth year of her age.

It is fitting that the record of this sainted woman's life should be preserved for the edification and encouragement of God's people. We find that "forty-two years ago Rev. George W. Leyburn and his wife joined Rev. S. R. Honston and his wife, in Greece, for the purpose of mission work in the island of Scio. Disappointment awaited them: before they arrived Scio had been desolated by the Turks. Bnt a prominent Spartan arrived at Athens about that time and asked for religious teachers for his people, and accordingly the missionaries bent their steps thither. Again a disappointment, for after about five years of labor there they were compelled to close their school by reason of the interference of the Greek government, and soon, without building a church or enrolling a single convert, they left the country. Mrs. Honston was buried among strangers at Cairo, in Egypt. Mr. and Mrs. Leyburn returned home. Four years and a half ago they were again called by the Church to resume work in Greece. Bnt again the labors of Mr. Leyburn were cut short. In three or four months his zealous efforts for the Master brought him to the grave. His last sickness, his death and his grave were among strangers at Saloniks, Turkey."

The Synod of Kentucky, which was in session at Bowling Green, passed resolutions of respect for her memory. At the funeral service twelve Presbyterian ministers were present.

THE CAUSE OF EDUCATION.

The collection for this cause is to be taken up on the first Sabbath in November, or as near thereto as practicable. Let us hope that the importance of this cause will receive the consideration due, and that the churches will liberally respond to the call upon their benevolence. Every effort has been made, and is being made to conduct this branch of the Church's operations on the most economical plan possible. The salary of the Secretary has been redneed about one-half. There is great need for enlargement both in students and in means.

REV. JOHN DOUGLAS.

He was gradnated at the South Carolina College in the year 1830. One year after this he united with the Presbyterian Church, and on the first of January, 1833, he entered the Theological Seminary in this place, finishing the course of study in 1835.

In April of that year he was licensed to preach the gospel, and on the 30th of April, 1836, he was ordained and installed pastor of Purity and Concord churches in Bethel Presbytery, which he served npwards of eleven years. Thence he removed to James Island, where he spent fifteen years of his life in faithful labor among the whites and blacks. The first gun fired in the war of 1860—1865 was within 150 yards of his own door. He saw his house dismantled, its foundation dng into rifle pits, and his church burnt to ashes. Yet, in ministry of mercy and love did he spend those four sad years of our civil strife.

In November, 1865, he visited Steele Creek church in North Carolina, and in the following year became the pastor of that church and of Providence church in the Presbytery of Concord. In the same year, 1866, some 50 persons were added to the two churches, and the average admissions for six years were nearly thirty annually.

Our brother Douglas was an earnest and sincere Christian, having the salvation of souls and the good of the Church at heart. He was a genial companion, a man of great good sense in things practical, with a heart full of sympathy for the suffering and distressed, and one whose business in life was to do good. He was a valnable member of Presbytery, succeeding Dr. Palmer as Clerk of Charleston Presbytery, and was for some years Stated Clerk and Treasnrer of the Presbytery of Bethel. He was a trne and devoted friend and for many years a Director of the Theological Seminary at Columbia. And, among the benefactions he bestowed upon it, was the scholarship he fonnded by a donation of $2,050, in 1864, the income of which for the last fifteen years has been applied to the education of young men for the ministry of reconciliation.

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

St. Louis Presbterian: "The Supreme Court of Texas has affirmed the constitutionality of the Sunday law, much to the disgust of certain gentlemen who purpose to serve their adopted country by retailing beer and by other such exercises on the Lord's day. Let the Christian men and all good citizens of Texas stand by their Supreme Court.

The following relating to the baptism and religious faith of Henry Clay. We clip from an exchange:

Under the impression that Mr. Clay was baptized by immersion, the Rev. Mr. Ryland a baptist minister writes to Rev. Dr. Berkley, Rector of St. Peter's Church, St. Louis, to learn the particulars: The Reverend Doctor replies, that on the 22d of June, 1847, he baptized Mr. Clay, and on the same occasion also his daughter-in-law, Mrs. Thomas Clay, with four of her children. This took place in the parlor of the house at Ashland, and "the water was applied by the hand' out of a large glass vase." This is a matter of comparatively little importance; and yet it will not be without a certain degree of interest in the eyes of many persons. Henry Clay was seventy years of age when he was baptized; and he died five years after. The brief account which Mr. Berkley gives, in his letter, of the religious life of that eminent statesman and eloquent orator, is very interesting. "His faith," he says, "in the Divine authenticity of Christianity, and in the Atonement made by the Lord Jesus Christ for the sin of the world, was as simple as that of a child.

THE FIRST PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

Not a day passes that there are not several scores of persons in the First Presbyterian church to see the beautiful frescoing just completed by Messrs Kronger & Son. The building has undergone such a change that it would not be recognized by the members of the congregation. No such frescoing has ever been done in Charlotte, and we question if there is anything equal to it in the State. The wood work has been painted by Mr. C. A. Frazier to correspond to the colors in the frescoing, and work on the inside of the building has been finished. The painters are now on the steeple and when that is completed, will begin to paint the outside of the building giving it a color something like limestone. It was hoped that it would be ready for use to-morrow, bnt the paint is not sufficiently dry to admit of this. By the Sunday following, the congregation will be called together there for the first time in six or eight weeks, although the outside will not have been finished by this time. Now carpeting has been purchased and will be put down between the seats as well as in the aisles. The entire cost of the improvements including the iron roofing will not fall short of $2,000, and no debt will be incurred to defray the expense. The committee who have had the improvements in charge are to be congratulated on the admirable taste displayed in all the details, and the congregation upon the possession of a church building which is not inferior to any in the State.—Charlotte (N. C.) Observer.

A DENIAL.

Mr. Editor: I received a letter from a brother minister in which he desired to know whether the rumor (extensively circulated) was true that I was restrained from attending upon the ministry of Miss Painter, in Mooresville, because I took such strong grounds against her before her arrival. I take this opportunity to contradict that report.

As I have been publicly charged by the Methodist minister of this place with having prevented the number of "converts" from reaching 500, I intend in a few weeks, from the pulpit, and, if you will permit, from the columns of your paper, to show why Presbyterians cannot consistently encourage such meetings as have been lately held here in the Methodist church. Yours, &c.,

P. T. Penick.

NEWS NOTES.

We specially invite news from all quarters for this column.

FAYETTEVILLE PRESBYTERY.

The Presbytery of Fayetteville met at Sharon church, Montgomery county, N. C., Wednesday, October 8th, '79, at 12 o'clock m,, and was opened with a sermon by Rev. Joseph Evans, Moderator, from Isa. lxiv: 6. "We all do fade as a leaf."

After constitution by prayer, and the calling of the roll, Rev. Wm. S. Lacy was chosen Moderator, and Rev. N. T. Bowden and Ruling Elder G. B. Cole temporary clerks.

There were present during the sessions of Presbytery fourteen ministers and twenty elders. Five ministers were absent, and thirty churches were not represented.

The committee appointed for the purpose, reported having organized a church at Cameron, N. C.

Rev. C. M. Shepperson, D. D., was dismissed to the Presbytery of Louisiana.

Rev. Roger Martin was received from the Presbytery of Orange.

Calls from Centre and Shoo Heel churches for Rev. Roger Martin were laid before Presbytery, placed in his hands, and accepted by him, and the Presbytery took order for his installation as pastor of these churches on the third Sabbath in November, at Centre church, at 11 o'clock a. m., and at Shoo Heel church at 7:30 p. m., of the same day. Rev. J. H. Coble, Rev. H. G. Hill and Rev. Wm. S. Lacy, Committee, with Rev. A. N. Ferguson as alternate.

Lanrinburg presented a call for the pastoral services of Rev. J. H. Coble, for half his time, which was placed in his hands and accepted. Arrangements were made for his installation on the fourth Sabbath in November. Rev. Messrs. Lacy, Ferguson and Martin, Committee.

Arrangements were also made for the supply of Mount Carmel and Harmony churches, and a committee appointed to visit those and adjacent churches with reference to a permanent pastorate.

Similar action was taken with regard to Lumberton.

Laurel Hill was chosen as the place and Wednesday before the fourth Sabbath in April, 1880, as the time of next meeting.

Reports of the Agents of the various Executive Committees were duly made, and presented various points of interest. The works of Home Missions and Foreign Missions were objects of special consideration. A change was ordered in the conduct of Home Missions, the Presbytery undertaking its own work, appropriating a per cent. of contributions to the general work.

The reports of the Narrative and Systematic Beneficence were encouraging.

A committee was appointed to aid the General Assembly's Committee on the Sabbath. Rev. Roger Martin, Rev. J. H. Coble and D. S. Morrison were appointed said committee.

The missionary meeting was held on Saturday, and interesting addresses were made. This good custom is kept up.

ORANGE PRESBYTERY.

This Presbytery met at Alamance church in Guilford county, about seven miles from Greensboro, on Monday, 16th October, at 1 o'clock. Opened with a sermon by the retiring moderator, Rev. A. Currie, from Matt. xiv: 31—"O thou of little faith, wherefore didst thou doubt?"

There were present twenty-one ministers and seventeen ruling elders at the first roll call. Rev. C. H. Wiley was elected moderator. Rev. T. U. Faucette and Ruling Elder T. A. Watkins temporary clerks.

Rev. W. R. Atkinson was dismissed to the Presbytery of Mecklenburg. The call from the Tarboro church for the pastoral services of Rev. D. C. Rankin was returned to the Presbytery and Rev. D. C. Rankin was granted permission to labor out of the bounds of Presbytery. Mr. J. Kivette Stockard, a member of the Graham church, was received under the care of the Presbytery as a candidate for the ministry.

Mebanesville church received permission to employ Rev. T. J. Allison as stated supply for one year, for one-half of his time, and Bethlehem church for the other half. Grassy Creek church called Rev. John W. Primrose for one-fourth of his time and Shiloh for another fourth.

Professor Ledoux presented the needs and claims of Chapel Hill church before the Presbytery, and a committee was appointed to consider and report on the matter.

Permission granted to Rev. A. M. Watson, of the Presbytery of Memphis, to labor within the bounds of the Presbytery for six months.

J. T. Crocker was heard in behalf of Ashboro church, and the matter referred to the Agent of Sustentation.

Oregon church called Rev. D. I. Craig for one-fourth of his time, and Oak Forest for another fourth.

Letter from W. T. Whitehead, of Halifax county, read before the Presbytery in behalf of Presbyterianism at Scotland Neck, and was referred to the Agent of Sustentation.

Church at Company Shops granted leave to employ Rev. B. W. Mebane for two Sabbath nights in each month, with the consent of the Graham church.

A special order for conference in church work, with closed doors, was fixed for Monday afternoon. A committee reported a church organized at Company Shops, and the name was entered upon the roll. Report of Agent of Sustentation made order of day 10 o'clock on Monday. Resolution for division of Presbytery was put upon the docket. A special order of the day was fixed to hear report of a committee on routine business.

Rev. C. H. Wiley delivered on Saturday an entertaining and instructive historical address, and in the afternoon preached the dedication sermon, after which the new church was dedicated to the worship of God.

The new church is a handsome brick building—audience room 40x50 feet, the whole house 40x65 feet.

Several additional members of Presbytery have dropped in since the session commenced.

The Presbytery will be in session on Monday and possibly Tuesday also.

MECKLENBURG PRESBYTERY.

Huntersville, N. C., Oct. 20, 1879.

Dear Brother: I send you a brief minute of Presbytery's late meeting:

Presbytery of Mecklenburg met at Philadelphia church, in Mecklenburg county, on the 17th ult. at 11 a. m., and was opened with a sermon by Rev. G. L. Cook, from the 14th chapter of Hosea.

Rev. W. M. McGilvary, of Rutherfordton, was elected moderator, and Rev. S. C. Alexander and Gen. R. D. Johnston temporary clerks.

Letters from Revs. McAboy, Graves, Towles, Martin, Kirkpatrick and J. E. Morrison were received and their excuses for absence sustained.

A call from Sharon church for the pastoral services of Rev. D. P. Robinson was read and and being found in order, permission was granted the church to prosecute the call before Bethel Presbytery, to which Rev. Mr. Robinson belongs.

One new member was gained. Rev. Wm. R. Atkinson was received from the Presbytery of Orange and his name enrolled.

Report of Rev. M. R. Kirkpatrick, pertaining to his evangelistic labors, was read and diligence and fidelity commended.

The following supplies were appointed for Steel Creek and Pleasant Hill (charge of our late Brother Douglas), viz: W. W. Pharr, A. W. Miller, D. D., G. L. Cook, W. R. Atkinson, G. D. Parks and W. E. McIlwain.

A new feature of the Presbytery was a conference on the subject of revivals, which added materially to the interest of the session.

Delegates to next Assembly were nominated and are as follows: Revs. G. D. Parks and W. E. McIlwain, and Elders H. M. Parks (of Providence church) and Dr. J. A. Reedy (of Lincolnton).

Perhaps the most important action of Presbytery was the ordering of a collection to be taken in all the churches on the second Sabbath of November to defray the expenses of Rev. S. C. Alexander in removing from Wadesboro to Murphy, should he see his way clear to accept the appointment of evangelist in that region. Gen. R. D. Johnson and Col. J. L. Brown, of Charlotte, were also appointed a committee to solicit funds for this object.

The following committee was appointed to prepare a suitable memorial of Rev. John Douglas, viz: W. E. McIlwain, W. B. Corbett and A. G. Neel, of Steele Creek.

Saturday evening Presbytery adjourned to meet at Dallas, Gaston county, on Friday before third Sabbath of March.

FURTHER FROM THIRD CREEK CHURCH.

Mocksville, N. C., Oct. 14, 79.

Rev. A. L Crawford writes: On the 8th inst., I closed a meeting at Third Creek church that was wonderfully blessed of God. The meeting lasted eight days, and it was truly a "season of refreshing from the presence of the Lord," in which about sixty were hopefully added to the church by profession, and four by certificate. In the very commencement of the meeting it was evident that the Lord had come into the midst of that people in the greatness of His power. The influence of the Spirit seemed to be shed down in a remarkable manner. The assemblies were large, solemn and attentive day and night. God's power was seen and felt, and the displays of His grace and power were so striking that the most aged had never witnessed the like before. Several aged persons, and heads of families were gathered into the fold of the Good Shepherd, and entered the Church through the appointed door of baptism.

Brother R. Z. Johnston preached for me a part of three days with great acceptance. And Brother W. A. Wood preached the closing sermon with more than his usual earnestness and power.

I may add, Mr. Editor, that a few days after the meeting closed, I was kindly remembered by that good people in a most pleasant and substantial way. I was permitted to "reap their carnal things." May they realize to its fullest extent the precious truth uttered by our Divine Saviour, "It is more blessed to give than to receive."

HUNTERSVILLE CHURCH.

Mr. Editor: At the meeting of Mecklenburg Presbytery at Asheville, one year ago, a petition of certain members of Ramah and Hopewell churches asking for an organization at Huntersville, a station on the A. T. & O. R. R., was granted. The church, with about forty members, was organized in November. Although the people are poor (I have been informed that the entire congregation does not possess $20,000 worth of taxable property) they determined to erect a church building at once. They went to work, and I need make no further comment on their diligence than to say that, on last Sabbath, October 12th, I administered the Lord's Supper in their new church. Of course, it is not yet completed, but far more has been done than remains to be done, and that, too, with no great deal of assistance from without; nay, notwithstanding the fact that by a robbery, $96 belonging to the church was lost. The building is forty feet by sixty, and seated, on last Sabbath, not fewer than five hundred persons.

I have said that the most of the work has been done by the congregation itself, and the people will still do much more, but it is desirable that the building should be finished at once. Now, I think that all will agree with me that this congregation has shown that it deserves assistance in its work. Any one, therefore, who may desire to aid them, may send any contribution to me and it will be at once placed in the hands of those in charge of the work.

I may state that, since the organization, there has been preaching regularly twice a month. To the original roll there have been added thirteen members by certificate and five by profession of faith.

J. F. Latimer.

Davidson College, N. C., Oct. 16.

Mr. C. W. Robinson, late a licentiate of Concord Presbytery, now of the Presbytery of Lonisiana, will be ordained to the full work of the Gospel ministry on the 24th inst., and at the same time installed pastor of the Presbyterian church at Glasgow, Ky. The friends of Mr. Robinson in the Synod of North Carolina will be pleased to know of his prospects for usefulness, and be prepared to rejoice at his future success.

TAYLORSVILLE CHURCH.

Taylorsville, N. C., Oct. 16.

Dear Sir: A preaching service of six days just closed at Taylorsville church. Three persons were received to the communion of the church on profession of faith.

Thos. G. Thurston, S. S.

FRANKLIN CHURCH.

Rev. R. W. Boyd writes from Woodleaf, N. C., Oct. 14th, 1879:

Dear Brother: Dr. Nall preached for us at Franklin church ten days, ending the 12th inst. Ten persons were added to the church, nine on examination. Of these three received baptism.

The doctor's visit to us will long be remembered. He drew many hearts to himself as well as to his master. We praise God for His great goodness to us.

Dr. Nall and wife started on their return to Alabama yesterday. He fills an appointment in that State before the meeting of his Presbytery.

THE CAUSE OF EDUCATION.

To Ministers and Churches:

Dear Brethren: The day set apart (first Sabbath of November) for the annual collection to aid our students for the ministry is near at hand. There were enrolled last year eighty-eight students. During the year seven withdrew from the care of the Committee, on account of receiving aid from other sources, and one abandoned the study for the ministry. The number enrolled this year up to the present time is sixty-two. The health of one of these has failed and he has returned home by the advice of physicians, and one has withdrawn for the present on account of domestic considerations. The whole number is not yet reported, and we hope we shall be permitted to enroll as many or more than we had last year. But this number is far below what we ought to have. During last year there was a net increase of only five ministers. In view of our immense field at home, and of the whole heathen world, in view of our honor as a Church, in view of perishing souls, in view of the constraining love of Christ and His express command to us, "Pray ye the Lord of the harvest that He would send forth laborers into the harvest," shall we be satisfied to "live at this poor dying rate?" Are we doing our duty as ministers, as churches, as Christians? Why has no greater progress been made? Why is there not a greater increase of ministers and a larger ingathering of souls? Is it not for the want of consecration? Is it not because God's people have withheld the tithes from the storehouse of the Lord? Is it not because our ministry and our students have been inadequately supported? And have not the ministry themselves failed to instruct the people and press upon them the duty and the necessity of giving liberally of their substance? With the amounts contributed by the churches the last ten years the Committee have been able to pledge to the students only $125 to those in the Theological Seminary and only $100 to those in College. But this is not enough. No student can pay his board, buy his clothes and books with these sums. He must have help from other sources, or be harrassed with care and hindered in his studies.

I appeal to every brother, minister, officer and private member, to remember these students, and give us a cheerful and liberal collection on the first Sabbath of November, or as soon thereafter as possible. The students are now in pressing need of help. Brethren, do not fail. E. M. Richardson, Sec. Ed.

PRESBYTERIAL MEETINGS.

Presbytery of Maryland.—Licentiate W. E. Cave was dismissed to the care of West Hanover Presbytery. The narrative was encouraging.

East Hanover Presbytery.—The organization of a new church at Belle Haven was reported. Mr. W. S. Campbell was received as a candidate for the ministry. The report on home missions was presented by Dr. Witherspoon, who gave many interesting facts. A permanent committee on the Sabbath was appointed. It consists of Rev. Dr. C. H. Read, Rev. W. N. Scott and Judge Onld. There was a very small attendance, not one-fourth of the members being on hand. The following resolution was adopted:

"Resolved, That the Presbytery has heard with great pleasnre that the health of Rev. Dr. Brown has improved, and that he expects to make his home for the present in Fredericksburg; and inasmuch as there is a wide mission field lying contiguous to him the Presbytery request him to take charge of the mission work in this field, as far as the weather and the state of his health will permit, and refer the matter to the executive committee of Domestic Missions for further conference with Dr. Brown in reference to it."

Louisville Presbytery.—Rev. G. S. Roudebnsh was dismissed to the Presbytery of Mississippi. Rev. J. H. Morrison was received from the Presbytery of West Lexington, and licentiate C. W. Robinson from the Presbytery of Concord. Calls were presented to Rev. M. H. Houston from Taylorsville and Cane Run; to Rev. J. H. Morrison for Portland avenue, Louisville; Rev. T. E. Converse, Benlah; and Mr. C. W. Robinson, Glasgow. Committees were appointed to install Messrs. Morrison and Houston. Mr. Robinson was examined for ordination, and a committee appointed to ordain him and install him pastor of Glasgow church on 24th inst. A committee on the Sabbath was appointed.

Presbytery of Winchester.—Licentiates Jos. L. Sherrard and William F. Cosner were ordained to labor as evangelists in Grant county, W. Va. Rev. F. M. Woods was received from the Presbytery of Shenango, Pa. Rev. Alexander Sprunt was dismissed to the Presbytery of Lexington. Rev. F. M. Woods received a call from the church at Martinsburg; installation services appointed for October 15th. A call was also presented from the churches of Shepherdstown and Kearneysville for services of Rev. J. A. Armstrong. A petition was received asking for organization of a church at Round Hill, Va. A committee was appointed to visit Oakland church. Reports on state of religion encouraging. Special committee on the Sabbath continued. The Presbytery is opposed to a division of Synod.

New Orleans Presbytery met in the Second German church, New Orleans, Oct. 8th, Rev. J. W. Flinn, moderator. Received: Rev. A. N. Wyckoff of the South Classis of Long Island and and J. H. Nall, D. D., from the Presbytery of Macon. A minute concerning the late Rev. Benj. Wayne was adopted. Order taken for installation on third Sabbath of November of Rev. A. N. Wyckoff as pastor of Canal street church, and second Sabbath for installation of Rev. Dr. Nall as pastor of Prytania street church.

For the N. C. Presbyterian.

Presbybytery of Harmony met pursuant to adjournment, in the Midway church, and was opened with a sermon by Rev. Dr. Plumer, from Prov. xviii: 10. Twenty ministers and twenty-seven elders were present. Rev. J. A. Cousar was elected moderator and Rev. H. G. Gilland temporary clerk. Several important pastoral relations were dissolved, viz: that between Rev. D. McQueen, D. D., and the Sumterville church, of forty-three years standing; that between Rev. S. H. Hay and the Bethesda church, Camden, of twenty-eight years standing; and that between Rev. W. T. Thompson and the Hopewell church, of seven years standing. Rev. W. T. Thompson was dismissed to the Presbytery of Nashville. He has accepted an invitation to the Presbyterian church at Shelbyville, Tenn. Committees were appointed to organize two churches within the bounds of Presbytery. During the sessions of Presbytery Rev. R. D. Perry was installed pastor of Midway church. Five churches in Fairfield county signified their purpose to petition Synod to be set off to Bethel Presbytery. The Presbytery of Harmony expressed its approval of the contemplated change. Presbytery adjourned to meet at Darlington on Saturday before the second Sabbath in November to receive and, if the way be clear, install Rev. J. G. Law as pastor of the Darlington church. Rev. Dr. Plumer was appointed to preside and preach the sermon, Rev. J. S. Cozby to deliver the charge to the people, and Rev. H. M. Brearly to deliver the charge to the pastor. The next spring meeting of Presbytery will be held in Cheraw. W. A. Gregg, Stated Clerk.

For the N. C. Presbyterian.

Bethel Presbytery met at Shiloh church October 9th, 1879, and was opened with a sermon by Rev. J. H. Saye, moderator. During the session there were present sixteen ministers and nineteen ruling elders. Rev. F. Brantly was chosen moderator and Elder W. B. Thompson temporary clerk. Mr. J. W. McLure of Beth-Shiloh and Mr. J. P. Miller of Pleasant Grove churches were received as candidates for the Gospel ministry. Calls were presented from the churches of Warlton and Tirzah for the pastoral services of licentiate J. L. Williamson. He was examined on the usual branches and preached a trial sermon, all of which being satisfactory Presbytery agreed to ordain and install him pastor of said churches on Saturday before the first Sabbath in November. The pastoral relation between Rev. L. H. Wilson and the church at Yorkville was, by consent of parties, dissolved, and Bro. Wilson was dismissed to the Presbytery of Atlanta. Licentiate J. G. Henderson was dismissed to the Presbytery of London, Ontario, Canada, and licentiate H. C. Fennell to the care of Ennoree Presbytery. Reports from the churches were, for the most part, encouraging. A cheering report was heard from Rev. D. Harrison, who has been preaching since the last meeting at Carmel Hill, a point neglected for several years by Presbytery, and also from Rev. J. S. White, who recently preached there during protracted services. Elders James Hemphill, J. L. Harris and J. G. Lowry were appointed to secure for Presbytery a deed for Carmel Hill church property, and this church and the work connected with it were commended to the care of the Committee of Domestic Missions. A petition signed by ninety-one persons, asking for the organization of a church in the upper portion of York county was granted, and a similar request was made by the people in the vicinity of Blackstocks, which was not granted on the ground of present inexpediency. The Committee on Colportage made encouraging report of the work intrusted to their care. The good people of Beth-Shiloh and vicinity gave a cordial reception and generous hospitality to Presbytery, and in return enjoyed the opportunity of receiving great spiritual blessings from the sermons preached during the occasion. Peace and harmony prevailed, and Presbytery adjourned Saturday evening to meet at Beersheba church Thursday before the first Sabbath in April, 1880, at 11 o'clock a. m. S. C.

THE SYNOD OF KENTUCKY.

[Report of the Christian Observer condensed.]

The Synod met at Bowling Green, Ky. Rev. L. H. Blanton was elected Moderator. An invitation to visit the semi-centennial of the Synod of Cincinnati, on the 31st of October, inst., was accepted, and Rev. D. O. Davies, principal, and Rev. H. M. Scudder, alternate, were elected delegates to bear the fraternal salutations of the Synod of Kentucky.

The subject of Sabbath breaking and General Lawlessness occasioned a very earnest debate, which resulted in a committee being appointed to report on the subject. The committee, by its chairman, Dr. Robinson, presented a very able report which was adopted.

Rev. E. M. Richardson, Secretary of the Assembly's Committee on Education, addressed the Synod, and in response the presbyteries are called on to use all means in their power to secure more full and complete collections.

Rev. Dr. J. Leighton Wilson made an earnest talk on Foreign Missions. The Synod urged a more full consecration of our children and our substance to the extension of the Lord's kingdom; the regular observance of stated mission meetings; the increased circulation of the Missionary and other missionary periodicals; the organization of ladies missionary societies; the enlistment of the interest of Sunday School children in the foreign missionary work, and the introduction into Sunday School libraries of such missionary publications as are enumerated in the Missionary for December, 1878; and finally, the Synod pledged itself to an effort to secure a contribution of at least $1 a member (instead of 37 cents a member, as last year) from all our churches.

Rev. Dr. J. K. Hazen addressed the interest of the Committee of Publication, at Richmond, Va., and also spoke on the Sabbath school work. The Synod in response warns the people against vicious errors that may be disseminated in Sunday school papers not under the control of the Church, and renewed the expression of its confidence and interest in the general work of the Committee and recommends that work to the liberality of the congregations and people.

The report of the Committee on Systematic Beneficence showed that only half of the churches had assisted in the work, and that the aggregate contributions average but little more than a dollar a member. Appropriate action was taken in regard to evangelistic labor.

The Committee on Sabbath schools reported a series of very timely and appropriate resolutions.

The death at Louisville, Ky., of Mrs. Elizabeth W. Leyburn, widow and co-laborer of Rev. Geo. W. Leyburn, formerly missionary to Greece, was announced, and a resolution of reverence for her character and of sympathy for her relatives was adopted.

The next meeting of the Synod will be held at Georgetown, Ky., October 13th, 1880.

Rev. S. F. Tenny writes to the Texas Presbyterian Oct. 9, 1879: "We closed a meeting at this place on the 1st inst., which lasted two weeks. Three persons were received by examination. Several others we hope will be shortly received. Large congregations attended. Rev. J. DeWitt Burkhead, of Paris, Texas, preached about a week three times a day, and made a deep impression on the minds of the people. Dr. Byers assisted in the latter part of the meeting and expounded the truth with his usual ability. A Methodist brother also preached for us two nights with much ability.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

SOUTHERN.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Rev. James A. Waddell has changed his post-office address from Lexington to Ivy Depot, Albemarle county, Va.

The Presbytery of LaFayette, Mo., lately received Rev. J. A. D. Hughes, formerly a minister of the Protestant Episcopal Church.

In College church, Hampden Sidney, Va., of which Rev. C. White is pastor, on October 5th, one person was received on profession of faith and two by letter.

An interesting communion season was held in the church of Fredericksburg, Va., Sabbath, October 12th. The Rev. B. T. Lacy, D. D., preached in the morning to a large congregation, and six members were received upon confession of faith in Christ. The Rev. Dr. Brown preached at night. On the preceding Sabbath the pastor baptized ten little babes of his congregation.—Central Presbyterian.

Rev. J. M. Rice, pastor of the church at Covington, Va., in Montgomery Presbytery, has been in feeble health and did not feel equal to the duties of the late communion. A correspondent of the Central Presbyterian says: "Rev. W. F. Wilhelm came and preached with much acceptance on Friday night, and twice each on Saturday and Sabbath and Monday night. The large congregations listened with solemn attention. We had a delightful communion season. Long may the salutary impressions of the occasion continue and deepen. The session received one applicant into the full communion of the church, whereupon she, like Paul, having stood up was baptized. The congregation were pleased to see their pastor in their midst, though only able to place the water of baptism on the head of the maiden confessing Christ."

The Central Presbyterian says: "The Rev. Thomas T. Jones, pastor of Brunswick church, writes us: 'God's blessing came to the congregations at Union church in Brunswick county, in connection with the preaching and prayers of the brethren, who favored us with their attendance upon the recent meeting of East Hanover Presbytery at this church. After the adjournment two of the brethren, Rev. W. A. Campbell of Manchester and the moderator, Rev. R. D. Stimson of Northampton, remained with us until the following Tuesday, and preached most acceptably to our people. On Sabbath morning three persons, all children of the Covenant, were received into the communion of the church. Others were also deeply moved, several hoping that they had experienced a saving change of heart, who may in due time make public profession of their faith in Christ.'"

Rev. R. B. Monroe assisted the pastor, Rev. G. F. Storey, in preaching at Dry Creek church, Mississippi Presbytery. Recently there were fifteen additions to the church.

A correspondent writes to the Christian Observer: "At a service held in Suffolk, Va., on Monday night, October 6th, we received six persons into the Presbyterian Church. Of these, two were adults, and the remaining four children, who were brought forward by their parents and presented to the Lord, who once graciously said, 'Suffer little children to come unto me and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of God,' i. e., His Church on earth. The ceremony was peculiarly solemn and impressive." Rev. J. M. Rose, of Portsmouth, preached.

A protracted meeting, conducted at Mooresfield, Nicholas county, Ky., by the Rev. H. M. Scudder, assisted by Elder J. A. Hopper, of Perryville, was closed on the fourth Sabbath of September. There were ten additions to the membership of the Presbyterian church.—Christian Observer.

Rev. W. J. Lapsley writes from Troy, Ky., October 9th: "I occupied my pulpit at Troy last Sabbath for the first time since my vacation in September. The results of our late precious meetings still continue to come in. Last Sabbath there were two more additions on profession. Our weekly prayer meeting has been increasing in attendance and interest. We have organized a young men's prayer meeting, from which good results are hoped for."—Christian Observer.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

The Model Christian Worker, John Potter, by Rev. William P. Breed, D. D. 80 pages. Presbyterian Board of Publication, Philadelphia. 1879.

An admirable and intensely interesting biographical sketch of a useful, working Christian, who was born in 1803 and died in August, 1878. He began his work for the Lord at 17 years of age, and became widely known by public labors as a lay colporteur in Western Pennsylvania and Philadelphia. The book is fitted for encouraging and arousing God's children. Dr. Breed has arranged his material skilfully.

The Sabbath Month: Devotional thoughts for Young Mothers. By Louise Seymour Houghton. 168 pages. Presbyterian Board of Publication, Philadelphia. 1879.

A unique little book, containing thirty-one brief meditations: appropriate, suggestive, comforting, and filled with pious fervor. We know of nothing so suitable for mothers in their "Sabbath month," and so calculated to bring them "a time of refreshing." Mrs. Houghton deserves thanks for her "cup of cool water."

From the Presbyterian Board of Publication, Philadelphia, we have the following excellent new tracts, in neat 12 mo form for the pocket:

No. 190. John Potter and Uncle Bon. 4 pages. By Rev. W. P. Breed, D. D.

No. 191. What Becomes of the Second Commandment. 8 pages. By Rev. A. F. Dickson.

No. 192. Mose the Sexton, or a Talk About Popery. 36 pages. By Rev. T. W. Hooper, D. D.

No. 193. The Dignity of Labor or Christ as a Carpenter. 24 pages. By Rev. Samuel W. Fisher, D. D.

No. 194. Christians Commanded to Baptize their Children. 8 pages. By Rev. A. Marsh.

No. 196. The Call to Foreign Missionary Work. 12 pages. By Rev. Charles Hodge, D. D.

The Normal Teacher, J. E. Sherrill, editor and proprietor. Danville, Ind. September, 1879. Per year $1.

D. Appleton & Co., send us "Table Talk;" to which are added Imaginary Conversations of Pope and Swift, by Leigh Hunt. The price of the book in paper cover is only 30 cents. A very valuable little book it is.

DRUNKEN STUFF.

How many children and women are slowly and surely dying, or rather being killed, by excessive doctoring, or the daily use of some drug or drunken stuff called medicine, that no one knows what it is made of, who can easily be cured and saved by Hop Bitters, made of Hops, Buchu, Mandrake, Dandelion, &c., which is so pure, simple and harmless that the most frail woman, weakest invalid or smallest child can trust in them. Will you be saved by them? See other column

MILLINGTON, Kent Co., Md., June 12, 1877.
Messrs Polk, Miller & Co:
Please send me another lot of "Vest Pocket Cure." I have received great benefit from it already, and can recommend it to others cheerfully.
REV. THOS. W. BROWN, Balt. Conf.

DEATH OF MISS MARY B. PECK.—Miss Mary B. Peck died on the 15th inst. For more than a score of years she had been an invalid, and latterly for many months was confined to her couch. 'Twas her's in the dispensation of God's providence to suffer and to wait, and thus in uncomplaining submission she glorified Him. But after the weariness of suffering comes the Heavenly Rest; after the waiting comes the joyous meeting with Him who also suffered, that we might be saved.

MARRIED.

☞No notice of a marriage or death will be inserted unless accompanied by a responsible name, which is wanted not for publication but as a guaranty of good faith.

In Gaston county, October 7th, 1879, by Rev. J. J. Kennedy, Dr. FRANK ROBINSON and Miss LAURA E. REID.

By Rev. S. C. Littlepage, near Cincinnati, Walker county, Texas, on October 1st, Mr. CLAUDE B. SMITH and Miss FANNIE McJUNKIN. All of Walker county.

At Gravelly Hill, in Bladen county, on the 15th inst., by the Rev. A. McFadyen, Mr. CHARLES CLINTON CORBETT, to Miss ANNA, daughter of the late John D. Beatty.

At Davidson College, N. C., October 8th, 1879, by Rev. J. F. Latimer, Mr. WM. C. PEASE, of Columbus, Ga., to Miss M. ADDIE BURNEY.

At the residence of the bride's father, October 2d, by Rev. R. W. Boyd, Mr. J. A. LIPPARD and Miss BETTIE A., daughter of Jesse Powlass, of Rowan county.

October 14th, at the residence of the bride's father, J. Q. A. Leach, near Pittsboro, by the Rev. P. R. Law, Mr. N. McK. BRYAN and Miss E. S. LEACH.

In Rowan county, at the residence of the bride's father, October 16th, by Rev. R. W. Boyd, Mr. JAMES D. LAURENCE and Miss MARY ALICE, daughter of James Watson, Esq.

DIED.

☞Obituary notices must be paid for in advance. The first ten lines are inserted free. The excess over ten lines is charged for at the rate of ten cents per line. Correspondents can ascertain what an obituary will cost by counting eight words to a line, and multiplying each line by ten cents.

In Gray's Creek Township, Cumberland county N. C., at the residence of Mrs. Ellen Pate, of Diphtheria, on the 10th inst., CHARLES HILL, son of Dr. J. L. and M. L. McKay, aged 1 year, 8 months and 10 days.

With Him who said "Suffer little children to come unto me," Charlie is at rest. He was a bright, noble boy—the joy of a good mother, the pride of an indulgent father, and a favorite with all who knew him. The fairest flower of the fondest hopes of loving parents has been cut down, and Charlie was snatched from their fond embrace, leaving a vacancy around the family hearth, never to be filled; for his sweet voice ringing in the yard, and the sound of his little feet on the parlor floor, will be enjoyed by them no more forever. He is gone from them, to sleep on in peace 'till the morn of the resurrection, when the father and mother can kiss their boy again.

Weep not for Charlie—he is only gone
To meet you on the other shore;
"Forbid them not" was not to one,
For Christ has said it to one and more.

Prepare to meet him—he is at rest:
To him the crown has now been given;
No troubles wave across his breast,
He is happy now in heaven. J. F. B.

IN MEMORIAM.

Died—at Brevard, Transylvania county, N. C., on the 3d of October 1879, in the 5th year of his age, EDWARD VERNON MARTIN, youngest child of Rev. S. Taylor and Mrs. Belle Venable Martin.

While this dear child of the covenant possessed physical beauty and rare mental gifts, the most marked feature of his character was his unbounded affection. His life was a life of love, and it brought unbroken sunshine into the home in which God had placed him. The only sorrow he ever caused his parents was the sorrow of separation. It was beautiful to behold the power of grace in overcoming the curse of sin in the case of a little child. The promise which is to the believer and his children was verified. I have spent much time in brother Martin's family, and many times, as I have watched his daily life, and especially during his protracted sickness, I have felt assured that the graces of the Spirit were manifest.

The truths of the Bible, the ruin of sin, the redemption through Christ were favorite topics in his conversations with his parents. Frequently during family worship, he would stop the reading to ask an explanation of the passage read, and when visiting the family he would ask me to read his favorite passages at family worship. Though a child, he was a student of the Word. To the last, when we thought he was too weak to take part in the service, his little voice was heard in feeble notes uniting with his brothers and sisters and parents in repeating the Lord's prayer, which followed the special petitions. During his days of health, he told his father that he knew he was a sinner, and when asked how he could be saved from sin, he answered, "by Jesus."

In the early stages of his sickness, weeks before his death, and before he was supposed to be in a dangerous condition, he said he expected to die; and on another occasion, while here at my house, he said, "Papa, I don't think I will ever get well." His quiet submission to painful remedies, and his patient, uncomplaining endurance of prolonged pain, were beyond what I ever thought possible for a little child. We can only account for it by the presence of the Good Shepherd, who cares for the lambs. During the whole of his sickness, even when so weak that he could scarcely speak, he never failed to say "thank you" when any one smoothed his pillow, gave him a drink of water or performed any kind office for him. When cold with the chill of death he repeated after his mother, in tones of indescribable pathos and sweetness, the first four verses of his Psalm, the xxiii.

He told his father he was not afraid to die with Jesus. When his mother asked him, "Baby do you know the angels are coming to take you to heaven?" he answered, "Yes." His mother then said, "What will papa and mama do, darling, when you go to heaven?" Without any hesitation he replied, "you must come too." When, at the approach of the dawn of the day of his death, his pillows were smoothed for him, a little dove-like note was heard from his bed as he said, "Good night to all." After the power of speech had failed him, casting glances of indescribable tenderness at his father and mother, who were bending over him, from eyes whose expression no one could portray, he heaved a sigh, and in a moment, without a struggle, passed into the arms of the tender Shepherd, and was borne to rest within the fold.

"A brightness hath passed from the earth,
Yet a star is new-born in the sky;
And a soul hath gone home to the land of its birth,
Where are pleasures and fulness of joy!
Where its thirst shall be slaked with the waters that spring,
Like a river of light from the throne of the King."
W. H. D.

THE GREAT SUCCESS

Which has attended the sales of SCRIBNER'S MONTHLY and ST. NICHOLAS during the past year authorizes the publishers in making broader plans for the future. The regular edition of SCRIBNER'S MONTHLY has steadily increased from month to month, until it now averages about 100,000 copies,—an increase of twenty thousand within the year.

ST. NICHOLAS,

"THE WORLD'S CHILD-MAGAZINE,"

has also attained the great popularity it deserves. John G. Whittier wrote of it: "It is little to say of this magazine that it is the best child's periodical in the world." And that universal opinion is the same, not only in America, but in England, where it has been received with the highest praise. The London Daily News "wishes it could point out its equal in English periodical literature" and the Spectator has called it "the best of all children's magazines." In Paris, Monsieur Delagrave is to issue a monthly adaptation of ST. NICHOLAS in French, and a volume made up from ST. NICHOLAS is to be translated into Arabic for the delight of Moslem children.

BUY THE NOVEMBER NUMBERS

of both these magazine; they begin new volumes and are of wonderful beauty and excellence. Each has two frontispieces, and is permanently enlarged—ST. NICHOLAS is printed on heavier paper, with broader margins, and containes over sixty illustrations, and about thirty stories and poems.

A NEW ORLEANS NOVEL

of Creole life, by George W. Cable, author of "Old Creole Days," begins in SCRIBNER; "Confidence," by Henry James, Jr., is continued, and in addition to articles on art, short stories, etc., there are six papers of special interest to farmers, on "The Agricultural Distress in Great Britain;" "Small Fruits," by E. P. Roe; "Lawn-Trees," by Samuel Parson, etc., etc.

"THE REIGN OF PETER THE GREAT,"

by EUGENE SCHUYLER, is noted editorially. This splendid series of ILLUSTRATED HISTORICAL PAPERS, the greatest work of the sort yet undertaken by any popular magazine, will begin in the January issue and will continue for two years.

The November number has been delayed on account of the enlargement and increased editions. They may now be had of dealers, or will be sent by the publishers on receipt of price. Note that these numbers begin the volumes of each magazine.

SCRIBNER'S, $4 a year; 35 cents a number. ST. NICHOLAS, $3 a year; 25 cents a number.

Consumption Cured.

An old physician, retired from practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure for Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma, and Throat and Lung Affections, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative power in thousands of cases, has felt it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and a desire to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge to all who desire it, this recipe, in German, French, or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail by addressing with stamp, naming this paper, W. W. SHERAR, 149 Powers' Block, Rochester, New York.

Charlotte Institute.

THE next session begins September 10th, 1879, and ends June 8th, 1880.

No Institute ever made more rapid progress in securing the confidence and esteem of its patrons than this one during the past session. Before the end of the scholastic year the number of its pupils, attracted by the well-earned reputation of the school, increased to 117, exclusive of the adult ladies who availed themselves of the superior advantages here given in the departments of Music, Art, and Modern Languages. In no respect is this Institute inferior to any other first-class boarding-school in the Southern or Middle States. Such testimonials as will satisfy an one as to the high standard and thoroughness of the instruction here are published in the catalogue. These testimonials are peculiarly trustworthy, inasmuch as they are given by gentlemen engaged in teaching in well known schools and colleges of the highest grade, and who are therefore qualified to express an opinion in regard to educational institutions.

The total expense for the half session or term will be $125. This amount includes board, with washing, fuel, lights, furnished room and servants' attendance, tuition in all the English branches, Latin, with either French or German, Calisthenics, text books and stationery for school purposes. Pupils are not permitted to incur additional expense without permission of their parents. Parents are thus assured that their bills will not be greater than they expected.

Special arrangements and special terms for young ladies who wish to take only Music, Painting and Drawing, and Modern Languages, severally or collectively.

TALBOTT'S PATENT SPARK ARRESTER
The Invention of the Age.
It does not destroy the draft.
It does not interfere with cleaning the tubes.
It will not choke up, and requires no cleaning.
It requires no direct dampers to be opened when raising steam (dampers being objectionable as they may be left open and allow sparks to escape)
It requires no water to extinguish sparks, which, by condensation, destroys the draft. Besides, when water is used, if neglected, the efficiency is destroyed by evaporation of the water, and the boiler is kept in a filthy condition.
It is simple and durable and can be relied upon.
It can be attached to any boiler.
No planter should be without one of them. Insurance companies will insure gins and barns where the Talbott Engines and Spark-Arresters are used at same rate as charged for water or horse-power.

FOR THE FAMILY.

Autumn Voices.

Fading flowers whisper:
"Little ones farewell!
Will you miss our faces
From the hill and dell?
Will you dream about us
In the wintry night,
When the silent snowflakes
Hide the earth from sight?

Flying birdies warble:
"We are going, now;
Will you long to see us
On the blooming bough?
Though our airy journey
Far away must be,
Sweeter, brighter faces
We shall never see.

Silver brooklets murmur:
"Little ones good-by!
Winds are growing chilly,
Bitter days are nigh.
We shall miss your bright eyes
Peeping o'er the brim,
When in icy fetters
We lie hushed and dim"

"Flowers, birds, and brooklets," Little ones reply,
"Earth is sad and lonely
When you bid good-by.
We shall not forget you,
Never, never fear;
We'll be watching for you
Early in the year!"

—George Cooper, in The Nursery.

"Little Things."

"I like my nephew very much, and I think he is just the boy I want."

The speaker was Mr. John Graham, a merchant in one of our large cities. The person to whom he spoke was his brother, who had come on a visit from the West, bringing the nephew of whom the remark with which I have opened this little story was made.

"Harry is a manly boy," his father said, with pride, as he looked toward the lad, who was waiting on the croquet ground for his uncle to join him in a game. "I have brought him up to be honest and truthful. I do not think I ever know a boy in whose word I could put more implicit confidence than in his. If I have time with you, John, I hope you will see that the examples he has put before him are good ones. It is not only easy, but very natural for a boy to imitate the conduct of those about him. He does it unconsciously, often, and if that conduct is not what it ought to be he soon gets into bad habits."

"Oh, you may feel easy on that score, Dick," answered his brother. "If Harry comes into the store, I shall have him near me most of the time, and you can trust me can't you? I think you know what my habits are well enough to feel safe in leaving him to my special care."

"Yes, I think I do," answered the other. "I want my boy to grow up an honest, truthful man, and I certainly would not leave him with you if I did not have confidence in your ability to set him an example."

His brother joined Harry on the croquet ground, and they began their game. The boy and his uncle were very fond of the game, and both played to win. Harry's father had no fault to find with that. It was what he liked to see. He wanted his boy, in work or play, to go into it with his whole heart, and do the very best he could. But he did not want him to be so desirous of winning as to stoop to the use of unfair means. He wanted him to win honestly and fairly, or not at all. As he watched the game he saw several performances that startled him. More than once, when his ball was out of position for its wicket, he saw his brother move it until it was in position. Harry detected the cheat once or twice, and told his uncle that he had moved his ball. Without saying, in so many words, that he had not moved it, his uncle managed to convey that idea, and the play would go on. Harry made a skilful run and struck for the last wicket, but hit the wire, and the ball bounded back, stopping in such a shape that it would have been impossible for him to have driven it through when his play came, if he had not moved it a few inches. When his uncle was playing he gave it a push with his mallet, and succeeded in getting it into such a position that when his play came, he ran through the wicket and hit the post.

"You moved your ball, didn't you?" said his uncle; "I saw where it stopped, and thought that I had the advantage of you, as you would have to take one stroke to get into position, and that would throw the game into my hands."

But Harry protested, without telling what might be termed a "square lie"—though it was that in fact, and nothing less—that he had not meddled with his ball, and his uncle gave up as having been mistaken.

"Come here, Harry, I want to talk with you," said his father; and Harry came and sat down on the steps, and his uncle went off to the stables.

"Do you feel satisfied with the way in which you won that game?" Harry's father asked.

The boy's face flushed. "No, I don't" he said; "but uncle John cheated, and I had to, or I wouldn't have stood any chance at all."

"Does a dishonest action on the part of another justify one on our part?" asked his father, gravely.

"You don't call Uncle John dishonest, do you?" asked Harry, in surprise.

"Yes; what else could you call it?" asked his father. "Dishonesty is dishonesty in work or play. He cheated. He stole an advantage. He really denied having done so. You did the same. Can you call your conduct anything but stealing and telling a lie to cover up the theft?"

"No," answered Harry, after a moment's thought; "but I didn't think it could be so very bad, because—because—"

"Because what?" asked his father, as Harry hesitated.

"Because Uncle John's a member of the church, and I didn't think he'd cheat and—and deny it if it was wrong. It was only croquet, anyway, and that's why he did it, probably. If it had been anything else—"

"That is no excuse for him or for you," his father said. "It was the example that I looked at. Dishonesty is dishonesty, as I said, in work or play. If you can justify it when you are merely amusing yourself, you certainly will justify it when there is anything to be gained by it. If you cheat at one thing, it is quite likely you will cheat at another. If you tell a lie about your play, you will be apt to tell one about your work. You see what it leads to. It's the beginning of greater things. A little cheat or theft, and a little lie, prepare the way for larger ones which will be sure to follow."

"I think you are right; in fact, I know you are. But I didn't think it could be so bad, because Uncle John did it."

"Never do anything because some one else does it," said his father. "Ask yourself if it is right or wrong, and let your conscience guide you."

That night the brothers were sitting in the library together.

"I shall not leave Harry here," Mr. Graham said. "Shall I tell you why, John?"

"Yes, certainly," answered his brother.

"Well, I am afraid I can't trust you to set him an example."

"Can't trust me?" Mr. Graham faced about in great surprise. "What do you mean, Dick?"

His brother told him about the talk he had had with Harry over the morning game of croquet.

"But that was nothing but a game of croquet," said the merchant. "You don't mean to say you think I'd cheat or lie about my business, do you?"

"No, I don't," answered his brother. "You have formed honest business habits, I think. You formed them years ago, and they have become part of yourself. But with Harry it is different. He is a boy, and more easily influenced than you are. He is susceptible to all impressions. Unfair play at croquet would not end there. The playground is the world in miniature, and as the boy receives impressions there and forms habits, so will the world of work into which he is to go by-and-by find the man to be. The child is father of the man, they tell us truly. If Harry learned to cheat at croquet, and to lie about it, he would not hesitate to do the same in business, and the boy who grows up to manhood with those habits fixed upon him is on the road to ruin. What was done to-day may have been a trifling thing within itself, but it was laying a foundation for a structure of dishonesty, and I felt startled when I saw how readily Harry imitated your example."

I see it," his brother answered, "but I never thought of it in that way before. I ought to ask Harry's pardon for what was done thoughtlessly, and I will. Of course I knew it wasn't right, but I thought it was only a game of croquet,' and never took the trouble to think anything more about it."

Ah, that's it. Only a "little thing," and we think no further. If we did, we might set the world a better example than we do.—S. S. Times.

The Power of the Sea.

Next to the action of rain and rivers comes the gnawing effects of coast waves. The wave thunders against the cliff, which mocks its seemingly impotent rage by dashing it backward in a cloud of foam and spray, but it returns again and again to the charge until persistency wins the day. The east coast of England, which has for centuries been fast yielding to the attacks of the German Ocean, furnishes Sir C. Lyell with the majority of his illustrations in the interesting chapters upon the action of tides and currents. That eminent geologist tells us how towns and villages, marked by name in old maps, now lie fathoms deep beneath the waves. In one case, which came under his notice, houses had within the memory of living men stood upon a cliff fifty feet high, but in less than half a century houses and cliffs were all engulphed, and sea water deep enough to float a frigate occupied their site. As many as twelve churches, each further landward than the last, have been built in one parish, and all but one have been swallowed up by the sea. Churchyards have consequently been destroyed in many places, the corpses and skeletons having been washed out of their graves and floated away by the tide. Sir C. Lyell himself saw human remains protruding from the cliff at Reculvers, in Kent, in 1861. And he humorously alludes to a scene depicted by Bewick, which, he says, numerous points on that coast might have suggested: the graveyard of a ruined abbey, undermined and almost isolated by the sea, with a broken tombstone in the foreground, serving as a perch for the cormorants, and bearing the inscription, "To perpetuate the memory ——," one whose very name was obliterated, and whose monument was ready to fall into the waves. And he aptly, though somewhat sarcastically, suggests that such a tombstone would have been a fit tribute to the memory of "some philosopher" who had taught "the permanency of existing continents," the "era of repose," or the "impotence of modern cause."—Belgravia.

Lightning Rods.

In an interesting article in the Building World it is stated that there is in Carinthia a church which was so often struck by lightning that at length it became the custom to close it during the summer months. This continued until in 1778 the church was rebuilt and provided with a suitable lightning conductor, since which time the building has been struck but few times and has suffered but little damage. It was at one time held that the best way to protect a building was to repel the lightning from it, and as glass is one of the best non-conductors a thick ball was placed upon the top of the spire of Christ Church, Doncaster, England, but in 1836 lightning struck the church, shattering the ball and seriously damaging the spire. The carrying out of a theory which in this case proved so disastrous has had a happier result in the Houses of Parliament, London, where Sir W. Snow Harris, who was charged with protecting the building, carried the flat copper bands which were used for lightning conductors behind the plastering of the walls; and Faraday caused a spiral channel, following the course of the stairs from top to bottom, to be cut in the granite of the lighthouse on Plymouth breakwater, in which was laid a massive copper lightning rod. One of the best instances of what may be called natural protection is afforded by the London Monument. This column, some two hundred feet high, is crowned by a bronze flame, which typifies the great fire of London; this flame is in contact with the bars of the iron cage in which it was found necessary to inclose the balcony at the top, to prevent persons from throwing themselves over, and the bars in their turn connect with the rail of the balcony and the hand-rail of the staircase which descends to the ground. It is useless to try to insulate the vane spindle or finial upon a tower or spire by using glass rings; it is better to make this rod the upper part of the lightning conductor. The earth end of a lightning conductor should be carried to continually damp earth or running water, but not to a stone-lined well or cistern.—Scientific American.

The Politeness of the Saxons.

The Saxons are a very polite people—so over polite that they not unfrequently bring down ridicule upon themselves. It used to be told in Dresden that a stranger in the city was one day crossing the bridge that spans the Elbe, and asked a native to be directed to a certain church which he wished to find. "Really, my dear sir," said the Dresdener, bowing low, "I grieve greatly to say, but I cannot tell you." The stranger passed on, a little surprised at this voluble answer to a simple question. He had proceeded but a few rods when he heard hurried footsteps behind him, and turning, saw the same man running to catch up with him. In a moment his pursuer was by his side, his breath nearly gone, but enough left to say, "My dear sir, you asked me how you could find the church, and it pained me to say that I did not know; just now I met my brother, and asked him, but I grieve to say that he did not know either."—Scottish American Journal.

Carlyle in London.

Thomas Carlyle belongs to a small band of men of letters who in his own words "have travelled through life in calm and virtuous majesty, and are hallowed in our memories not less for their conduct than their writings." Amidst the tumults and changes of a feverish time, and the quarrels and calamities of petty souls, he has risen above all jealousy, preserved an absolutely unblemished name, and enjoyed that peace of serene activity, which is the most substantial happiness attained on earth. Coming to London in early manhood, he established himself in an unpretentious house in a quiet street in Chelsea—a house sufficient, but not more than sufficient, with room for his books and such friends as might visit, not his house but himself, and there he has remained for forty years, looking with perfect indifference, too profound for conscious scorn, upon the palatial buildings constantly rising to west of him and to north of him, in which successful shop-keepers, stock jobbers, railway contractors, bubble company proprietors, and other favorites of fortune and the age, had their reward. That small house has been his home and ideal palace, in which, as he had well assured himself, he would partake of all the real joys that flesh is heir to. Thatched in from the wind and rain, paying his way, doing his work, he satisfied all his real wants, and had within him no raging crew of vanities to appease, such as have tormented Voltaire and other authors, like those dogs that Milton saw at hell-gate yelling in eternal hunger round Sin, their mother. If any Prince Consort, English aristocrat, American humorist, German statesman, or other loyal admirer, wished to see him, the admirer could make his way to Cheyne-row, Chelsea. It was of infinite importance for Carlyle to have the approval of the judge in his own breast; of infinite importance also to have the approval of the Eternal Maker; it was of some importance, but of very little in comparison what the great body of his countrymen thought of him; it was of no importance at all what the leaders of fashion thought. The impertinence of a cross or a ribbon, offered him in his old age by "him they call Dizzy," he could quietly, not ungraciously, put aside; the more appropriate honor of a place in the Prussian Royal Order for Merit he could graciously accept. He was "king of himself and of his world," as he said of Goethe; able at all times to consume his own smoke; firm in that silent, modest, yet self-sufficing and unconquerable pride, which is as knightly armour to defend and as kingly purple to a man. His life has been in the plainest sense practical, and yet it has been ideal and sublime. —Peter Bayne.

Expense of Railroad Cars.

The following figures are given regarding the cost of car building by one of the leading firms engaged in this branch of manufacture. The average price of box cars is from $400 to $450, while in 1872 they were as high as $1,200. A milk car costs about $100 more. A baggage car truck and a passenger car truck are of about the same expense. The price of a baggage car varies from $2,000 to $2,500. The cheapest style of Wagner's drawing-room cars may be made for $8,000, the usual price being $12,000. This includes all the furnishing. The cheaper drawing-room cars, four wheels, are made for $10,000, while ordinary mail cars cost from $2,000 to $3,000; distributing cars are more expensive. Cars for the New York Elevated Road cost from $2,500 to $3,000. The ordinary passenger cars cost $4,200; the last built for the Hudson River Road cost $5,400, which included a heater and some extra fixtures. Small cars for carrying ore cost $200.

An Unlucky Color.

Under the vigorous administration of James IV. of Scotland the young Earl of Caithness incurred the penalty of outlawry and forfeiture, for revenging an ancient feud. On the evening preceding the battle of Flodden, accompanied by three hundred young warriors, arrayed in green, he presented himself before the King, and submitted to his mercy. This mark of attachment was so agreeable to that warlike prince that he granted an immunity to the Earl and all his followers. The parchment on which this immunity is inscribed is said to be still preserved in the archives of the Earls of Caithness, and is marked with the drumstrings, having having been cut out of a drumhead, as no other parchment could be found in the army. The Earl and his gallant band perished to a man in the battle of Flodden; since which period it has been reckoned unlucky in Caithness to wear green or cross the Ord (a huge mountain betwixt Caithness and Sutherland) on a Monday, the day of the week on which the chieftain advanced into Sutherland, on his way toward the South.

The first inquiry of a woman after marriage should be, "How shall I continue the love I have inspired? How shall I preserve the heart I have won?" Gentle lady, at the present moment your husband thinks you are the loveliest, the gentlest of beings; destroy not the illusion—be lovely still—be gentle still.

WORM SPECIFIC OR VERMIFUGE.

SYMPTOMS OF WORMS.

THE countenance is pale and leaden-colored, with occasional flushes, or a circumscribed spot on one or both cheeks; the eyes become dull; the pupils dilate; an azure semicircle runs along the lower eye-lid; the nose is irritated, swells, and sometimes bleeds; a swelling of the upper lip; occasional headache, with humming or throbbing of the ears; an unusual secretion of saliva; slimy or furred tongue; breath very foul, particularly in the morning; appetite variable, sometimes voracious, with a knawing sensation of the stomach, at others, entirely gone; fleeting pains in the stomach; occasional nausea and vomiting; violent pains throughout the abdomen; bowels irregular, at times costive; stools slimy; not unfrequently tinged with blood; belly swollen and hard; urine turbid; respiration occasionally difficult, and accompanied by hiccough; cough sometimes dry and convulsive; uneasy and disturbed sleep, with grinding of the teeth; temper variable, but generally irritable, &c.

Whenever the above symptoms are found to exist,

DR. C. McLANE'S VERMIFUGE will certainly effect a cure.

IT DOES NOT CONTAIN MERCURY in any form; it is an innocent preparation, not capable of doing the slightest injury to the most tender infant.

The genuine DR. McLANE'S VERMIFUGE bears the signatures of C. McLANE and FLEMING BROS. on the wrapper.

—:o:—

DR. C. McLANE'S
LIVER PILLS

are not recommended as a remedy "for all the ills that flesh is heir to," but in affections of the liver, and in all Bilious Complaints, Dyspepsia and Sick Headache, or diseases of that character, they stand without a rival.

AGUE AND FEVER.

No better cathartic can be used preparatory to, or after taking Quinine.

As a simple purgative they are unequaled.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

The genuine are never sugar coated.

Each box has a red wax seal on the lid with the impression DR. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS.

Each wrapper bears the signatures of C. McLANE and FLEMING BROS.

Insist upon having the genuine DR. C. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS, prepared by Fleming Bros., of Pittsburgh, Pa., the market being full of imitations of the name McLane, spelled differently but same pronunciation.

PREVENT YELLOW FEVER!

It has been well proved that prevention is better than cure. A very simple and effective preventative for Yellow Fever and other fevers has been found in BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTERS. They were used during last season in New Orleans very successfully. The common method of using them was to apply them over the stomach, changing them every week. They are one OF THE MOST ACTIVE ANTISEPTICS and seem to destroy the poison. One reason why they are of special value is that they stimulate the digestion, and thus enable the system to overcome the influence of the malarial poison. They are a cheap and almost certain preventative. Ask your physician about them. Benson's Capsine Plasters are a sure preventative and cure for chills and fever if worn as above. Price 25 cents.

COMMENTARIES ON PARTS OF THE NEW TESTAMENT.

NO. XII.

1. ON PAUL'S EPISTLES.

Rev. L. C. Vass, Newbern, N. C.:

It will be convenient to group the Epistles, not only according to authors but also as to relative size of those of Paul.

2. On Paul's larger Epistles. (1) Romans.

(a) Dr. Hodge's work has long been in use by many ministers. It is a good model for such a work, and an excellent aid to teach how to study. With his usual clearness, and with the aid of his accumulated stores of learning, Dr. H. has, in moderate compass, presented a full exposition of the apostle's masterly epistle. If any object to the predominant importance appearing on the dogmatic teaching, let him remember that the apostle's discussion is replete with dogma. Whoever desires to find the scriptural basis of the Calvinistic scheme will not look in vain in these pages.

(b, c). Stuart's and Barnes' works on this book were published before Dr. H.'s. Their selections from their understandings of the results of critical examinations of converted passages were, doubtlesly, conscientiously stated. But it does not follow that either the criticism or the exposition were faultless. Those who wish to know the ablest representations of Paul's teachings which are divergent from Calviniatic views will find them in these volumes.

(d). Tenot on Romans presents a paraphrase of each verse in order and adds notes at the close of the volume, thus making a book not very convenient for reading in order, or for reference. For a brief summary it is not without value.

(e). Turner's Commentary is alike creditable to his skill in interpreting the Greek text and his ability in sustaining interpretations which set forth, in a sound and edifying manner, the doctrines of grace. There is no uncertain utterance on topics respecting which too many "other clergy" of the Episcopal Church chose to be silent, or give vent to views derogatory of the character and government of God.

(f g h). Locke, McKnight and Trollope are fair specimens of the tinge of Arminian views, found in the efforts of men to explain away what so many esteem the "hard things" of our "beloved brother Paul." Take one example: Rom. ix: 16, "Him that willeth" denotes Isaiah's desire to bless Esau, and "him that runneth" Esau's running to find agreeable food for Isaiah. This is from Trollope.

(i j). Meyer and Tholuck are examples of a class of German writers on the Bible, who, while not fully in accord with us in interpretations which clearly sustain Calvinistic symbols, do not so pervert their sound and extensive learning as to mislead the careful student. They are both excellent specimens of writers who exhibit great diligence in investigating truth and candor in its statement.

(k). Forbes' Analytical Commentary is a novel application of the "parallelism," a distinguishing feature of Hebrew poetry to the interpretation of prose writings. The author professes general agreement with the bulk of Calvinistic interpreters as to the great doctrines of the epistle, and claims for his peculiar method of developing truth some decided advantages.

(l). Dr. Plumer's bulky work, and also that on the Epistle to the Hebrews, evince the same laborious enterprise and present very much the same kind of results. The special advantage of this work is that they supply to those who cannot procure more than one commentary a substitute, as to information, for several.

(m). Godwin, in a 12mo. volume, thick paper and large type, has taken just the opposite course to the preceding. The work is well calculated to suit those whose time and opportunities are limited. They may obtain a bird's eye view of the teachings of the apostle, both in the use of the writer's summaries and his notes on important passages. He gives his views with apparent candor, and yet one can hardly avoid and impression that he is all the time aiming to be as modorately Calvinistic as possible, and presents his opinions as if afraid of being accused of Calvinism.

3. Epistles to the Corinthians.

Besides the excellent work of Dr. Hodge there are few monographs on these Epistles worthy of notice.

4. Epistle to the Hebrews.

On this, besides Dr. Plumer's, mentioned already, we have—

(a). Owen, learned, minutely critical, eminently practical. For one who has leisure and desires to study everything connected with the Epistle this work is exceedingly valuable, though to recommend Owen is very much like recommending sunlight. There will be found, however, that which characterizes all his writings, a tiresome succession of divisions and subdivisions, repeated over and over till the reader finds himself almost lost in his effort to procure some hold on the main topic under consideration. For a book of reference none is superior.

(b). Stuart and Barnes are not as unsafe guides in their work on this Epistle as in some others. Students, however, will find in their full exegetical comments materials which at once give good examples of the labor and care with which the Word of God ought to be expounded, and a fund of information which may often be useful in leading them to results sounder than those reached by these writers.

(c). McCaul has published a unique but most instructive work by bringing to bear on the interpretation of the Epistle a vast fund of Rabbinic learning. It is obvious that such an Epistle calls for such material, and Mr. McCaul has apparently made a judicious and successful use of it in illustrating as well as in explaining the words of the apostle.

(d). Dr. Sampson's lamented death deprived us of his full as well as mature thoughts on much of this Epistle. But the posthumous volume, prepared by the editor with scrupulous fidelity to the author's manuscript, presents a constant testimony to the great loss sustained by our Church when Dr. S. was called away, in the maturity of his scholarly accomplishments. Every Southern minister will do well for himself and honor himself in procuring a book most eminently creditable to sound Southern scholarship and piety.

(e). To Turner on the Hebrews the terms in which his work on Romans may be commended are fully appropriate. It may be noted too that in this Epistle, which sets forth the shadowy and typical character of the Old Testament institutions of worship, Dr. Turner, though an Episcopalian, seems to have found no authority for the perpetuation of the office of "priest" in the Christian dispensation.

(f). Steward's work on this Epistle is rather a full, continuous exposition, which, however, shows the fruit of diligent labor and discriminating exegesis. It is a posthumous publication, edited by the loving hands of a widow and orphan daughter. Had the author lived to publish it some portions might have been fuller and more minute in exposition. But as it is the pleasing style and pious tone and striking suggestions together give it deserved confidence and power for good.

(g). Wittichius is another of the writers of the Reformation period, valuable as an evidence of the earnestness with which they studied the Scriptures, and from this study brought forth those imperishable symbols of faith which stand as the guide of millions in the study and foundation of the great truths of Redemption.

2. On Paul's minor Epistles.

(a). Dr. Eadie on Galatians, Ephesians, Colossians and Philippians leaves really little room or need for any other exposition. Dr. E. is the prince of Biblical expositors. In exegesis a full match for the best foreign critic, in clear and forcible exposition, combining explication and application, unequaled since the days of Calvin and in suggestive enlargement of the thoughts of the apostle, the best aid to the student who wishes to learn the use of scripture-expository preaching. The apologists and advocates of rationalistic views are courteously but conclusively put aside and in the hands of one who seems to have imbibed the spirit of the great apostle, as well as his sound logical acumen and warm Christian sentiment, the words of truth are laid open with convincing power and evangelical application.

(b c). Ellicott on Thessalonians, Galatians and the pastoral epistles, and Lightfoot on Galatians and Philippians, are excellent contributions from two of the best scholars of the English Church to the commentaries of our day, in which the materials gathered by German scholarship are so admirably made serviceable in overthrowing German rationalism.

(d). Benson on the Epistles to the Thessalonians, the pastoral and the catholic epistles, is an excellent specimen of the students of his day (1699-1762), who, as Dissenters, shut out from the opportunities enjoyed by Churchmen, still attained great ability as expounders of Scripture. A decided Calvinistic training would not have derogated from the excellence of these "paraphrases and notes." His sensible views on the laws of interpretation were far in advance of many of his day.

3. On the Catholic Epistles.

There is only space to mention Leighton on 1 Peter, a work of established character, and Demarest, a writer of our own day and country, on 1 and 2 Peter, of very creditable performance and full of excellent truth, well set forth in exposition, both critical and practical.

4. On the Book of Revelations.

There remains space for brief mention of Hengstenberg, whose elaborate work appears to have opened a new method of treating this wonderful work, which Dr. Ramsay of Lynchburg, Va., most ably carried out in his expository lectures on eleven chapters, showing the bearing of the book on the exhibition of God's dealings with opposers of His work, in and by His Church, through time.

On many works, as Brown, McGhee, Lille, Chalmers and Haldam, which are rather lectures and discourses, textual or topical, on Ephesians, Peter, Romans, &c., no remarks are offered, as they hardly fall into a list of commentaries.

With thanks to you and the readers of these notes, I am yours truly, B. M. SMITH.

For the N. C. Presbyterian.

AMONG THE TOMBSTONES.

CONCORD, N. C., Oct. 11, 1879.

MR. EDITOR: On the new Salisbury road, about half way from this town to Salisbury and about two miles to the west of the road going from here, was once a Presbyterian church. More than a hundred years ago the Andersons, the Lynches, the Longs, the Millers, the Hayeses, the Hendersons (not the Salisbury family) and the McPhersons met here to worship. This church was established before any of the Lutheran churches in Rowan, and was called by the early German settlers the "English church" to distingnish it from their own. I know from one trustworthy witness now living, and aged 75 years, who was born and raised within three miles of the place, that preaching had ceased there at his earliest recollection. From another trustworthy witness now living, and 81 years of age, I learn that he was on the ground sixty-two years ago and that the church building was then rotting down. From a lady who died sixteen years ago, aged 84, I learned that she herself was baptized at this church and that it was a Presbyterian church, and that all the members were Scotch, and that the colony was surrounded by a German population. The name of this church was "Crystal Spring," on account of the excellency of the water which a large, bold spring on the ground then furnished. But there is no spring there now. The same silent, sombre forest is there yet, but every trace of the spring has long since disappeared. And so, too, have the people who once worshipped here, and their descendants also. Not even the name of any member of this early colony now remains in this region, nor is there now to be found a Presbyterian within a radius of five miles. Whence came they? Who preached to them? Where did they go? There is in the graveyard there an old tombstone of William McPherson, "who departed this life September ye 14th, 1777, aged 41 years."

Among the other tombstones is one of polished granite, eight inches wide and eighteen to twenty inches in height, from which I have transcribed the following, giving it line for line here as it stands on the stone. The lettering is in good condition yet, and there was no trouble to make it out correctly:

WARICH GEBHRN
DEN IOC DOB
ER UND WI
ETER ZUR ER
TERN GEBRA
CHT IM IAHR
1792 SEPT
EMBER TN
14 DANIEL
CORREL BER
EITEI CHUN.

It might be well enough for Bro. Rumple to look up this old church ground. It belongs to the Presbyterians and they ought to take care of it. At least those of us who have dead buried there think so.

Respectfully, WM. M. COLEMAN.

REMARKS BY THE EDITOR.

In consequence of the lack of punctuation and the very bad spelling—sometimes important vowels being omitted—the inscription is difficult to decipher, but one of our German merchants, a fine scholar and linguist, furnishes the following, which is, without doubt, a correct translation:

"In the year 179—, I was born the 1st day of October, and was brought back to earth in the year 1792, the 14th September. Daniel Correl. Plant out oaks."

ORIGIN OF THE INQUISITION.

We must dwell a little on the events of 1229. This year a council was held at Toulouse, under the Papal Legate, the Cardinal of St. Angela. The foundation of the Inquisition had already been laid. Innocent III and St. Dominic share between them the merit of this good work. In the year of the fourth Lateran, 1215, St. Dominic received the Pontiff's commission to judge and deliver to punishment apostate and relapsed and obstinate heretics. This was the Inquisition, though lacking as yet its full organization and equipment. That St. Dominic died before it was completed alters not the question touching his connection with its authorship, though of late a vindication of him has been attempted on this ground, only by shifting the guilt to his Church. The fact remains that St. Dominic accompanied Simon de Montford's armies, that he delivered the Albigenses to the secular judge to be put to death—in short, worked the Inquisition so far as it had received shape and form in his day. But the Council of Toulouse still further perfected the organization and developed the working of this terrible tribunal. It erected in every city a Council of Inquisitors consisting of one priest and three laymen, whose business it was to search for heretics in towns, houses, cellars and other lurking places, as also in caves, woods, and fields, and to denounce them to the bishops, lords or their bailiffs. Once discovered, a summary but dreadful ordeal conducted them to the stake. The houses of heretics were to be razed to their foundations, and the ground on which they stood condemned and confiscated—for heresy, like the leprosy, polluted the very stones, and timber, and soil. Lords were held responsible for the orthodoxy of their estates, and so far also for those of their neighbors. If remiss in their search the sharp admonition of the Church soon quickened their diligence. A last will and testament was of no validity unless a priest had been by when it was made. A physician suspected was forbidden to practice. All above the age of fourteen were required on oath to abjure heresy, and to aid in the search for heretics. As a fitting appendage to these tyrannical acts, and a sure and lasting evidence of the real source whence that thing called "heresy," on the extirpation of which they were so intent, was derived, the council condemned the reading of the Holy Scriptures. "We prohibit," says the fourteenth canon, "the laics from having the books of the Old and New Testament, unless it be at most that any one wishes to have from devotion a psalter, a breviary, for the divine offices, or 'The Hours of the Blessed Mary,' but we forbid them in the most express manner to have the above books translated into the vulgar tongue."—The History of Protestantism by the Rev. Dr. Wylie.

VISIT THE PASTOR.

The end to be accomplished by pastoral visiting in many cases can be more effectually gained by people coming to the pastor than by his going to them. There will be something in the simple act of their seeking him that will do them good. The Christian who, of his own choice, courts an interview with his pastor will talk much more freely and honestly than if the pastor goes after him. We have paid hundreds of visits to unconverted persons—some known to be interested about their souls—without ever any assurance that our visit did good; but we can recall but few cases in which persons came to us as inquirers after the way of life who did not find the Savior.

We believe heartily in visiting the pastor. It is an inspiration to him. It saves him time. It affords better opportunity for a calm and prayerful interview than can usually be had at one's house or place of business. It always pays the pastor to teach the people to come to him. They may be slow at first; but once worked up to it, they will see its advantage and enjoy it. Besides its other desirable features, this plan will remove all excuse for complaining of the pastor, if he does not visit. If his people really wish to see him and are well they know where and when to find him.

Every pastor should have it understood that he has a place and time when he can be seen by those who desire to confer with him on spiritual questions. As a rule, we believe it best, in the city, for the place to be at the house of God, as many will meet him there that could never pinch up courage to enter his private house. While a pastor should always be accessible to any who need his spiritual counsels, it is best to name his hour for seeing visitors. This will encourage the timid to come, prevent disappointments, and keep off intruders.

Let the pastor remember that, in training his flock to look to him in the moment of need, he does a better deed than if he should teach them to expect him to be perpetually looking after them. He is a wise shepherd that can so teach his sheep that, whenever the wolf or tempest comes, they will run to him for shelter. It is rarely a pastor's duty to pay official calls to one who can be induced to call on him.—Religious Herald.

THERE IS AN EYE.

There is an Eye that never sleeps
Beneath the wing of night;
There is an Ear that never shuts
When sinks the beams of light.

There is an Arm that never tires
When human strength gives way;
There is a Love that never fails
When earthly loves decay

That Eye is fixed on seraph throngs;
That Ear is filled with angel's songs;
That Arm upholds the worlds on high;
That Love is throned beyond the sky.

PYRAMIDAL RELIGION.

The new Pyramidal Religion receives something of a buffet from the hands of Professor R. A. Proctor in the September Contemporary: but first let us answer the question which will naturally arise, What is the Pyramidal Religion? The Pyramidal Religion is nothing less than a bit of fetich worship of the great Pyramid of Cheops. When Prof. Piazzi Smyth, some few years ago, visited the Pyramid, he undertook its complete measurement, and gave to the world some noteworthy results. Among other things, he found in it the square of the circle; he discovered that the vertical line falling from the apex to the base of the Pyramid was exactly the one-hundredthousandth of the polar diameter of the earth; that the Pyramid was placed on an exact meridianal line. But he did not stop there. He discovered that the larger of the two galleries measured a little over four thousand inches, and the lesser eighteen hundred and eighty inches, and that there was a deep well sunk below the Pyramid: whereupon Prof. Smyth concluded that the larger gallery was a measure of time for the old dispensation before Christ—4,004 years, each inch in the gallery indicating one year of time. Then, as the large gallery leads to the small, he includes the small gallery to represent the Christian epoch, and as it is 1,880 inches long, why, next year the Christian dispensation will come to an end, and we shall all have to order our ascension robes: as to the deep well,—what does that typify but the bottomless pit? But the reader will naturally ask, How came the Pyramid to prophesy the length of the Old Testament and New Testament dispensation; how came it to pass that the Egyptians symbolized the polar diameter of the earth when the spheroidity of the earth was unknown to the Egyptians? Prof. Smyth answers—indeed, it is the only answer he can give—that the men who set up the great work builded better than they knew; he concludes that it is a history of the past and a prophecy of the future that the Lord caused the Pyramid to be constructed, and he inspired the heathen of those days to build it as an everlasting sign and witness for Him; and Prof. Smyth quotes the propet Isaiah as referring directly to the Pyramid. This, then, with a good deal more which might be mentioned, constitutes the Pyramidal Religion, of which there are adherents in this country among the clergy and laity: some have even produced some books on the subject, although, as one has simply been made of Prof. Piazzi Smyth's book, they do not call for mention. As we have said, Prof. Proctor takes issues on some, if not all these points. He finds that the Pyramid does not lie on an exact meridianal line; that the length of the large gallery in inches does not conform to the years of the Old Dispensation, as held to by the best authorities; and the Professor might have added—although he does not—that this is really the year 1882 instead of 1879—an error of some three years existing in the present chronology—so that according to the Pyramidal Religion, we ought to have seen the end of the New Dispensation two years ago. Prof. Proctor concludes that the Pyramid was built for astronomical purposes; the gallery, constructed at an angle of 30 degrees, was for the purpose of recording the position of the North Star—though while admitting that the gallery was constructed "with great skill," he says that there is demonstrable error in the calculations of the builders: the true level was secured, he thinks, by flooding the chamber with water, which was turned off into the deep well—Professor Smith's "bottomless pit!" "It is certain," says Prof. Proctor, in conclusion, "that the Pyramid was constructed for astronomical observations, and I conceive it to be utterly unreasonable to imagine that the costly inferior fittings and arrangements were intended to subserve no other purpose than to be memorials, and that too not until, in the course of thousands of years, the whole mass of the Pyramid had begun to lose the exactness of its original figure." There never was a more perfect craze than the new theories based upon supposed data of the construction of the great Pyramid; we say supposed data, for it is clear in this matter Prof. Smyth's conclusions hold the same relation to facts that many a thought does to the wish that first fathered it. On the whole, the outlook of the apostles of the new Pyramidal Religion is not very favorable.—Christian at Work.

REVIVALISTS.

Some of our modern evangelists—more properly rambling revivalists—are adopting methods of questionable propriety, to say the least, in conducting their meetings. We do not refer so much to the order of exercises and the mode of worship, as we do to the doctrines taught and the plans adopted to get men, women, and children to make confession of conversion. The object with some of these revivalists, unless they are totally misrepresented, seems to be to report large numbers of professions. Sinners are told that they have nothing to do but to stand up in the congregation as a declaration of their purpose to change their course of life, or come forward and give their hands to the preacher as the open profession of faith in Christ. It often turns out that persons under a momentary impulse, stand up or come forward, as the case may be, and are instantly enrolled as new converts. This step is often taken by persons who have had no deep convictions of sin, and who have not sincerely repented. The whole of it amounts to a transient emotion, and nothing more. The heart is unchanged, and after the singing and praying and the excitement of the protracted meeting comes to an end the misled victims of the false teaching fall back into their former habits and bring a reproach upon revivals and the cause of Christ.

The defect is in the institutions given. It is all a surface work; the conscience has not been probed. The exceeding sinfulness of sin has not been brought home to the heart.—The bitter cry, "God, be merciful to me a sinner," has not been extorted. The preacher has dwelt almost exclusively on the love of God, the death of Jesus, the invitations of the gospel, and the joy of heaven. He has narrated some touching incidents and appealed to the sensibilities of his hearers. Under a momentary impulse, men and women and children are ready to stand up or to come forward and give the hand to the preacher as a confession of a desire to be Christians. As a preliminary step this may all be very well; but it is premature to count all as genuine converts who have gone only thus far.

We have no authority to make the ways of salvation too easy. The sinner should feel his guilt, confess and forsake his sins and fully gain his consent to deny himself, take up his cross and follow Jesus. Confessing publicly a desire to become a Christian has its value, but this, of itself, is not enough. The right eye must be plucked out. Favorite sins must be given up. The crucifixion of the flesh with its affections and lust is involved in becoming a Christian. Nothing short of spiritual regeneration, by the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven is true conversion. We must be born again—born, from above; born of God; pass from death into life; become a new creature, or the work of conversion is defective.

It is not intended by anything that is here said to be cast any unjust censure upon rambling revivalists; nor do we intend by any manner of means to convey the idea that there are not many genuine conversions in the meeting conducted by the class of men and women of whom we write. Nor, yet again are we to be understood as entering any objection to a system of evangelism carried on by any of the churches in our land. On the contrary, we heartily approve of the plan of sending out men under the sanction and by authority of the church. But what we have to say is, that these evangelists should be amenable to some conference, synod or association—that they should be answerable to some ecclesiastical tribunal for the doctrines they preach and the manner in which they conduct their meetings.—Richmond Christian Advocate.

THE SAD PRAYER-MEETING

The prayer-meeting to which we refer has not yet been held. It may be some time before it takes place. The account of it may be found in the 6th chapter of Revelations: "And they said to the mountains and rocks, Fall on us, and hide us from the face of Him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb." This is the prayer that will be offered.

And there will be a great multitude at that meeting. Many prayer-meetings are very thin. Few are present. Not so the one before us; millions will not be there. Distinguished persons will be present—those who usually have little or nothing to do with prayer-meetings. But they will come to this meeting. We have express mention of this: "And the kings of the earth, and the great men, and the rich men, and the mighty men, said, Fall on us," etc. They may never have been a meeting where there was prayer before. But they cannot stay away from this.

There will be great emotion in that prayer meeting. It will not be a dull, and drowsy, and formal. There will be the deepest feeling. Men must have the most terrible emotions when they are led to ask the rocks and mountains to fall on them. There will be no stupidity in that meeting.

They will all pray. Some prayer-meetings have but two or three that take part in them. Not so in this meeting. Not only the great men shall pray, but "every bondman and every freeman." All will pray. And what a prayer! They so ill treated the blessed God here, that they now despair of any mercy. Hence, the dreadful prayer before us, "Hide us from the face of Him who sitteth on the throne." All who persist in treating Christ unworthily are on the way to this meeting. They restrain prayer now, but they will pray at this meeting.

Reader, if you have little to do with prayer in this world—if no domestic or sacred altar is fragrant with the incense of your supplications—you are certainly on your way to this meeting. If you do not pray here, you assuredly will pray there.

Be persuaded to avoid that meeting. There will be enough there without you. Let the blessed duty of prayer be your joy here from day to day. Love it; watch in it; persevere in it. In faith and humility carry it on. Let nothing but death stop you. Then, while others pray for the rocks and mountains to hide them for the face of Him that sitteth on the throne, you will sing, "Worthy is the Lamb that hath redeemed me unto God by his blood."—Presbyterian Journal.

BIBLE REVISION.

This is a co-operative work, undertaken by scholars in Europe and America. It is, in some sense, a confidential work, and as yet incomplete, but I may be allowed to state in general terms its objects.

These are at once conservative and radical. Conservative in that we do not propose to offer a new version of the Bible, but rather to rejuvenate our English Scriptures, bringing up the version to the present state of Biblical learning and that of the English language. Conservative also in that the same idioms, the same vocabulary and the same associations with which the present excellent version is endeared to us will be preserved; yet it will be radical so far that the plan contemplates every improvement possible, namely:

1. A restitution of the original text. The textus receptus comes from mediæval MSS. when Biblical criticism had not been perfected as now. New MSS. have been found, old ones revised, and the uncial in place of the cursive text is employed.

2. Typographical errors are to be corrected. For example, "strain at a gnat" will read "strain out a gnat."

3. Errors of translation are to be corrected. These are seen in the use of tenses, the definite article, participles, and in other words.

4. It will be attempted to establish consistency. Now a Greek word, for example, is rendered in a dozen different ways. The early translaters worked in independent companies, and also tried to bring out the fullness of the English tongue, forgetting the loyalty due to the original and to English idiom.

We shall attempt also to remove decayed words, substituting haggage for "carriage" and anticipate for "prevent," etc.

5. The italicising is to be revised. "The whole of man" is better than "the whole duty of man."

6. The present chapters are to be retained, but prose is to be printed as prose and poetry as poetry.

7. Auxiliary helps are to be given, as suggested by Usher's Chronology, in chapter headings.

The work will be printed at the University Press, England. The New Testament is to be issued next year, not waiting for the Old.

It may be said, in closing, that this union of European and American scholars of various denominations has been marked by delightful harmony of spirit, all of them bent on the single purpose to give to the Church the nearest equivalent in English to the original and inspired Word of God.—Dr. Schaff.

THE CUP OF SORROW.

On classic cups and vases we have sometimes seen devices carved by the cunning hand of the sculptor. So around the cup of trial, which God commends to the lips of suffering Christians, are wreathed many comforting assurances. Here is one of them: "All things work together for good to them which love God." Here is another like it: "As thy day, so shall thy strength be." Afflicted friend, turn thy cup of sorrow around, and you will see engraved on it these precious words: "As one whom his mother comforteth, so will I comfort you." Turn it again, and read: "My grace is sufficient for thee." The whole cup is encircled with the words of love. But it requires faith to read them. They are invisible to selfishness and blind unbelief. And God sometimes washes the eyes of his children with tears, in order that they may read aright his providence and his commandments.—Rev. T. L. Cuyler.

THE GOOD SCHOLAR.

Two things together, says Dean Stanley, are the very model of a good scholar. First you must listen; you must hear; you must be silent; you must be attentive. We can never hope to gain real wisdom or knowledge unless we are willing to be taught, unless we look out for instruction, unless we fix our minds. He who is always talking without listening to what others say; he who is always asking questions without waiting for an answer; he who allows his mind to wander from one thing to another; he who thinks he is wiser than his teachers, and cleverer than his companions; he who does not look up to what is above himself, whether old or young, is not learning as Jesus Christ learnt. We must also be good askers of questions.

DIFFICULTY.

Difficulty is the nurse of greatness, a harsh nurse, who roughly rocks her foster-children into strength and athletic proportions. The mind, grappling with great aims and wrestling with mighty impediments, grows by a certain necessity to their stature. Scarce anything so convinces me of the capacity of the human intellect for indefinite expansion in the different stages of its being, as this power of enlarging itself to the height and compass of surrounding emergencies.—Exchange.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

FOREIGN.

Condensed from exchanges:

Various Scotch Presbyterians adopted memorial minutes on the death of Principal Lorimer.

The Roman Catholic community in Greenock are about to build another church, at a cost of between £8,000 and £10,000.

The Unita Cattolica contradicts a Brussels story of the Pope having paid a visit incognito to Castelgondolfo for change of air.

The death was announced at the late session of London Presbytery of Rev. Hugh Ritchie of Formosa, the oldest missionary of the Church.

To the great satisfaction of the Canadian churches of the Maritime provinces, Bishop Latane has taken Episcopal charge of the Reformed Episcopal churches in Canada.

It is announced that Rev. Wm. Inglis, for many years one of the leading writers on the Globe newspaper, has accepted the editorship of the Canada Presbyterian, and will assume the duties pertaining to the position on the 1st proximo.

Lord Chancellor Cairns has been preaching to large audiences in Scotland. And some of the clergy are terribly chagrined thereat. One Irish Episcopal clergyman talks about some judgment that will come upon the Chancellor if he does not desist from touching sacred things.

The Rev. L. W. Kip, of the Amoy Mission, China, returned to recruit a week or so ago. He has been strengthened and inspired by the voyage home. His address is 193 St. James Place, Brooklyn, L. I., N. Y: Rev. S. R. Brown, D. D., arrived from Yokohama, Japan, on Wednesday of last week, surprisingly benefited by the voyage by way of the Isthmus.

The Presbyterian Church of Canada has lost one of its foremost ministers in the death of the Rev. Dr. Topp, pastor of Knox church, Toronto. His death, which was very sudden, took place on the evening of October 6th, from disease of the heart. He was making arrangements to lay aside his ministerial duties when he was suddenly called to cease all labor and enter into the rest of God.

Considerable attention has for some time been given in Presbyterian circles in Ireland, to the question of the employment of licentiats, many of whom are ready to do the work of the Church, but cannot find opportunity to do it. It is felt by many that some systematic employment of the large number of licentiates at present waiting for "calls" would result in great benefit to the Church. The Rev. Professor Witherow, ex-Moderator, suggests in the Presbyterian Churchman for October that they should be employed as temporary or occasional assistants.

A meeting has been held of those favorable to forming a congregation in Dundee, with Mr. Macrae as pastor. Nearly 1,000 persons were present. Mr. Macrae made a statement thanking his friends in Dundee for their steadfast and generous support, hoping their connection would be long and friendly. Resolutions were passed forming a congregation and appointing several gentlemen, some of them formerly managers of School Wynd Church, to be managers of the new congregation, and to make the necessary arrangements for commencing worship. The first service is expected to take place on the first Sabbath of November.

The Edinburg correspondent of the London Times writes: "The selection of Dr. William Jack to fill the vacant Mathematical Chair in the University of Glasgow disappoints the hopes of the friends of Professor Robertson Smith of Aberdeen, while it also disconcerts the reckoning of those ecclesiastics who relied on the appointment of the latter as a means of extricating the Free Church from the perplexing situation in which his case now stands. There can be no doubt that if Professor Robertson Smith had obtained the appointment which he sought, and for which he is so well qualified, the Free Church would have been relieved of a great difficulty. He would at once have resigned his ecclesiastical professorship, and his case would in all probability have collapsed. As it is the case must be fought out to the bitter end; and it is becoming more and more evident that not only the end but also the process will be bitter enough. It will come before the General Assembly in May next as substantially a new case. That will be the third annual meeting before which this cause celebre has appeared, and unless some unlooked for change comes over the spirit of the Church's dream, there is no reason why the heretical shuttlecock should not continue to be tossed between the Presbytery and the General Assembly for as many years to come."

WILMINGTON, N. C.:

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 29, 1879.

PIOUS PASTORS' PAINS AND PLEASURES.

Often does the faithful pastor cry out, "Who is sufficient for these things?" His work is so momentous in all its aspects, requires such wisdom, watchfulness, self-denial, zeal and self-consecration, that it is manifest his is no light office. In his efforts to fulfill his appointed mission many pangs agitate his soul. He sees in his fold many blinded by the "god of the world," and insensible of their imminent danger, and of the claims and beauty and value of the glorious Gospel. On these impenitent hearers, he sadly looks, with painful apprehensions of fearful ruin overwhelming them suddenly at last. And what a night will settle on their souls!

How painful to see a man, a woman, careless of known obligations to God, and permitting trifles, futile doubts, unworthy earthly cares, to banish all serious thoughts about their souls, and keep them from their duty of standing up for Jesus.

What a weight on his tender heart, when professing Christians yield to the world, and sinful practices, and grasp after earthly reward for themselves and children, more than after heavenly; and when they seem ashamed to act in the fear of God, by humbly, yet firmly declining to engage in doubtful enterprises.

What pastor does not know, in pulpit and closet, bitter grief at the carelessness of children and youths, as they grow up under his ministry, and appear to forget all early pious training, and that they have priceless souls, perishing without Christ. He sorrows over amiable young women and excellent young men, resting satisfied with their beautiful natural graces, while forgetful that amiability, honesty and morality are not likeness to Christ; but that to be like Christ is to love Him with the whole heart, and to be holy.

He groans over persons who are poorly informed about the Bible, and have a mere smattering of scientific knowledge, gained from a newspaper or a fugitive book, or ever-shifting philosophical theories, but who rise in sturdy pride against God's sure truth, and ignorantly, yet fatally deny the God that brought them here. And if he suffer not from unkindnesses or imputation of wrong motives by some, nevertheless his spirit often sinks within him at the fear lest some immortal soul perish, because of his unfaithfulness in preaching Christ and Him crucified, and with tears and entreaties warning and beseeching sinners to be reconciled in Him to God, through His atoning blood.

No one, however, has greater joys than the faithful, self-denying pastor. He has the comforting and sustaining sense of God's gracious presence; the stability of His unchangeable promise that human weakness shall be made strong. Then in his heart beams the light of joy for the joy of those led under his ministry to Christ, and gathering around him as his spiritual children, begotten by the Gospel. His too, the comfort of seeing church members leading consistent Christian lives; of ministering to them in the depressing hour of sickness and calamity, and in the hour of death, made bright by hopes of Heaven, by the presence of the Saviour on the banks of the now shining river, that touches earth and heaven, and over which Christ safely carries them with psalms of victory.

Yes, the pastor, himself nothing, rejoices in Christians, as his epistles of commendation, known and read of men; in their constant prayers for him; and above all in the superlative honor of his position as a workman for and with God; the Ambassador of God, praying men in Christ's stead, "be ye reconciled to God;" and at his being ever unto God a sweet savor in Christ, in them that are saved, and in them that perish. His heart exclaims, "Thanks be unto God for the triumphs in Christ; for the glory of the pleasures of the Gospel ministry, that far outshine its passing pains; and for the abiding building of God, and the blood-bought crown, that await the faithful workmen, that endure hardness as good soldiers of the Cross, unto the end. Thus weighing pains and pleasures, his work grows more precious; and as he hastens with song to his reward, God is well pleased.

NOTES FROM SYNOD.

The Synod of North Carolina met at Statesville on the 22d inst. The opening sermon was preached by Rev. J. R. Wilson, D. D., Moderator, from Rev. v: 6.

During the meeting there entered from Orange Presbytery 14 ministers and 5 ruling elders; from Concord Presbytery 13 ministers and 23 elders; from Fayetteville 11 ministers and 5 elders; from Wilmington 5 ministers and 4 elders, and from the Presbytery of Mecklenburg 13 ministers and 13 ruling elders—a total of 56 ministers and 50 elders.

Rev. E. F. Rockwell was elected Moderator, and Rev. J. C. Alexander and Mr. H. C. Hamilton temporary clerks.

A report from the Committee on Sabbath Desecration, appointed by the last Synod, reported that the Legislature of North Carolina had responded to the demand of the religious people of the State by appropriate legislation. The committee was continued and further duties assigned. Gen. John A. Young was added to the committee.

The report of the Agent of Sustentation was read and ordered to be printed in the appendix to the minutes.

The special committee appointed by the last Synod on the Education of a Colored Ministry was read and elicited a very animated debate. Resolutions urging the importance of the subject, and recommending the support of the Institute at Tuskaloosa to the churches were adopted.

On the report of Rev. L. McKinnon, Agent of Education, it was directed that the General Assembly be overtured to unite the causes of Publication and Education under one secretary.

Rev. L. C. Vass, Agent of Sabbath Schools, reported, and considerable discussion, bringing out much interesting information, ensued.

The Colportage work was canvassed and recommended to the presbyteries in connection with the Agent of Publication.

Prof. J. R. Blake made a very able and interesting address on the merits of Davidson College and was followed by Rev. L. McKinnon in a masterly presentation of reasons for the support of that institution. The Synod has its welfare greatly at heart. We expect to publish an epitome of Prof. Blake's address in our next issue.

The N. C. PRESBYTERIAN was warmly commended to the support of the churches.

Rev. Dr. Richard McIlwaine was present and heartily welcomed by the Synod. He addressed the body on the subjects of Home Missions, Evangelization of the Colored People, the Invalid Fund and on Foreign Missions, and though the time consumed was short, imparted much valuable and interesting information on these subjects.

A resolution disapproving of the preaching of the gospel by women was adopted.

Synod adjourned to meet in Raleigh on the second Wednesday of November 1880.

In lieu of the opening religious exercises there was preaching at 11 o'clock each forenoon during the session. The change found to be very generally, probably universally acceptable; the tedium of the ordinary exercises of Synod was relieved, and freshness and renewed interest was imparted to the proceedings.

During the sessions nine sermons of remarkable earnestness and power were preached, and some of the ministers remained after the adjournment, to continue religious meetings. From these meetings much good is looked for.

The universal sentiment among all who were present during this meeting of Synod is that it was one of rare enjoyment. Not an incident occurred to mar the pleasure of the occasion, and the good people of Statesville spared nothing that could contribute to the welfare and enjoyment of their guests.

PRESBYTERY OF WILMINGTON.

An adjourned meeting of Wilmington Presbytery was held on the 24th inst., (during session of Synod) at Statesville, N. C. Five ministers: C. M. Payne, K. McDonald, J. R. Wilson, D. D., G. W. MacMillan and S. H. Isler, and four ruling elders: J. H. Barrantine, John Colville, J. W. Gulick and John McLaurin were present. Dr. J. R. Wilson presided as Moderator, and Rev. S. H. Isler was elected temporary clerk.

A Sabbath School Committee, viz: Rev. Dr. J. R. Wilson, Rev. C. M. Payne and ruling elder John Colville was appointed.

A communication from Rev. B. F. Marable, resigning the pastorate of the church at Goldsboro was received, and the church at Goldsboro, through its commissioner J. W. Gulick, concurring, the pastoral relation was dissolved, to take effect on January 1, 1880.

Rev. S. H. Isler requested that the pastoral relation between himself and Cobb's Mill might be dissolved, and order was taken to cite the congregation to appear and show cause, if any, why the pastoral relation should not be dissolved.

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

The editor of this paper desires to return his special thanks to friends in Statesville for their kindness during his recent visit to that town, to Col. John L. Brown, of Charlotte, for his aid and to himself and family for unremitting kindness and hospitality. A very pleasant feature of the late tour of the editor was a cordial greeting from Messrs. McDowell of the Southern Home and Messrs. Caldwell & Chambers of the Charlotte Observer.

Our notes on the Synod of North Carolina are less full than they otherwise would be because in a few days the prompt and capable Stated Clerk will present to our readers a full abstract of the proceedings.

The great Marshal Von Moltke, who is regarded almost everywhere as the ablest general since Napoleon, keeps holy the Sabbath. In the morning he goes to church, and during the remainder of the day is employed chiefly in reading good books. He is as wise in the things of eternal life as he is in matters merely pertaining to this world.

The Baptist Review thus discourses: "If the Baptists increase in the same ratio they have increased since 1800, and the population of the world increases at its present ratio, in 2100 A. D. everybody in the world will be Baptists."

The Christian at Work responds: "If all the trees were bread and cheese, and all the water ink, if all the milk were changed to silk what would the people drink?"

Every indication of returning prosperity should be hailed with delight. There have been many signs recently that the backbone of the "hard times" is broken. The resumption of work in the mills and the brightening up of commercial business this fall in the Northern cities are noticeable among these indications. But the best evidence is that furnished by the quarterly circular of Dun, Barlow & Co. According to this reliable authority the business failures for the third quarter of the present year show a marked increase in confidence and steadiness in business life. For the third quarter of 1878, the failures numbered 2,853, with liabilities amounting to $66,378,363. For the quarter ending October 1, 1879, the failures numbered 1,262; liabilities $15,275,550. The number of failures is thus less than one-half, the amount of liabilities less than one-fourth what they were a year ago. For the nine months of 1878, the failures were 8,678, with liabilities reaching $197,211,129. For the corresponding term of the present year the failures were 5,320; liabilities $81,054,940.

The longevity of ministers is remarkable. The following, which we take from the Presbyterian Banner refers to ministers of the Northern Presbyterian Church. In our Church the longevity is also notable:

"The average number of deaths among the ministers of our Church, who number a little less than five thousand at the present time, is given at 86 4-5 each year for the last five years. The average age of the ministers who have died during the same time has been 62 1-5, and the average proportion to the whole number of ministers who die is one in fifty. Of the ninety-seven whose decease is noted in the last Minutes twenty-five were between the ages of 60 and 70, twenty-four between 70 and 80, and fifteen above 80. The average age of the ninety-seven was 63 7-9 years."

The French government might do well to make haste slowly, in returning the exiled communists, and restoring them to citizenship. Four hundred of these pests arrived in Paris lately, and were enthusiastically received by those of like opinions. A communist, one of the pardoned, was lately elected to the French Chamber of Deputies, and the government sets itself to do its work over by prosecuting him for his communistic utterances. Clearly, the clemency extended is not appreciated.

Something more than a year ago some well known persons, not intellectually overweighted, left this country to become heathen. They have been heard from. The Himalaya Chronicle reports them:

"A barouche containing two natives, apparently Bombay Brahmans, and a lady and gentleman, has been seen of late driving morning and evening through several of the large stations of Upper India. The occupants thereof are closely watched by the police; in fact, a European officer is seen, and, is said to their knowledge and disgust, to dog their steps with persistent accuracy, following them on the highway and the iron way. The female party appears to take the lead, and at Meerut the other day delivered herself, in the open air, of an oration. She declared herself from America, but her bad English showed no trace of Yankee twang. But incidentally she said that, although from America, she was not of America, but of Russia! The burden of her speech was the insufficiency of all religious systems which had come under her notice to meet the demands of a progressive age, and she now seeks her desideratum in the creeds of Hindostan. She was at Agra with her party, and it is said that surveillance is so displeasing to the company that they at once intend turning their steps to Bombay, whence they set once but a short time since."

We have been presented by Dr. Wood, one of the editors of the N. C. Medical Journal, with a card copied from that publication which contains the census of the city of Wilmington for 1879, tabularly arranged. From this a number of interesting facts are learned. The total population is 17,004, distributed under the heads of white and colored, male and female (of each race), with sub divisions containing the number of persons under 18 months, from 18 months to 6 years, from 6 to 21 years, from 21 to 45 years, from 45 to 55 years, 55 to 70 years, 70 to 80 years, 80 to 90 years, 90 to 100 years, and those over 100 years. It is a singular fact that of the next to the last class there are 2 female white and 2 male colored and 1 female colored, and of those more than 100 years old there is one female colored person. Among the whites there are 44 more females than males, but the colored females outnumber the males 920—or far more than is accounted for by the relative numbers of the two races. The mortuary statistics are interesting. The death rate to the 1,000 population is for infants under 18 months, white male 100, female 102; colored male 193.67, female 214.02. The death rate from 21 to 55 years is, white male 6.81, female 5.21; colored male 12.13, female 11.07. The death rate per 1,000 of the entire population is 20. The number of children enrolled in the public schools is, white 343, colored 717. The total number of school children from 6 to 21 years is, white 1,896, colored 3,025; but the total number, white and colored, nearly equally distributed between the races, attending other schools, is 2,483. It should have been stated above that the total population is thus distributed: white 6,716, colored 10,228. The commercial statistics make a favorable show for the business of this port. The total value of the cotton received is stated at $6,425,325. Entered the port 469 vessels, which does not include what is called "the musquito fleet," or small coasting schooners.

We confess we were not aware till now that doctrinal infallibility had ever been claimed for the Czar of Russia. That the absurdity should be revived at this time is without doubt to be ascribed to governmental policy. From the London Weekly Review we get the report.

A few days ago the Metropolitan of Moscow preached a sermon in the Kremlin on the infallibility of the Czar and his officials. For criticizing the sermon of the prelate the newly established newspaper Vostock has been summarily suppressed, and the writer of the article dismissed to Siberia. The sermon was published without comment by the Moscow Gazette, but the Vostock criticised warmly the Metropolitan's dogmatic assertions, particularly those referring to the Divine inspiration of his Majesty, and, through him, of his officials. Intelligent Russians at Moscow speak privately of the Kremlin sermon as being a grave and serious error. To a great degree the dogma of the infallibility of the Czar has always been upheld by the Orthodox Church, and it is still a common belief among the more ignorant of the moojiki, but of late years the doctrine has diminished in importance, and has been regarded by the "intelligence" of Russia as nearly extinct. The fresh impulse given to the belief by Archbishop Macarius is considered all the more remarkable because it proceeds from a prelate who is at once a brilliant scholar and a man of powerful, independent views. Whether he was inspired by the Government to deliver his sermon as a set-off against the insidiousness of Nihilism is as yet unknown, but a report in the affirmative derives some color from the fact that the authorities are distributing copies of it broadcast among the people.

When we enter upon the discussion of a scientific subject we are driven by the timidity of ignorance to call in the help of some of the masters. Here is the topic of the Compound Nature of the Elements, and, handily, some notes from the Christian Union on Mr. Lockyer's recent researches and revelations. In his address to the British Association, this famous physicist and astronomer observed that when carefully-distilled metallic sodium was condensed in a capillary tube, placed in a retort, and heated in a Sprengel vacuum, it gave off twenty times its volume of hydrogen. Phosphorous, carefully dried, and submitted to the same treatment, gave off seventy volumes of a gas which appeared to consist chiefly of hydrogen. Although it gave in the spectroscope some of the lines of the phosphorus it was not phosphoreted hydrogen, as it gave no action with solution of cupric sulphate. A specimen of magnesium, carefully purified, gave a magnificent series of colored phenomena. The hydrogen line first appeared, then the D line characteristic of sodium, and lastly the green line of magnesium; and then, as the temperature gradually increased, mixtures of all three lines appeared. In this experiment only two volumes of hydrogen were collected. Neither gallium nor arsenic afforded any gas. From sulphur and some of its compounds sulphurous anhydride was always obtained. From iridium hydrogen was given off in vacuo before heating; while from lithium no less than 100 volumes of hydrogen were disengaged. The conditions of these experiments were all uniform. Mr. Lockyer refrains from drawing any conclusions, as under the circumstances they would hardly be justified. Yet, as the Christian Union remarks, these experiments, as well as many others of modern science, strongly indicate that nearly all the so-called elements are manifestations of one or two substances under different conditions.

NEWS NOTES.

We specially invite news from all quarters for this column.

At Communion, during Synod, a young man, son of an attending minister, was received into the Statesville Church, on confession of faith. A lady was also received by letter.

On the first Sabbath in October five persons united with the church at Norwood, in Concord Presbytery. This church is making rapid advances. Rev. J. H. Thornwell has been returned as evangelist for the ensuing year, and the church has raised $200 to supplement his salary.

At a late communion at Topsail, in Pender county, at which Rev. Geo. W. McMillan was assisted by Rev. Dr. R. H. Chapman two persons were added to the church. The report from this church is highly encouraging as to the renewed interest and zeal of its members.

We are pained to learn that the health of Rev. Wm. W. Pharr, the Stated Clerk of the Presbytery of Concord, is so infirm that he has not been able to attend to ministerial or other duties for some time. This statement will suggest to correspondents that he is not able to reply to communications with the promptness he would desire. The sympathies of his brethren of the Synod are with him in his affliction.

The great work of grace is still in progress at Third Creek church in Concord Presbytery. Rev. A. L. Crawford informs us that four persons united with the church on profession on Sabbath, 19th inst., and others are anxious in regard to the welfare of their souls. Sixty-eight accessions have thus far been the fruits of this revival.

Goldsboro Messenger: We are pleased to learn that Rev. B. F. Marable will continue to fill the pulpit of the Presbyterian Church in this town, during his residence here, until his successor is elected.

Lumberton Robesonian: The Presbyterian Church of this town, is now without a pastor, and our town without services one Sabbath in every month. "Come over into Macedonia and help us," by supplying the missing Sunday.

SYNOD OF VIRGINIA.

The Presbyterian Synod of Virginia met at Danville last Wednesday, and concluded its sessions Saturday evening. The opening sermon was delivered by Rev. Dr. Bullock, of Alexandria, and Rev. W. A. Campbell, of the East Hanover Presbytery, was elected moderator. Narratives from the Presbyteries were read, showing the religious condition of affairs. Some of these were very interesting and showed considerable additions to the churches. On the proposition for a division of the synod the report stated the vote to be 110 in favor to 111 in opposition, Greenbrier Presbytery declining to vote. The subject of division was then indefinite postponed. The synod numbers 225 ministers, 303 churches and 24,208 members. The next session of the synod will be held at Martinsburg, W. Va. —Baltimore Sun.

PRESBYTERIAL MEETINGS.

Greenbrier.—We condense from the Central Presbyterian: All the ministers present, and sixteen elders. Rev. M. H. Bittenger was made Moderator, Rev. G. T. Lyle and elder G. H. Lewis, Clerks. Rev. W. F. Wilhelm was received from Montgomery Presbytery, and a letter dismissing to us from Elizabeth Presbytery, Rev. James Shearer, who has been called to Huntington, but could not be present at this meeting. The recommendations of the General Assembly, in regard to the Sabbath, were adopted. Much interest was shown in a scheme to introduce more largely the books of our Publication Committee in our bounds. The narratives showed special revivals in but few of the churches, though most of them seem to be making steady progress. Rev. J. H. Lewis and elder J. M. Sydenstricker were chosen delegates to next General Assembly: with Rev. D. S. Sydenstricker and elder S. Clark as alternates. The next regular session will be held at Buffalo, on the 29th April, 1880.

Holston.—Abridged from the Christian Observer: Rev. S. B. Campbell, Moderator. On the Stated Supply question the following action was taken:

Resolved, 1. That Presbytery will not longer approve or sanction the indefinitely continued stated supply system, in congregations where the difficulties in the way of establishing the pastoral relation are not insuperable.

2. That the sessions of churches be enjoined to take this matter under careful and prayerful consideration, in view of their accountability as under shepherds, to whom have been committed the best interests of the flocks.

3. That the ministry be enjoined to use all diligence by instruction, advice and admonition, by exchange of pulpits, and by any other method available, to educate congregations up to the adoption of this beautiful and essential feature of Presbyterianism.

4. That the Committee of Sustentation be directed to co-operate with ministers and congregations in hastening the accomplishment and consummation of this end in every way possible.

Chickasaw.—Gathered from the Christian Observer: Rev. W. T. Savage, Moderator. Commissioners to Assembly—Rev. J. D. West; alternate, Rev. W. T. Savage; Col. W. L. Lorance, elder; alternate, Wm. B. Gilmer. Rev J. L. Harris dismissed to Dallas Presbytery. Next regular meeting at Pontotoc, Thursday before third Sabbath in April, 1880, but Presbytery will meet during Synod at Jackson.

Brazos.—Call by the Moderator to meet October 22, in Houston, as the meeting in June failed for want of quorum. So published in the Texas Presbyterian.

AMERICAN BIBLE SOCIETY.

The stated meeting of the board of Managers was at the Bible House, Astor Place, on Thursday, October 2d, at half-past three o'clock, P. M., Frederick S. Winston, Esq., Vice President, in the chair.

The Committee on Finance reported the receipts for September, from auxiliary societies, churches, and individuals, $8,030 37; rents, $888 65; legacies, $5,266 28; for book's sold, $10,606 20; total, $24,791 50. Disbursements, upon their audit and warrant, $31,816 61.

The Committee on publication reported that the issues for the month of September were 72,559 volumes; and that 3,224,000 copies of the Agate Testament had been printed from duplicate sets of plates made ten years ago, and recommended a new set of plates to be made.

Among the important grants recommended by the Committee on Distribution, and approved by the Board, were the following: To the Society's Agency in Russia, 10,000 copies of the Reval-Esthonian Bible, manufactured at the Bible House, for distribution in Reval in Esthonia; to the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions, for the Zulu Mission, 400 copies of the Mpongwe Scriptures and 200 Gospel of St. John, in the Dikele dialect; to the German Mission of the Meth. Ep. Church, $8,900 in funds for printing Scriptures at Bremen, for distribution in Germany; and $2,500 in books for colportage work in destitute portions of this country.

The Committee on Agencies reported that during the past five months eighty-six colporteurs had been employed by this Society in thirteen different States. As the results of their labours, 83,842 families were visited, of which 17,720 were found to be destitute of the Scriptures, and 13,638 of these were supplied; and that 58,137 copies of Scripture had been distributed by sale and gift through this agency. The cost to the Society for the labour of colporteurs was thirteen cents for every family visited, or nineteen cents for every copy of Scripture distributed. This expense was met by the sale of books entrusted to them, and in addition, $4,210 48 returned to the Society.

Important recommendations were made to the Board by the Committee on Legacies, respecting their department of the Society's business, which were adopted.

Two auxiliaries were recognized, one in Iowa and the other in Colorado.

With kind regards of C. H. WILEY,
Dist. Sup't for A. B. S.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

BOOKS.

Tribulations of a Chinaman in China: By Jules Verne. Translated by Virginia Champlin Boston: Lee & Shepard. Cloth, 12mo. 1880. This fantastic story, written in Verne's lively manner and abounding in useful information of Chinese life, has a sound moral, to wit: that happiness consists in doing good for others. At bottom it is a book of practical philosophy, though tricked off in the garb of dashing adventure. It is well printed on good, thick paper and handsomely as well as strongly bound.

Errors of the Roman Catholic Church, including lectures by Bishop Marvin. St. Louis: James H. Chambers. 1878. Cloth. 12mo. These of the Bishop's lectures which we have found time to read are sound and practical. We trust this book will have a good circulation. Such works are needed in order to refute the fallacies of the communion of the Scarlet Woman.

The Abrahamic Covenant: By Rev. H. H. Hawes. St. Louis: Presbyterian Pub. Co. Richmond: Presbyterian Com. of Publication. Pamphlet. A painstaking study of the subject of infant baptism, by one of our clearest writers.

Christie Johnstone: By Charles Reade. New York: D. Appleton & Co. 1879. This is one of the cheap "Handy Volumes" which this great house is issuing. Reade is regarded as a master of sensation in fiction.

A Gentle Belle: By Christian Reid (Miss Fisher of Salisbury, N. Y.) New York: D. Appleton & Co. Both of the above are "paper back novels," but of the better class. Miss Fisher has written much pleasing literature of the lighter sort. Her stories are moral. A Gentle Belle is one of her very best.

PERIODICALS.

The Catholic Presbyterian for October: London and New York. Contents: The Philosophy of Perception, P. Bayne; The Scriptural Ideal of a Ruling Elder, Robert Watts; The Other Side of Calvinism, W. J. Robinson; Frances Ridley Havergal, E. R. Hope; Woman's Foreign Mission Work in America, D. A. Cunningham; The Reformed Church of France Since '72, C. E. Babut; The Evangelical Alliance at Basle, J. E. Carlyle; Notes of the Day; The General Council; General Survey.

Scribner's Monthly for November is an important issue. Having no room for mention of all its prominent features we name the portraits of Bayard Taylor, Mr. Stedman's sketch of the Poet, the article on Small Fruits, and the beginning of Mr. Cable's new Louisiana story as deserving of special attention.

The Eclectic Magazine for October. New York: E. R. Pelton. Contents: History and Politics, Prof. Seeley; A Dialogue on Human Happiness, W. H. Mallock; My Journal in the Holy Land, part 1, Mrs. Brassey; Two Men of Letters, George Saintsbury; Dulce est Desipere, a Latin student's song of the twelfth century; White Wings: a Yachting Romance, William Black; Contemporary Literature—Readers; The Problem of Sanity; Ancient Egypt, Reginald Stuart Poole; Venetian Sonnets, Prof. Blackie; Mademoiselle de Mersac, a novel; Weather Forecasting; An Editor's Troubles; A Hungarian Episode—Zigeuner Music, by the author of "Flemish Interiors;" Contrasts, a poem; and a biographical sketch of M. Guizot, to accompany the portrait. Four editorial departments.

The Nineteenth Century for October. $2 25 per annum. 20c. a copy. George Munro, publisher, 17 Vandewater street, New York. The following is the attractive table of contents of this valuable Review: Modern Atheism and Mr. Mallock, Miss Bevington; Flogging in the Army, Ach'd Forbes; Familiar Letters on Modern England, K. Hildebrand; The New Departure in Indian Finance, Henry Fawcett, M. P.; Lucrezia Borgia, H. S. Wilson; Baptism, by the Dean of Westminster; Notes by the Way in India: the Land and the People, J. A. Caird, F. R. S.; Recent Science, supervised by Prof. Huxley; The Olympian System versus the Solar Theory, Rt. Hon. W. E. Gladstone, M. P. Also Splendid Misery, by Miss M. E. Braddon, from London World.

The Contemporary Review for October: From George Munro, publisher, New York $2 25 per annum, 20c. a copy. This is a valuable republication of this English monthly in clear type and cheap form. Contents: India and Afghanistan, Lt. C. R. Osborn; Critical Idealism in France; Paul Genet; On the Moral Limits of Beneficial Commerce, F. W. Newman; The Myths of the Sea and the River of Death, C. F. Keary; Mr. Macvey Napier and the Edinburgh Reviewers, M. Browne; The Supreme God in the Indo-European Mythology, Jas. Parmesteter; Lazarus' Appeals to Dives, H. J. Miller; The Forms and Colors of Living Creatures, Prof. Mivart; Contemporary Life and Thought in Turkey, by an Eastern Statesman; Contemporary Books: Notice; White Wings: a Yachting Romance, W. Black.

With the November number, now before us, that excellent periodical, the Southern Musical Journal, commences its 8th volume. Savannah: Ludden & Bates.

The Nursery shows steady improvement in a good publication. Those illustrations in the November number are just A 1.

We regret to notice the suspension of the Carolina Farmer, a valuable periodical of its class.

The November St. Nicholas, though a little late, is even better than ever, both in letter press and in pictures. The magazine has been enlarged. Good as it is, the publishers think it incumbent upon them to make it better from time to time.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

SOUTHERN.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Dr. Dabney, in the Southern Presbyterian, defends himself from the attack of one who thinks he ought not to contribute to the Princeton Review.

Rev. J. M. Kirkpatrick removes from Newbern, Va., to Big Lick, Roanoke county, same State, where he takes charge of a school.

We are glad to learn of the convalescence of Rev. J. N. Sanders, of Bloomfield, Ky., who has been quite ill of typhoid fever.

The author of "The Young Marooners," Rev. F. R. Goulding, writes to the Christian Observer that his working time seems to be almost over, and quotes from Whittier:

"And so beside the silent sea
I wait the muffled oar."

Rev. M. C. Hutton tells the Southern Presbyterian that he has just closed a ten days' meeting at Danceyville, Tenn., at which eleven baptized children were received into free communion.

Rev. W. T. Spears, Richwood, Boone county, Ky., writes to the Christian Observer of eleven additions to the church from the preaching of himself and Rev. W. T. McElroy. He will soon be installed pastor of that church.

Christian Observer: The Presbyterian church at Chattanooga, (Rev. J. W. Bachman, pastor) is prospering. Since the beginning of the year, forty members have been received into this church, twenty-five of them on profession of their faith.

Accessions reported in Christian Observer: Florence, Ala., Rev. M. L. Frierson, pastor—four, three of them on confession; Edwards, Hinds county, Miss., sixteen, Rev. Dr. John Hunter, of Jackson, assisting; Denmark, Tenn., Rev. J. H. Gillespie assisting pastor, Rev. S. C. Caldwell, eight—six on confession; Third church, Knoxville, Tenn., ten—seven on confession of faith.

Condensed from Texas Presbyterian correspondence: Paris; On our sacramental occasion, the first Sabbath in this month, eight persons were received into the church. Baptism was administered to two adults and one infant. Clinton: Twenty persons added to Clinton Church, licentiate Z. B. Graves assisted by Rev. J. M. Conolly. Jacksonville: Seven—four young ladies, three young gentlemen. Quite a large church building has just been erected. Church organization new.

The Southern Presbyterian reports the sale to satisfy mortgages, of the First German Presbyterian church of New Orleans. Bought in by a venerable elder, Caspar Auch, and the church enters on a new career, free from debt.

Christian Observer: Rev. J. H. Morrison was duly installed pastor of Portland Avenue church (Louisville) in accordance with the order taken by Louisville Presbytery, last Sabbath afternoon. Rev. Dr. Robinson presided and preached the sermon. Rev. J. H. Moore gave the charge to the pastor and Rev. E. O. Guerrant the charge to the people. Mr. Morrison's labors have been richly blessed during the few months he has been ministering to this people, and he is greatly beloved both in the church and in the community.

A correspondent writes to the Christian Observer: "As the result of the meeting at Jonesboro, Ga., in which Rev. N. Bachman labored so earnestly—twelve were received on profession, at the organization of the church, on Sunday evening, Sept. 8th, by Rev. Messrs. Rogers and N. Keff Smith. The church was organized with thirty-eight members. Mr. Bachman does not go to Decatur, as you have it. He was there in the spring. He goes next week to Cedar Town, and then to Rome. We have had a fine meeting here.

Christian Observer: Rev. S. J. Bingham has been preaching at Vernal, in Green county, Miss., about fifty miles north of Moss Point, Miss. He preached ten sermons, the last week in September, "received sixteen members into the church, ordained and installed two elders, baptized three adults and one infant. The Christians were greatly revived, and say 'they have never enjoyed so precious a meeting before.' New life is imparted to them. They have sent a petition to the Presbytery of Tombeckbee, with forty-six names, to have them organized into a church, and have earnestly requested the Presbytery to meet at Vernal next fall, and they will have a camp-meeting in connection with the Presbytery."

GENERAL.

Raleigh Christian Advocate: God has blessed us wonderfully this year in North Carolina. Hundreds of persons have been converted and added to the church. Almost every charge has had a gracious revival.

A Northern exchange says: Bishop Atkinson, an old and intimate friend of the late Bishop Whittingham, will be invited to deliver a memorial address at the service in honor of the deceased which will be held in Baltimore during next month.

Further additions to the Church: Result of a union meeting at Keachi, La., six persons joined the Presbyterian church, and some six or eight the Methodist. The preachers were Rev. Cyrus Harrington and four Methodist divines. Eight were added to Union church, Augusta county, Va., October 12th. A committee of Lexington Presbytery installed Rev. I. N. Campbell the previous Saturday.

NORTHERN.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Rev. Jacob Schwartz, of the Presbytery of Potosi, died on the 23d ult., near Farmington, Mo., where he had lived for several years in honorable retirement from ministerial duty. So says the St. Louis Presbyterian.

The Presbyterian informs us that Rev. Joseph Maloney, pastor of Emmanuel Reformed Episcopal church, Philadelphia, has been received into Central Presbytery of Philadelphia on his acceptance of the Presbyterian Confession of Faith. He has been called to the Northwestern Presbyterian church.

Deaths: Rev. D. A. Quern, pastor of Tuscarora and Union Corners, New York; David A. Frame, Montclair, Pa.; Rev. A. L. Brooks, Danville, Ill.

Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage, on his arrival from Europe, was given a large reception at the Brooklyn Tabernacle by his congregation and friends.

Prof. Francis L. Patton was recently installed over the Jefferson Park Presbyterian church, Chicago, Rev. Dr. Kittredge preaching the sermon. The succeeding Sunday he received thirty-one to membership.

Five new churches organized in Presbytery of Nebraska since spring; in Omaha Presbytery two, and in Kearney Presbytery two.

In Jack county, Texas, two churches were recently organized—one at Gertrude, the other at Lost Valley.

At the late meeting of the Presbytery of Oshosho Rev. C. W. Price was received from the Presbytery of Ebenezer in connection with the Southern Assembly. He takes charge of the churches of Cherokee, Weir City and New Pittsburgh, Kansas. Says the Philadelphia Presbyterian.

Dr. Leftwich's congregation, Baltimore, will fit up an orphan asylum.

As the result of several meetings a church has been organized at Laynesville, on the Missouri river.

CONGREGATIONAL.

There is a large increase in the attendance on the Yale Divinity School.

At a meeting of Fairfield West Consociation at Stamford, September 4th, Rev. G. B. Wilcox was dismissed from the Congregational church in that place, to assume the Professorship of Pastoral Theology in Chicago Seminary.

The New Hampshire Missionary Society has lately received a legacy from the estate of Mrs. Betsey Whitehouse, of Pembroke, which amounts to $70,000, and is invested in government bonds; only the interest to be spent.

The remnants of Brother Adirondack Murray's church in Boston have been gathered together with the view of forming a new church on a broad and progressive Christian basis. The effort to secure solidity in its finance is said to promise success. The Rev. H. A. Shorey, who has succeeded Murray in the charge of the Golden Rule becomes pastor of the new enterprise.

On the 5th inst., Superintendent Roy, of the Home Missionary Society, organized a Congregational Church of thirty members in Randolph county, North Carolina, Salem Church P. O. Rev. Islay Walden, of the Reformed Seminary and Classis of New Brunswick, N. J., is in charge of the work.

BAPTIST.

Services preliminary to the departure of fifteen missionaries to India were held at the Central Baptist Church, New York city, October 10th. Among the speakers was the Rev. J. A. Spurgeon, of England. The missionaries were sent out by the American Baptist Union

Newton Theological Institution opens a new year with an accession of twenty-four new students, two of whom enter the Senior class.

The St. Louis Baptist Association has withdrawn fellowship from the Second Baptist Church of that city, and its pastor, Dr. Boyd. The specifications are that Dr. Boyd believes, and has taught and preached, that all men will ultimately be saved; that a Jew may be saved without believing in Jesus; that close communion is only an inference drawn from one passage in the Scriptures; and that the Baptist denomination is too rigid in its views of communion.

METHODIST.

Four Chinese converts were baptized in the branch Chinese M. E. Mission in San Jose, Cal., September 7th.

The building for Clark University (colored) has been contracted for at Atlanta.

Ex-Governor Claflin, of Massachusetts, has given $8,000 to Claflin University, Orangeburgh, S. C.

Among the preachers received into the Indiana Conference at its late meeting was Rev. Dr. Underwood, of the Reformed Episcopal Church.

The Wesleyan Advocate, published at Macon, Ga., estimates that fully 20,000 persons have been brought into the Methodist Episcopal Church South, the past summer.

The Iowa Lay Electoral Conference requested the Bishop to reduce the number of districts in the Conferences, favoring the introduction of lay delegation in annual conference and containing the itinerancy as it now exists.

Four new Methodist churches are being built in Michigan: one at Galion, another at Goodland, costing $1,200, the third at Homer, costing $11,000 to be dedicated early this month, and the fourth at Port Huron.

Within a few years past two good churches owned by the Methodist Episcopal Church South in Baltimore, have been sold, and are now Jewish synagogues. The Methodist Protestant church on Lexington street has also been sold, and is now a German Reformed church.

EPISCOPAL AND REFORMED EPISCOPAL.

An extraordinary spectacle was witnessed in St. John's Episcopal church, on Bedford avenue and Wilson street, Brooklyn, L. I., on Sabbath morning, October 5th, when two hundred and eighty persons were added to the membership.

The New York Synod of the Reformed Episcopal church has made laymen eligible as presiding officers.

Bishop Stevens, of the Episcopal Diocese of Pennsylvania, has been quite ill from chronic catarrhal pneumonia, but is slowly improving.

Miss H. S. Benson, of Philadelphia, has made a donation which enables the responsible parties to finish the payment of claims on the Bishop Cummins Memorial church, Baltimore.

The Rev. Dr. Kirkus, rector of one of the Episcopal churches of Baltimore, asked September 28th for contributions of "gold, silver and jewelry" from the congregation toward the manufacture of a new communion service. A half bushel measure of silver plate and jewelry was the response. These offerings, including a diamond ring, were valued at $1,100.

ROMAN CATHOLIC.

The Philadelphia Presbyterian says: There are only three Roman Catholic churches in the State of New Jersey which are consecrated; that is to say, there are only three that are out of debt, which is the condition on which consecration is granted. One of them is in Princeton, and it was consecrated last week. In order to give the service a slight flavor of the church's "environment," the sermon was preached by "Father" Denny, who was formerly a Presbyterian.

Rev. S. R. Brown, D.D., completed his translation of the book of Revelation before leaving Japan, two months ago, and passed it over to the Committee for revision. This finishes the translation of the New Testament into Japanese. In the course of time there will be four versions, adapted to different classes of the people.—Christian Intelligencer.

The Theological Seminary at Princeton offers a prize of six hundred dollars, to be awarded at the close of the term, with the understanding that the student gaining the prize will spend the year following in study at Princeton. It is to be known as the "Hebrew Fellowship."—Presbyterian.

GENERAL.

A farewell missionary meeting was held in the North Reformed church, Newark, N. J., on Tuesday evening, October 14th, to Rev. J. Heyer Polhemus, who goes as missionary to Zacatecas, Mexico, under the care of the Presbyterian Board.

Rev. Mr. Alcott, whose name was stricken from the roll of the Presbytery of Wooster, has received a call to a Cumberland Presbyterian church which has been formed in Fredericksburg, Ohio, composed of a number of the members of his former church.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

We invite attention to the advertisement of Messrs. Brown & Weddington, Hardware Dealers of Charlotte, N. C. These gentlemen have had a long experience in their line of trade and are prepared to give entire satisfaction to their customers.

Mr. T. L. Seigle offers an attractive line of articles in the way of Dry Goods. He deserves the extensive patronage which his establishment is enjoying.

The Audiphone advertised has received special commendation from many of our contemporaries of the religious press. We have little doubt it will be found very useful.

SECULAR NEWS.

Mass meeting to support the anti-rent party in Ireland was held in New York Monday night.

The Republican majority on joint ballot in the Ohio Legislature is 31.

Two hundred Memphis refugees have returned. Fever dying out. Epidemic declared ended.

The Local Ministers' Conference of the Methodist Church was held last week at Clayton, N. C.

Nine medical students at the University. We hope this beginning will encourage others to go.

Three students were suspended at Davidson College last week. It is rare this penalty has to be enforced, but the faculty know how to maintain discipline.

The lecture of Col. A. M. Waddell was a success every way. It will be repeated at an early day, so we learn from the Star.

There were ten thousand people at the soldiers' reunion of both armies at Salisbury, last week, and speeches were made by Senator Vance, Gov. Jarvis, Judge Fowle, Gen. Leach and others.

Straighten your old boots and shoes with Lyon's Patent Heel Stiffeners, and wear them again.

THE MAP OF PALESTINE.

We have sent out this map quite extensively, and it has, we believe, given universal satisfaction; at least, no complaints have been made, and many have expressed hearty appreciation.

It is 28x42 inches in size and sold by publishers at $1 00.

We furnish gratis with one new subscriber at $2 65.

ECLECTICISMS.

Southern Christian Advocate:

The young man who, a short time ago, drew $15,000 from a nameless lottery, (we wouldn't advertise the concern if we remembered the name) was one fortunate (?) among many other unfortunates (??). One ticket worth $15,000 means more than fifteen thousand worth nothing. Everybody knows this, and yet people will patronize the lottery. Thanks for the protection of the government: The post office department has instructed all postmasters in this country to refuse to mail or register letters or circulars addressed to lottery companies or their agents.

Central Presbyterian:

There are perhaps a dozen Evangelical churches in the world which preach Jesus Christ and his salvation—that we are sinners—that we are saved by believing on Him—that we are regenerated and sanctified by the Holy Ghost. Opposed are all the hosts of Romanism, Ritualism, Broad-Churchism, Infidelity, Mohammedanism, Buddhism, Paganism. Let us not spend our strength in quarreling among ourselves and contending for non-vital issues. Let us work together, and fight the common enemy. There is work enough for all to do in beating these great armies. The rest is comparatively unimportant. Let us rally around the one central banner which all of us carry, and keep steadily in view the main object.

United Presbyterian:

In this state of constant and almost unceasing spiritual refreshment that ought to be sought most earnestly by all Christians. It is that to which, under the promise, they are entitled. It is something, also, that will not be withheld, if the right means are used to obtain it. We are in danger, under the impulsive spirit of the day and the processes adopted by the Church, to forget this stable condition of the soul after which all Christians should habitually seek. And if ministers and they who labor with them will but pray until they are blessed as Stephen and Barnabas were, there will be no need of exceptional means of securing revivals. There will be revival all the time. The windows of heaven will never be closed; the clouds will never cease giving their benignant showers.

Interior:

Louis Kossuth puts in a word which is not pleasant for the Austrians. He says, with striking appropriateness, that Austria becomes the satellite of Germany, and the plan of the combined powers to appropriate European Turkey will force an alliance of France and Russia. And he remarks that when France next goes to war with Germany, she will engage that power's whole attention, leaving Austria to bear the brunt of the undivided power of Russia. He reminds the Magyars that they may again feel the heel of the Cossack. All these remarks of the old man eloquent are dangerously probable. When Germany struck France she found her enemy honeycombed with the corruptions of Imperialism. The Republic is a different foe. It was the Republic which conquered Europe less than a century ago.

TRIBUTE TO THE LATE REV. JOHN DOUGLAS.

At a meeting of the Sabbath School of Steele Creek Congregation on the 19th inst., the following preamble and resolutions were unanimously adopted. We as a Sabbath School, in the Providence of God, are called to lament the sudden death of our beloved Pastor and Superintendent of our Sabbath School, viz: REV. JOHN DOUGLAS, who departed this life at his late residence on the 8th inst., 3 A. M., aged about 70 years.

Resolved, 1st.—That while we lament our sore bereavement—that Rev. John Duglas is no more—yet we humbly bow with submission, to the will of Him, in whose hands are the destiny of us all, who orders and directs all things for his own glory.

2nd, We would devoutly render our most hearty thanks to the Giver of every good and perfect gift, that this Sabbath School has been permited to enjoy his able and efficient services as Superintendent for so long a period.

3d, We would be admonished by his sudden death, that this is not our abiding place, "For here we have no continuing city"—we too, must soon lay down our armour, and cast our mantle around those who are soon to be our successors. And may we so live and so act, that when the bridegroom shall come at midday or midnight—when the "cry is made," "Behold the Bridegroom cometh,"—that we may be found with our lamps trimmed and burning, "ready to go out to meet him."

4th, That a copy of the above preamble and resolutions be furnished the family of our deceased Superintendent, and a copy forwarded to the Editor of N. C. PRESBYTERIAN, with a request to publish the same.

H. D. STOWESEC. J. J. PRICE, Chairman.

MISS CHRISTIAN CAMPBELL, was born in Cumberland county, N. C., August 18th, 1812, and died September 26th, 1879, being 67 years, one month and 6 days old.

She had been 45 years a consistent member of Long street Presbyterian Church. For 25 years she had been a great sufferer; but she illustrated the Christian Graces, and especially that of patience in a remarkable manner.

She had no doubts or fears and died in peace. Like Mary she sat at Jesus, feet and learned from Him lessons of heavenly wisdom, and now she rests in peace.

You Can be Happy.

If you will stop all your extravagant and wrong notions in doctoring yourself and families with expensive doctors or humbug cure-alls, that do harm always, and use only nature's simple remedies for all your ailments—you will be wise, well and happy, and save great expense. The greatest remedy for this, the great, wise and good will tell you, is Hop Bitters—believe it. See "Proverbs" in another column.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

Charlotte Institute.

THE next session begins September 10th, 1879, and ends June 8th, 1880.

No Institute ever made more rapid progress in securing the confidence and esteem of its patrons than this one during the past session. Before the end of the scholastic year the number of its pupils, attracted by the well-earned reputation of the school, increased to 117, exclusive of the adult ladies who availed themselves of the superior advantages here given in the departments of Music, Art, and Modern Languages. In no respect is this Institute inferior to any other first class boarding-school in the Southern or Middle States. Such testimonials as will satisfy an one as to the high standard and thoroughness of the instruction here are published in the catalogue. These testimonials are peculiarly trustworthy, inasmuch as they are given by gentlemen engaged in teaching in well known schools and colleges of the highest grade, and who are therefore qualified to express an opinion in regard to educational institutions.

The total expense for the half session or term will be $125. This amount includes board, with washing, fuel, lights, furnished room and servants' attendance, tuition in all the English branches, Latin, with either French or German, Calisthenics, text-books and stationery for school purposes. Pupils are not permitted to incur additional expense without permission of their parents. Parents are thus assured that their bills will not be greater than they expected.

Special arrangements and special terms for young ladies who wish to take only Music, Painting and Drawing, and Modern Languages, severally or collectively.

TALBOTT'S PATENT SPARK ARRESTER
The Invention of the Age.
It does not destroy the draft.
It does not interfere with cleaning the tubes.
It will not choke up, and requires no cleaning.
It requires no direct dampers to be opened when raising steam (dampers being objectionable, as they may be left open and allow sparks to escape.)
It requires no water to extinguish sparks, which, by condensation, destroys the draft. Besides, when water is used, if neglected, the efficiency is destroyed by evaporation of the water, and the boiler is kept in a filthy condition.
It is simple and durable and can be relied upon.
It can be attached to any boiler.
No planter should be without one of them. Insurance companies will insure gins and barns where the Talbott Engines and Spark-Arresters are used at same rate as charged for water or horse-power.

THE BUFFALO LITHIA WATERS,
For Affections of the Kidneys and Bladder.
RELIEF OF INFLAMMATION AND ULCERATION OF THE BLADDER.
AFTER THE LIFE OF THE PATIENT HAS BEEN DESPAIRED OF BY HIS MEDICAL ATTENDANT.
[Extract from Letter of Dr. T. B. Greer, of Rocky Mount, Franklin county, Va., of June 3, 1876.]
"I have recently had occasion to try the 'Lithia Water' in a case of Inflamation and Ulceration of the Bladder, caused by the retention of urine, the result of stricture of twenty years standing. I had exhausted all of the resources, both of experience and authority, and when my patient commenced the use of it, had no hope of his recovery. He has been using the water five weeks, with results so favorable that he now has every prospect of complete recovery, and without some unexpected change in his condition, will be on his feet in a short time. The effects of the water in this case have been marvelous. For the sake of humanity I shall keep a record of the case, and report to you as it advances."
In a subsequent communication Dr. Greer, referring to the above case, says;
"In the case of 'Inflammation and Ulceration of the Bladder,' heretofore reported, the patient recovered and I attribute the recovery entirely to the Lithia Water."
STONE.
CASE OF MR. C. WOLFFE, OF POINT COUPEE PARISH, LA.
POINT COUPEE PARISH, LA., April 2, 1878.
MR. THOMAS F. GOODE, Proprietor Buffalo Lithia Springs, Va.:
Two years ago I began to suffer with a severe and constant pain in my kidneys, which was soon followed by violent attacks, averaging about two a week, causing excruciating agony, from which I was frequently relieved by the discharge of stone of from four to six grains in weight: at other times by the passage of smaller stones, and sometimes by sand in considerable quanties.
I sought, but in vain, the best medical assistance, and as the result of this state of things, I was reduced to such a condition that my medical advisers told me frankly that I had nothing to hope from remedies; that my condition was a hopeless one, and I looked to death alone for a termination of a miserable existence. Mr. J. L. Lyons, a druggist of New Orleans, about six months ago, advised me to try the Buffalo Lithia Water, Spring No. 2, which I did. About a week after I commenced the use of it I had an attack of less than usual severity, in which I passed two small stones, one of which I placed in a tumbler of the water, and in about three hours found it dissolved to fine powder. That gave me confidence, and I determined to persevere in its use. I have had no attack whatever since, nor has there been any discharge of stone or sand.
The pain in my kidneys has entirely disappeared; my weight, which had been greatly reduced, I have fully regained, and my general health has been entirely restored. I very cheerfully acknowledge my indebtedness to the Buffalo Lithia Water for my life, and the comfort which I now enjoy.
Respectfully, C. WOLFFE.

Love-Song

(AFTER THE ANTIQUE.)

Call the facets of the dew!
Bid them sparkle for thine eyes!
Rob the violet's tender blue,
Borrowed from less azure skies!
And charm the Rose, that softly glows,
To lend thy cheek its changing dyes!

But deem not, Maid, an honest mind
Such fickle toys as these may win;
The painted rind may charm and blind,
Yet dare not show the cheat within.
Dear Maid, a sweet, shy Rose thou art—
Ah—tell me! hath the Rose a heart?

—W. M. Briggs; Scribner for November.

Little Bo Peep.

Little Bo Peep!—ah, where away
Leads she her sheep, this summer day?

Somewhere the shy little maid must be—
She's so nut-brown real to you and me!

—Paul Pastnor in November Wide Awake.

The Minister's Wife—A True Story.

We were about getting a new minister, a difficult matter, as all can testify who have tried it. He had preached for us a Sabbath or two. He was earnest, that was unquestioned; had a consistent life for his record, and that was a great point; was a good thinker, and a fearless advocate of what he believed, but his voice was poor, he was not quite so famous as some wished, and his hearing was not sufficiently marked and dignified, some of the people said.

Yet as often as anything disparaging was remarked somebody immediately added, "But his wife is lovely!" We heard this reiterated so often that some of us finally said, "What difference does it make? We thought it was not the wife we were to settle over us, but the man himself?" Every possible objection was overruled, however, because the wife was so beyond compare.

He came, and brought with him one whom we were all eager to see and know; one of the sunniest, gentlest, yet strongest, most unselfish women it has ever been my blessing to know and love. She was not beautiful, but her face had such a kindling of interest for one and all that you could never forget its expression.

She entered heartily into his work; they were all her people, her friends. She showed no partiality. No one of us ever felt that she liked one above another. She kept our secrets locked in her own heart, and never betrayed a trust.

No one ever heard her speak ill of another. She was approachable to everybody, yet we paid her deference, both from her position and because we loved her. Men and women received alike equal favor and honor at her hands. We looked to her as a leader, while she was in reality a companion. We expected her home and husband would be first in her care and affections, and so they were.

She was interested in everything, cultured enough to talk with the learned, and not above the poorest and most ignorant of her flock. She never showed irritability. If she had temper she conquered herself by prayer. She was her husband's best adviser.

Not everything went right with the minister He was able, but not always wise; sometimes hasty, sometimes domineering, it seemed; sometimes saying things better left unsaid, occasionally too frivolous, and now and then too austere. Some said he liked the rich better than the poor, the cultured better than the unlettered. Some said he was over-ambitious, that he was not always unconscious of himself, others that he lacked magnanimity in pecuniary matters and in the little things of every-day life; but they liked his preaching, and always added, "He has such a lovely wife!"

She healed all differences, and really kept the church a unit by her kindliness and Christian tact. A wife less sympathetic, or less wise and capable, would have completely changed the aspect of affairs.

A little child came into the minister's home, and the young wife went out of it. I never saw a church so crushed. For weeks and months every face wore a wistful look, as though they hoped in some unexplained way to meet her, perchance, and feel again her cordial welcome. The pastor, too, began to realize as never before how she had brightened and sustained him. The people cared for the motherless child because it was her baby. A blessed revival followed, and her death was the spiritual life of a great number. The little failings of the minister were forgotten in the noble work he did to win souls, and yet they were not fully satisfied, and the pastorate was changed.

Our pulpit has since then been filled by able and eloquent men, who have had pleasant wives, and our church has prospered, but our hearts have hungered again and again for the lovely woman who came to be such a power in our midst. We have said to each other often in all these years, "Doesn't it, indeed, make a difference what kind of a wife the minister has?" Ah, vastly more than he thinks, when he chooses her as his companion, and vastly more than the people imagine when he comes among them to be their leader and guide!—Congregationalist.

The Paradise of Babies.

The real "Paradise of Babies" is Japan,—as has been said many times,—for not only do the children have every imaginable toy, but many persons get their living by amusing them. Men go about the streets and blow soap-bubbles for them with pipes that have no bowls as ours have. These young Japs have tops, stilts, popguns, blow-guns, magic lanterns, kaleidoscopes, wax figures, terra cotta animals, flying-fish and dragons, masks, puzzles, and games; butterflies and beetles that flutter about; turtles that move their legs and pop out their heads; birds that fly about, and peck the fingers and whistle; paste-board targets that, when hit, burst open and let a winged figure fly out; and—most wonderful of all, perhaps—little balls looking like alderpith, which, thrown into bowls of warm water, slowly expand into the shape of a boat, or a fisherman, a tree, flower, crab, or bird.

The girls of Japan have dolls' furniture and dishes, and, of course, dolls. They have dolls that walk and dance; dolls that put on a mask when a string is pulled; dolls dressed to represent nobles, ladies, minstrels, mythological and historical personages. Dolls are handed down for generations, and in some families are hundreds of them. They never seem to get broken or worn out, as yours do; and, in fact, they can hardly be the dear playmates that yours are.—They are kept as a sort of show; and, though the little owners play with them, they do not dress and undress them and take them to bed, as you do. A good deal of the time they are rolled up in silk paper and packed away in a trunk. On the great festival day of the Japanese girls,—the Feast of Dolls, of which no doubt you have heard,—there is a great show of dolls and toys, and it is the event of the year for the queer little black-eyed maidens. The Feast of Flags is the boys' great day, and they have banners, flags, figures of warriors and great men, swords, and other toys suitable for boys.—Olive Thorne, in St. Nicholas for November.

Things Not to Do.

Never talk slang. Never say you have been dished when you mean you have been disappointed. Never say you have been sold when you mean you have been cheated. Never say a thing is "too thin," or "that's the worst I ever heard," or "tell that to the marines." Never say awful for very, and try never to exaggerate. Never slam the door. Never lose your temper. Be calm, whatever happens.

Forming Character.

Character is from a word whose root denotes a mark made in anything by cutting, carving, engraving or scraping. The infant is supposed to have no character. The parent forms it by carving into its nature and impressing upon its mind, ideas, opinions, tastes, and qualities. Thus temper, manners, virtues are developed. You form all these. You develope the good or the evil, the sweet or the bitter, the elevating or the debasing. The chisel is harder than the marble; the stronger prevails over the weaker. If you are evil-hearted you engrave your evil nature on the mind or habits of your child or friend. You mould, you shape in a measure every person you know or see. You stamp the good or the bad on your associates and acquaintances, just as your heart is pure or dark. Your words and deeds do this. Hence to a certain degree you are responsible for all character that is formed about you. I hold you to this position of responsibility. There is no escape. Are you marking out for yourself in lines of light a good character in which Christ the perfect man is the central figure, and so carrying out a grand eternal destiny? Will your carving stand the scrutiny of the eye of God? Or, are you stamping the wrong, the bad, the dark lines of sin on your nature and on the nature of others? Remember the carving of the evil hand is hard to efface or change.

My friend you have very little character anyway, while ont of Christ,—suppose you permit the Lord to give you a good one. He will do it. Alas, a solemn reflection connected with this matter is, that we are forming characters that will be exhibited in all their beauty and grandeur, or hideousness and shame in the great day. To have Christ within, now and forever, is of priceless worth. Look to this matter.—The Christian.

The Welcome Visitor.

The man who knows how to "drop in" of an evening, draw his chair up to your hearth as if it were his own, and fall into the usual evening routine of the household as if he were a member of it—how welcome he always is! The man who comes to stay under your roof for a season, and who, without being intrusive, makes you feel that he is "at home" with you, and is content in his usual fashion of occupation—how delightful a guest he is! And the houses—ah! how few of them—into which one can go for a day or a week and feel sure that the family routine is in no wise altered, the family comfort is in no wise lessened, but, on the contrary, increased by his presence—what joy it is to cross their threshold! What good harbours of refuge they are to weary wanderers!

What to Feed Young Chicks.

At the early stage hard-boiled eggs are wholesome and nourishing for them. But unless eggs are plenty and cheap they are an expensive food, and not at all indispensable. Bread crumbs, dry or soaked in milk, will answer very well for first feeding. As a staple food for the first few weeks some breeders recommend wheat bran and coarse corn meal in equal parts. This should be either scalded or cooked, and fed to them in a crumbly state. It is well occasionally to cook the meal with meat scraps from the table, or to put in a little grass of some sort. Boiled potatoes, cabbage chopped fine, meat raw or cooked, and table scraps will all be relished by the little birds, and will help them to grow. This variety is more essential in the early spring, before the grass and insects appear. Cracked corn, dry, and whole wheat are both excellent articles of food. These may be alternated with the meal and bran mentioned above, feeding each three times a day. In cold weather a little red pepper may be used in the morning meal to advantage. Those who are feeding with a view to attain weight for the early market would do well to increase the proportions of corn meal, using two parts of this to one of bran.

The Floods in Spain.

A dispatch from Paris to the London Times says: "The total damage by the recent floods in Spain is estimated at 60,000,000f. Three thousand five hundred houses and one hundred and twenty mills were destroyed. King Alfonso has subscribed 50,000f. for the relief of the sufferers, and the Princess of Asturias 5,000 piastres. The Bank of Spain has collected 60,000f. for the same purpose." A dispatch from Madrid to the Siaddard says: "The Cortes will be asked to relieve Murcia from direct taxes in consequence of losses occasioned by the inundation. The flood was subsiding rapidly on Saturday and no fresh danger was expected."

Literary Items.

According to the Literary World, Boston, the author of "Signor Monaldini's Niece" is Mary Agnes Tincker. She is an American and a Roman Catholic, and has spent some years in Rome, although now living in this country.

Religious books have almost as large a sale as the yellow-covered literature. E. P. Dutton & Co. cannot print Canon Farrar's Life of St. Paul fast enough to supply the demand. The first edition was sold before it left the press.

We would not go to Mr. Matthew Arnold for theology, but may agree to take his word in matters relating to literature, in which he is a proficient and master. His latest work has been to publish a volume containing choice selections from the poem's of Wordsworth, together with a preliminary essay in which he discusses his qualities and his place among the poets. It is a pleasure to hear him say that Wordsworth is "one of the chief glories of English poetry," and to have him recommend his writings in preference to those of many who are usually ranked far above him. It is the fashion to read Shakespeare, and it is not the fashion to read Wordsworth, and yet the latter is full of a literary and moral grace of which the distinguished dramatist never dreamed. It will be a real gain to the morals of the rising generation if they shall be induced by Mr. Arnold to get the poems he so warmly commends and make them subjects of careful study.—United Presbyterian.

M. Louis Blanc is said to be so small a man that, when sitting at his desk in the Chamber of Deputies, merely his head is visible. His voice is also very weak, and this fact, together with his small stature, has won him among many the name of "The microscopic orator." He talks as though he were writing a book or addressing somebody from the tribune.

"The highest reach of human science is the scientific recognition of human ignorance. Qui nescit ignorare, ignorat scire."—Sir William Hamilton.

"Go out, young man; she's not here," said a Pennsylvania minister in the midst of his sermon, to a youth he saw standing hesitatingly in the doorway.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Superiority of Women.

Modesty is the distinguishing attribute of women, as courage is said to be that of men. Women are conservative, men destructive; men create, women preserve; men kill, women save life; the courage of men leads to enterprise, but the greatest enterprises have been saved from ruin by the quick wit or courage of a woman. Men temper their pity with judgment, women give theirs for sweet pity's sake alone, neither inquiring nor caring as to the merits of the case. Men may have talent, but women have tact; men accomplish much with great exertion, but women move the world by unseen influences, and by work which neither shows nor exhausts. It is admitted that women are better judges of character than men, and this is partly owing to the fact that in their instinctive judgment the question of morality has greater influence on the judgment than with men. A woman cannot give you reasons for her decision, but it is generally correct; a man will overwhelm you with reasons in favor of an erroneous conclusion. Women have many of the prominent traits or qualities which make up what we call genius in men—the great poets, the great artists, and even the great conquerers, had all the woman's side of their nature strongly developed; and it has been often observed that almost every really great man owed his best points of character—those which made him powerful—to the mother. Women live by faith, men by works. Women believe, men wait for proof. Mary went to the grave to seek the risen Saviour, but Thomas must lay his finger in the wounds before the stubborn doubts give way. Men take the world by storm, women gain their point by slow and silent approaches. Men are impetuous, women persistent. Men are easily discouraged, women are patient and tenacious. Men are ready for change, the nomadic nature is strong within them; women suffer by change, they do not bear transplanting well.—Scottish-American Journal.

Antiquity of the Sabbath.

It is fashionable nowadays for those opposed to the holy observance of the Lord's Day to speak contemptuously of it as merely a Jewish ordinance, which is no more binding upon Christians than any portion of the Mosaic ceremonial law. Such persons, of course, ignore the facts that the institution of the Sabbath is coeval with the creation, that the Sabbath was observed by the Israelites, in the wilderness prior to the giving of the law from Mount Sinai (Exodus xvi), and that our Saviour expressly declared that "the Sabbath was made for man"—i. e., for the whole human race, and not for one nation only. It is very interesting to find that the researches which of late years have been made in the ruined cities of Assyria and Babylonia, and which have so signally confirmed the literal accuracy of the Bible narrative in other particulars, furnish evidence of the observance of the seventh day as a Sabbath even by a heathen people centuries before the exodus. From the great library at Nineveh, two-thirds of which is now in the British Musem, much interesting information has been obtained regarding the Accadians, the original inhabitants of Chaldea, who flourished up to about the time of the call of Abraham. They appear to have been a people of considerable culture and learning for such remote times, and to them we, in these days, owe the signs of the Zodiac and the days of the week. The seventh day, Sabbath, was kept as a day of rest with almost Jewish severity. The king was forbidden on it to eat cooked fruit or meat, to change his clothes or wear white robes, to drive his chariot, to sit in judgment, to review his troops, or even to take medicine. It is evident that in these regulations, whimsical as some of them were, there lingered the memory, obscured by time and spiritual darkness, of a divinely instituted Sabbath. Doubtless further researches will bring to light increasing evidence on this as on other Biblical matters. We live in the days when God is of a truth causing the stones to cry out.—London Review.

Preaching in English.

I think some spiritual power is lost by many of our preachers not preaching in the English language. There are half a dozen sets of languages in England, and there is a certain stratum of language which is nearly all Latin, and that happens to be the peculiar lingo of a number of brethren. Depend upon it, our power over the masses will be in our speaking so that we can be understood. They make fearful blunders over what we say when we speak plainly, but if we use hard words they will not know what you mean. We must try and cut long words right in halves, and when we have done so we must burn the two places. Take the common Saxon tongue. "But we should be vulgar," says one. Well, be vulgar. They used to make the sponsors at baptism promise that they would see that the child was instructed in the "vulgar tongue," and we have to make the people comprehend the Gospel, not reverence us for our Latin.—C. H. Spurgeon.

India ranks fourth among the countries in the world for the extent of coal deposits. She has 30,000 square miles of coal fields; the United States 500,000; China, 400,000; and Australia, 240,000; but only 500,000 tons are annually mined in India.

The Wilmington Review notes a very flattering, and, to the producers, a very gratifying increase in the price of all kinds of naval stores very recently. A month ago, September 18th, spirits was quoted at 25 cents, and to-day it sold for 31 cents. Rosin is in demand to-day at $1 25 for strained and $1 30 for good strained, as against 92½ and 97½ cents a month ago.

A poem attributed to Goethe and published in critical editions of his works—"The Journal"—has been brought out in separate form in Germany. Last month the copies of the poem on sale in a leading bookstore of Vienna were seized by order of the royal prosecuting counsel on the same grounds that books are taken possession of in the United States by Anthony Comstock. For a German city such a proceeding was vastly more astonishing than the seizure of an edition of one of Byron's poems would be in New York.

Messrs. Craddock & Co.:

Gentlemen:—Please send me twelve bottles of Cannabis Indica, one each of Pills and Ointment, for a friend of mine who is not expected to live; and as your medicines cured me of Consumption some three years ago, I want him to try them. I gained fifteen pounds while taking the first three bottles.

Respectfully, J. V. HULL

N. B.—This remedy speaks for itself. A single bottle will satisfy the most skeptical. We know that it positively cures Consumption, and will break up a fresh cold in twenty-four hours. $2 50 per bottle, or three bottles for $6 50. Pills and Ointment, $1 25 each. Address, CRADDOCK & CO., 1033 Race st., Philadelphia.

Can't Preach Good.

No man can do a good job of work, preach a good sermon, try a lawsuit well, doctor a patient, or write a good article when he feels miserable and dull, with sluggish brain, and unsteady nerves, and none should make the attempt in such a condition when it can be so easily and cheaply removed by a little Hop Bitters. THE GENUINE

DR. C. McLANE'S

CELEBRATED

FOR THE CURE OF

Hepatitis, or Liver Complaint,

DYSPEPSIA AND SICK HEADACHE.

Symptoms of a Diseased Liver.

PAIN in the right side, under the edge of the ribs, increases on pressure; sometimes the pain is in the left side; the patient is rarely able to lie on the left side; sometimes the pain is felt under the shoulder blade, and it frequently extends to the top of the shoulder, and is sometimes mistaken for rheumatism in the arm. The stomach is affected with loss of appetite and sickness; the bowels in general are costive, sometimes alternative with lax; the head is troubled with pain, accompanied with a dull, heavy sensation in the back part. There is generally a considerable loss of memory, accompanied with a painful sensation of having left undone something which ought to have been done. A slight, dry cough is sometimes an attendant. The patient complains of weariness and debility; he is easily startled, his feet are cold or burning, and he complains of a prickly sensation of the skin; his spirits are low; and although he is satisfied that exercise would be beneficial to him, yet he can scarcely summon up fortitude enough to try it. In fact, he distrusts every remedy. Several of the above symptoms attend the disease, but cases have occurred where few of them existed, yet examination of the body, after death, has shown the LIVER to have been extensively deranged.

AGUE AND FEVER.

DR. C. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS, IN CASES OF AGUE AND FEVER, when taken with Quinine, are productive of the most happy results. No better cathartic can be used, preparatory to, or after taking Quinine. We would advise all who are afflicted with this disease to give them a FAIR TRIAL.

For all bilious derangements, and as a simple purgative, they are unequaled.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

The genuine are never sugar coated.

Every box has a red wax seal on the lid, with the impression DR. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS.

The genuine McLANE'S LIVER PILLS bear the signatures of C. McLANE and FLEMING BROS. on the wrappers.

Insist upon having the genuine DR. C. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS, prepared by Fleming Bros., of Pittsburgh, Pa., the market being full of imitations of the name McLane, spelled differently but same pronunciation.

PREVENT YELLOW FEVER!

It has been well proved that prevention is better than cure. A very simple and effective preventative for Yellow Fever and other fevers has been found in BENSON'S CAPILINE POROUS PLASTERS. They were used during last season in New Orleans very successfully. The common method of using them was to apply them over the stomach, changing them every week. They are one OF THE MOST ACTIVE ANTISEPTICS and seem to destroy the poison. One reason why they are of special value is that they stimulate the digestion, and thus enable the system to overcome the influence of the malarial poison. They are a cheap and almost certain preventative. Ask your physician about them. Benson's Capsine Plasters are a sure preventative and cure for chills and fever if worn as above. Price 25 cents.

THIS MOTOR can be easily attached to any SEWING MACHINE. The weight of the operator sitting in any ordinary chair will run the machine several minutes, when by rocking back in the chair the, motor immediately rewinds itself. No effort is required beyond that of occasionally rocking back in a rocking chair, and thus the great objection to the use of Sewing Machines is obviated.

The Motor will be sent postpaid on receipt of $4.50. The Motor and a Rocking Chair will be forwarded by Express for $5.00. A liberal discount to Agents ordering ten or more at once.

LETTER FROM SIAM.

FOR THE LITTLE FOLKS.

CHIENGMAI, North Laos, Siam, July 22, 1879.

MY DEAR FRIENDS: It is surely with no feeling of vanity that I make the following letter public. It was written at Nan Inta's own suggestion, and with no idea of publication. It will interest you, instruct you, and should do you all good. Others of you who talk may well lay to heart the appeal of our beloved elder and assistant. The N. C. PRESBYTERIAN has no better men among its correspondents, and it is doubtful whether the Presbyterian Church, North or South, have any more faithful ruling elders than he is. The original was sent to the one to whom it was addressed, a pupil in the Simenton Female College, Statesville, where, under Mrs. Grant's and Miss Mitchell's efficient training, we trust she is preparing to answer the call hereby sent to her, and through her to some of you. I give almost a verbatim translation:

"Loong Nan Inta's compliments to Emelie. Loong Nan has joy, because God has mercifully taken care of papa, mamma, Cornelia and Allie, and Norwood, being well and happy, every one. Also Loong Nan and his wife, and his children and grandchildren are well, because the merit of our God has taken care of us. Also Pa Peng (his wife) and Kam Tip (his second daughter) have received the sacramental baptism. Of Loong Nan's seven children only Kam Tip has received the sacrament of baptism. Of the others Kam Ai, Nan Seewachi, Nan Seepa, Kaoma Rnen, Kammoon and Oon Ruen, these six have not yet been baptized, but have faith (are believing). Loong Nan prays Emilie to entreat the brethren (relatives), who are the great teachers of your school and Church, to pray for Loong Nan's children and grandchildren and relatives and friends in Chiengmai. Also to pray for all the teachers, male and female, and all their pupils. Cornelia and Allie are exercising on the instrument with Miss Campbell.

"Again, I beg Emelie to remember Chiengmai and the towns around, namely, Lappoen, Lakaun, Muang Praa, M. Nan and Hlnang Chabang, M. Ngow, M. Pugow and M. Chiengkeng. All of these towns have many inhabitants, and they are all in darkness. Loong Nan begs Emelie, his beloved neice, to stir up the brethren (relatives) to pray that God will send His laborers to come to this kingdom to make it the inheritance of our God. Again, when Emelie has finished her education and turned her books, all finished) to return, we beg her to establish her heart to come to this land, and if she intends to go to any other nation, we beg her to come to Chiengmai first.

"Again, Loong Nan's former troubles, caused by the persecutions of the Prince, God has graciously granted him peace, and God has also graciously granted to others to know Him, because He inclined the heart of the great King of Siam to send a royal decree forbidding the princes and masters in Chiengmai to oppose those who wish to become Christians and forbidding any oppression of those who have or shall become such in future.

"Loong Nan also begs Emelie to tell Evander that Loong Nan remembers him, sending greeting, and begs Evander not to forget Chiengmai."

Many of you remember that the writer of the above was the first Laos convert admitted to the Church, the one who was first led to believe in Buddhism, and to study the books of the Christian religion, by an eclipse of the sun in 1868, which convinced him that their books cannot be relied on. He is the one that so pathetically asked why we had not sent the Gospel to the Laos before his parents and ancestors had passed away, though he has one grandmother, nearly a hundred years old, living in the city. She has long been quite deaf, but has good teeth, and otherwise is in good health. Nan Inta himself is in his 60th year, and this is his own mother tongue. You will remember another incident, written before, concerning him. When he was to be ordained a ruling elder he was told he must read the Confession of Faith, as he would be required to subscribe to it. When he finished he said he saw "nothing peculiar in it. It was very much like what he had been reading in Paul's Epistles." In the first persecution he was a refugee for a time to a neighboring city, and last year was kept in confinement till he was taken sick, and would have died if we had not get permission to bring him to our place for treatment. We trust that all who read his simple but urgent appeal for his people will be stirred up to earnest prayer on their behalf.

Our last communion was a day to be remembered in Chiengmai. Eleven persons were received to the communion of the Church on public profession of their faith. Ten were natives, by baptism. The other was a child of the covenant, a little girl eight and a half years old. Though young we could not resist her earnest plea to be admitted to the communion, and ask for little Allie your prayers. Three children were baptized at the same time. This gives us a membership of forty-four adults and nearly sixty baptized members. Three of these last were girls from the female boarding school new tanght by Miss Cole and Miss Campbell. With them the middle-aged and the old man of 76 stood up, some with their children and grandchildren entering into a solemn covenant with God. Nan Inta's oldest daughter, Kaoma Rnen, and her infant child, and his youngest son, Oon Rnen, were baptized, leaving still three sons and one daughter not yet church members. One family is worthy of special notice. It was the "household of Laang Boon," herself and her neice on profession of faith, and two bright little boys on the faith of the mother. She belonged to a good family, her first husband being a prince and an uncle of the present viceroy's wife. On his death she married a widower, whose first wife was suspected of witchcraft, and through him Laang Boon and her two little boys became suspected and were to be driven away from their homes, according to Laos custom, to a village where only the suspected witches and their families reside. To save her from a doom that they dread second only to death she was divorced from her husband, and he was allowed to be sent off alone, hoping thereby to turn away the suspicion from the rest of the family. But it was all in vain. The neighbors clamored for the expulsion of the wife and children, and all the sickness in their village was attributed to them. At the request of a prince, a son of her first husband by a different wife, I took the family on our place, promising to risk the spirit of the dead, and do all I could to protect her against her living enemies. Her house was to be torn down and the very trees on the lot felled, to leave no haunting place for the spirit to dwell. Soon after this the King's proclamation of religious toleration arrived, one clause of which gave us a legal right to protect her. Meanwhile she had made over to us by written agreement her two boys for six years to be taught, and the neice, a girl of twenty, had become a favorite pupil in the girl's school. From the first they were interested listeners to the Word, and silently the Holy Spirit enlightened their minds, and at our last communion they applied for admission to the church. On examination before the session she was reminded that her divorce was in the days of her darkness and ignorance, and was asked if she would now be willing to allow her husband to return if we would protect him. The memory of what she had suffered and feared led her to answer, "No, she preferred the separation to be final." As there was a regular legal divorce according to Laos style, and as there was no probability of her marrying again, neither Bro. Wilson nor I thought it right to make the rennion to her husband a condition of admission, however gratifying it might be, as an evidence of a change of heart. Nan Inta could hardly reconcile the refusal with a new heart, and was for insisting on it. We did not inform her on Saturday night of the result of the examination, expecting to confer with our elder and speak to her in the morning. But early on Sabbath morning Laang Boon came up to inform us that on deliberation and prayer she had decided, as this life is short and the next has no end, to make any sacrifice or take up any cross that her Saviour might require, and was willing to leave the whole question to Providence and the Church. That was all that even Nan Inta could ask, for it was only a hypothetical case after all, as no one knew whether her husband wished to return, or whether there might not be other insuperable obstacles in the way. But her prompt and frank decision was a victory that filled us all with joy, as no better evidence could have been given of the true spirit of Christian sacrifice, of all for Christ. We rejoice over the whole family as in a double sense a conquest over Satan. Her bright little boys, we hope, will some day become ministers. We ask your prayers for them.

The examination before the session showed us that during the last two or three months God's Spirit had attended the preaching of the Word with more than usual power. The Lord was with us and we almost knew it not. While we were yet waiting He had already come.

We again ask special prayer in behalf of our Church and mission. And how many of the old or the young who read these lines will give up all for the sake of following Christ?

Your true friend,

DANIEL MCGILVARY.

For the N. C. Presbyterian.

DID THE APOSTLE PAUL USE SLANG WORDS?

Mr. Editor: In your last week's issue (20th October) you had an excellent article, six or eight lines long, on the fourth page, first column, at the bottom, entitled, "Things Not to Do." And the main things not to do was the use of slang or cant words or phrases. It is hardly worth while to give a definition, as such words or phrases are in such common use that all who read this will know what I mean. The use of them is more the result of habit than any thing else, and a very bad habit it is. It would appear more frequently than it does if the rules of correct speaking and good writing, and I may add of good breeding, had not taught the ear to be offended with the repetition of the same sound, and oftentimes caused us to reject on that account the word which offered itself first to our recollection.

The question is, did the great Apostle ever use such slang words or phrases? I think there is no doubt of it, as can be easily shewn. The Apostle, in writing, had his whole soul so intently engaged on the subject in hand that even if he knew of such good writing rules he did not regard them, and of course such words would occur from mere habit. The truth is an example of this kind runs through several of his Epistles, and especially in the Epistle to the Ephesians. The word is "riches," used metaphorically as an augmentative of the idea to which it happens to be subjoined. Thus, "the riches of his glory;" "his riches in glory;" "the riches of the glory of his inheritance;" "riches of the glory of this mystery." See Rom. ix: 23; Eph. iii: 16; Eph. i: 18; Col. i: 27. Again, "riches of his grace," twice in Eph. i: 7, and ii: 7; "riches of the goodness," Rom. ii: 4; "riches of the wisdom of God," Rom. xi: 33; "riches of Christ," "Eph. iii: 8. In a like sense the adjective is used, as, Rom. x: 12, "rich unto all that call upon him;" Eph. ii: 4, "rich in mercy;" 1st Tim. vi: 18, "rich in good works." And so also is the adverb used—Col. iii, 16, "let the word of Christ dwell in you richly." This figurative use of the word, though so familiar to the Apostle Paul, does not occur in any other part of the New Testament, except once in the Epistle of James, ch. ii: 5, "Hath not God chosen the poor of this world, rich in faith?" where it is manifestly suggested by the antithesis.

After this one example, so striking that it unnecessary to give others, which could easily be done, I wish to make a single remark: That the Apostle's slang words and phrases—as they certainly were—differed in toto cœlo from those now in common use. "The riches of his grace" and "the riches of his glory," fall on my ear with a sound, and a meaning too, far different from the common slang of the day, as "awful sweet," "real nice," &c. In the one case there is a majesty of thought, an elevation of piety, a tenderness of heart, and a singleness of purpose, which no man ever did or ever will attentively examine without admiration; in the other a stupid vulgarity, sheer poverty of thought, the fear of saying anything definite, and the most arrant nonsense, which no man of good sense and good breeding can listen to without ineffable disgust.

D. L.

ADDRESS TO THE CHURCHES.

ADOPTED BY THE SYNOD OF NORTH CAROLINA AND ORDERED TO BE READ IN THE CHURCHES.

The Synod of North Carolina to the Churches within its bounds, sendeth greeting:

DEARLY BELOVED: The close of another Synodical year brings with it the duty of reviewing our condition and progress in the past twelvemonth.

All of our Presbyteries have sent up reports on the state of religion within their bounds. In these, the aspect presented of our beloved Zion is one of mingled lights and shadows. We learn much in respect of the spiritual condition of the Church, for which we give devout thanks to God; and much also which awakens in our hearts alarm and sorrow.

There are, blessed be God, many marks of hopeful progress, indicating the continued presence and the operation of the Holy Ghost in our churches.

The regular ministrations of the Gospel appear to be more extensively enjoyed by our people than has been the case for years past. There are comparatively fewer vacant pulpits—and throughout our bounds the report is of general, respectful and increasing attendance on the preached Word.

Additions to the Church on profession have been made, not in large numbers, but steadily; while in several instances the accessions have been quite numerous, as the result of more than ordinary interest in religion and the awakening influences of the Holy Spirit.

An increasing interest in Sabbath school work is also apparent, indicating an awakening of intelligent zeal in this important department of spiritual work in the family and in the church.

The attention of our people in some places is being called also more earnestly to the condition and wants of our colored population, and something is beginning to be done towards their moral and spiritual elevation.

We are glad to note also a decided tendency to more systematic and enlarged beneficence throughout the Synod. Slowly but constantly the stream of contributions to all the benevolent enterprises of the Kingdom of Christ rises, awakening the hope that ere long it may swell into a flowing river. In this connection we mark with satisfaction the increase of organized effort among the pious women of our Church for the support and promotion of home and foreign missionary work. May the Lord increase their number and bless the work of their hands.

But, dear brethren, there are also, we are pained to behold, dark shadows in the picture: alarming and painful signs of the spirit which is of this world invading and paralyzing the visible body of Christ. All the reports make mention of the neglect of family and social prayer, more especially the former. They also call attention to the widespread desecration of God's holy day in some of the communities in which his Church is set to shine as a holy light. It is painfully apparent, too, that in many of our churches the ministry of the Word is not faithfully supported, and that there is in some degree a carelessness and remissness in the rendering of the worldly maintenance promised to their spiritual teachers.

Brethren, these things ought not to be so. That the fire should go out on the domestic altar; that prayer meetings and the monthly concert should be neglected; that the blessed Sabbath, made for man's spiritual rest and edification, should be turned into a day for our own pleasure and indulgence; and that they who are over you in the Lord to lead you in the way of life and salvation should suffer this lack of performance on your part of stipulated engagements; all these things call for humiliation and are to be deplored as very serious evils, which if suffered to remain uncorrected will eat as a canker into the very heart of the church.

We exhort you to the diligent exercise of every Christian virtue—especially of faith, humility, courage and self-sacrificing devotedness to your high and holy calling. The eye of Him who walketh in the midst of the seven golden candlesticks, and holdeth the seven stars in His hand, is upon you, and His word of comfort and strengthening assurance, amid all your trials and difficulties and perplexities rings yet across the centuries for us, and for all His blood-washed Church. "Be then faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life."

The Synod sends you its salutations. "Grace be with you all. Amen."

MINUTES.

Adopted by the Synod of North Carolina, Touching Ministers Deceased Since the Last Meeting.

REV. N. Z. GRAVES.

The committee appointed to prepare a minute of the death of Rev. N. Z. Graves would submit the following:

Death has snatched another of the beloved ones of this body from us. The attractiveness of Brother Graves's character was felt by all who knew him. To know him was to love him. He labored for years among us as a minister, and the fruits of his labors are visible in Clinton, in Goldsboro, and in Warrenton, where he died. He is now permitted to enjoy above the blessedness of the pure in heart.

REV. JOHN MONROE ANDERSON.

The committee appointed to draft a minute expressing the feelings of the Synod in view of the death of Rev. John Monroe Anderson would respectfully submit the following:

We mourn his death, but we thank God for his life while with us, enriched as it was with superior loveliness and grace.

Fitted by natural endowment and acquired qualification to shine among men, he laid all his gifts on the altar of the Master's service. That service for the larger part of his life was rendered as an educator of youth, and here he excelled not more by the ability which he displayed than by that moral impress which his pupils received from the truthfulness, gentleness and winning tenderness of his character. His highest praise is to say that they loved him, whether as professor in the college, or pastor in the congregation. His active labors for the good of others, for the advancement of the kingdom of our Lord, for the salvation of souls were only limited by the infirmities of the body. Under the encroachments of insidious disease, which only too soon began its deadly work upon him, his bodily strength gradually wasted away, yet the same cheerful piety was exhibited by him to the last, and crowned his dying hour. We feel that in his removal from this earthly scene a sad breach has been made in our ranks, and that he has left to us the legacy of a very precious memory, to be cherished by all who knew him as an incentive to faithfulness in working and a comfort in watching for the coming of our blessed Lord.

REV. JOHN DOUGLAS.

The committee appointed to prepare a memorial paper expressive of the feelings of Synod touching the death of Rev. John Douglas, pastor of Steele Creek and Pleasant Hill churches, Presbytery of Mecklenburg, would submit the following:

Rev. John Douglas was graduated at the South Carolina College in 1830, and completed his theological course in Columbia Seminary in 1835. In April of the same year he was licensed to preach the gospel, and on the 30th April, 1836, he was ordained and installed pastor of Purity and Concord churches, in Bethel Presbytery, where he remained until 1846, when he removed to James Island, and took charge of the James Island church, in the Presbytery of Charleston. Here fifteen years were filled up with unremitting, faithful toil, when his labors were suddenly arrested, and his peaceful home and precious charge became the theatre of a great civil war. According to a recent statement "He saw his home dismantled, its foundations dug into rifle pits, and his church burnt into ashes." Yet in the ministry of mercy and love did he spend those four sad years of our civil strife," as a domestic missionary, along the coast of Charleston. In January, 1866, he was transferred to the Presbytery of Concord, and was duly installed Pastor of Steele Creek and Pleasant Hill Churches. Here for thirteen years he made "full proof of his ministry," laboring as one who watched for souls and seemed not for a moment to lose sight of the responsibilities of his station. And by the grace of God his labors were not in vain. During these busy, prayerful years his churches were greatly revived and strengthened. The eldership was by him inspired and led, and under his eye the work of the deacon became a system and hence a success, and the word preached by him proved the power of God unto the salvation of many souls. About fifty accessions were made to his churches during the first year of his labors, and not less than two hundred and fifty since his ministry began in this Synod.

And his influence was not confined to the local church, but was felt abroad. He was a much valued member of his Presbytery, and had been often and justly honored by this Synod and the General Assembly. For years previous to his death, he was a member of the Board of Trustees of Davidson College, a Director of the Columbia Seminary, and a Trustee of the General Assembly.

Brother Douglas's life was a busy one, a joyous one, and a successful one. Therefore, whilst suppressing our grief over our great and irreparable loss, let us not forget to give thanks unto God, for raising up such a witness for His truth, such a preacher of His Gospel, such a winner of souls, and sparing him to the church for a period of not less than forty-three years.

ABSTRACT OF THE MINUTES OF THE PRESBYTERY OF MECKLENBURG.

Presbytery met at Philadelphia church, Friday, October 17, at 11 a. m., and was opened with a sermon by the Moderator, Rev. G. L. Cook, from the 17th chapter of Hosea.

Present seventeen ministers and twenty-two elders.

Rev. Wm. M. McGilvary was elected Moderator, and Rev. S. C. Alexander and Gen. R. D. Johnston Clerks.

Letters of excuse for absence were read from Revs. L. R. McAboy, D. D., William Graves, D. T. Towles, J. E. Morrison, S. T. Martin and M. R. Kirkpatrick.

Rev. Mr. Wharey, of Concord Presbytery, being present, was invited to sit as a corresponding member.

Rev. Wm. R. Atkinson was received from the Presbytery of Orange.

Sharon church presented a call for the pastoral services of Rev. D. P. Robinson, of Bethel Presbytery, which was approved and the church authorized to prosecute the same before Bethel Presbytery.

R. I. McDowell, Esq., was re-elected a Trustee of Davidson College, to serve four years, and Rev. Wm. H. Davis was elected in place of Rev. John Douglass, deceased, and Rev. E. H. Harding, D. D., in place of Jas. A. Miller, resigned.

The following minute was adopted:

Presbytery learns in sadness and sorrow of the death of our beloved brother and co-presbyter, the Rev. John Douglas, pastor of Steele Creek and Pleasant Hill churches, on the 8th of October, 1879, and extends its sympathies to his family and the people of his charge, and appoints Revs. Wm. E. McIlwaine, Wm. B. Corbett and A. G. Neal, a committee to prepare a sketch of our deceased brother.

Revs. A. W. Miller, Cook, McIlwaine, Atkinson and Parks were appointed to supply Steele Creek church one Sunday each.

Presbytery directed a collection to be taken up in the churches on the first Sunday in December, to raise funds to aid Rev. S. C. Alexander, Evangelist, to move his family to the mountain country, the field assigned him, and appointed Col. John L. Brown and Gen. R. D. Johnston, of Charlotte, to solicit funds for this object.

R. D. Johnston, Chairman Colportage Committee reported, that very few churches had contributed, and Presbytery directed a collection to be taken up in the churches on the 2nd Sunday in December for this cause.

Saturday afternoon was spent mainly in a conference on the subject of revivals, which was discussed by Revs. Wm. H. Davis, Pharr, Alexander, Parks, Corbett and Drs. Harding and Miller.

Candidate Geo. S. Robertson was dismissed on his own request to Holston Presbytery; and candidate Robert S. Arrowood was, at his own request relieved from further preparation for the ministry, and his name dropped from the roll.

Rev. Wm. B. Corbett, agent, made a report on Foreign Missions.

The roll was called and thirty-nine churches were reported, and a Narrative was prepared and ordered to be forwarded to Synod.

The thanks of the Presbytery were tendered to the congregation for hospitalities and kind attentions, in sending so far for the members.

Presbytery adjourned to meet at Dallas, on Friday, at 7 p. m., before the third Sunday in March, 1880.

Attest: R. Z. JOHNSTON, Stated Clerk, Lincolnton, N. C., Oct., 20, 1879.

FALSE SENTIMENT AS TO WORK FOR YOUNG LADIES.

A false sentiment has rendered it derogatory for a woman to be a business woman, for a girl to earn or appreciate dollars and cents, if she can possibly find a father, brother or uncle to support her. The noble army of working women, who of all women best demonstrate their raison d'etre, is in general a despised army; and while society applauds the woman who is an artist, an editor, an author, it does so by calling her a genius, and setting her out of that grand corps where she legitimately belongs. Families with three, four or five daughters, whether there are sons or not, if the father can possibly support them, are brought up to do nothing but "help mother a little!" This helping is not generally really learning house-keeping and seamstress work in all its varieties, but skimming the surface of things, making a cake, dusting a room, trimming a gown, and leaving those weightier matters of the law, as shirt-making, ironing, bread-making and beef-cooking to some one else.

Girls speak of it as a hardship, if they are obliged by stress of circumstances to earn a support. "Anna thinks it so hard; all her friends have their time to themselves, and she is forced to teach, poor child!" The whole training of the girl is aside from knowing about business; she reads stories and fashion magazines, not newspapers, and works on science and architecture, and practical everyday life. She does not learn telegraphy, or carving, or furniture decorating, or gardening, or book-keeping, nor does she go into her father's business and learn it as her brother would, if she had one; bless you, it would make her a working woman.

Thus out of this army of working women are kept, so far as possible, all women of education, means, refinement, cultured taste. These organized into a society make no end of blunders in business, and regard them as creditable, rather than otherwise, as a Chinese lady cherishes the deformity of a cramped foot. If they read common law and medicine so as to be well informed on these points as ordinary men; bless you, "they are very odd," at the least. These good ladies, with the very best intentions, undertake to handle the working woman question; they are thrown into contact with the poor, and knowing absolutely nothing of what it is to earn a living, or what it costs to earn a dollar, or what a dollar can be made to bring, they have only the most general and no particular sympathies; on the one hand they will be deceived and kill by over-kindness, on the other, they will misunderstand and kill by hardness.

It needs working women to understand and help working women; then they knew that being bread-winners does not forfeit for them their position as wives and mothers; that while they earn daily wages they have the affections of the hearth; that the poor mother, left a widow, wants to keep her children in a home, not to sew them broadcast in orphan asylums; that the poor couple who have passed their married fifty years, unhonored, it is true, by a golden wedding, do not want to be thrust, one into an Old Men's Home, the other into an Old Women's Home, or put in the separate wards of an almshouse, or one to go to one Blind Asylum and the other to another. There is a fine kind of charity in England where endowments have been left so that decent, destitute old couples, or single people, can have a nice three-roomed cottage, with fuel, water and lights, and a certain number of shillings weekly on which to subsist; and they can take in an orphan grandchild, or feeble child, living as in their own home, subject only to certain regulations of sobriety, cleanliness and good order.—Sunday Afternoon.

"PAY JOHN WILLIAMS."

At a church meeting not far from Boston, a man who credit was not the best, and who was somewhat noted for his failure to meet his obligations arose to speak. The subject for the evening was, "What shall I do to be saved?" Commencing in measured tones he quoted the passage, "What shall I do to be saved?" He paused, and again more emphatically asked the question, "What shall I do to be saved?" Again, with increased solemnity and impressiveness of manner, he repeated the momentous inquiry, when a voice from the assembly answered in clear and distinct tones, "Go and pay John Williams for that yoke of oxen you bought of him!" The remainder of the gentleman's address was not reported. All present appreciated the fitness of the unexpected word in season, and were saved from hearing a lengthy exhortation from a swindler's lips.

The incident has led us to think that there are a good many people who, before they make much progress in walking in the way of salvation themselves, or guiding others therein, will have to "Go and pay John Williams," or John somebody else, the money that they honestly owe them. There is no man shrewd enough to pursue a course of dishonesty and trickery, and still retain the favor of God in this world, or a good hope of glory for the world to come. It is best to settle up, square up, and pay up, and then it will be in order to talk in the prayer meeting.—Christian.

I GO BY THE BOOK.

Two men were standing on the deck of a ship, which was on the stocks, and nearly completed, in a ship-yard. One of them was the foreman, and the other was one of the carpenters engaged in building the vessel. "Well, David," said the foreman, "I have been thinking I would like to talk with you a little. I hear you are one of those who say they know for certain that they are saved, and I am curious to learn how that can be."

"Well," said David, "I know it is a reality; and I knew, too, that there is such a thing as knowing that one is saved. What is the breadth of this water-way?"

"Why, fourteen inches all round, to be sure; what makes you ask that, when you know?"

"But are you quite sure that it is to be fourteen inches?" said David.

"Certainly."

"But what makes you so sure?"

"Why, I go by the book;" and as he said so he pulled a small memorandum book out of his pocket, in which were marked the size and position of the various things on the deck. "I'm sure it is fourteen inches, for it is here in the book, and I got the book from headquarters."

"Oh! I see," said David. "Now, look here; that is just exactly how I know I am saved; 'I go by the Book;' and as he said so he pulled a New Testament out of his pocket. I just go by the Book; it came from headquarters; it came from God; and it says here; 'For God so loved the world, that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life'. John iii: 16. I took God at His word."

CHARLES LAMB TO YOUNG MEN.

The waters have gone over me. But out of the black depths, could I be heard, I could cry out to all those who have but set a foot in the perilous flood. Could the youth to whom the flavor of his first wine is as delicious as the opening scenes of life, or the entering upon some newly-discovered paradise, look into my desolation, and be made to understand what a dreary thing it is when a man shall feel himself going down a precipice with open eyes and a passive will—to see his destruction, and have no power to stop it, and yet not able to forget a time when it was otherwise; to bear upon him the pitious spectacle of his own ruin—could he see my fevered eye—feverish with the last night's drinking, and feverishly looking for to-night's repetition of the folly; could he but feel the body of the death out of which I cry, hourly with feeble outcry, to be delivered—it were enough to make him dash the sparkling beverage to the earth in all the pride of its mantling temptation.

On Tuesday morning M. Jules Grevy presented the Cardinal's biretta to Mensignor Meglia, the late Papal Nuncio at Paris, with the usual ceremony, at the Elysee Palace. The artist who executed the Bunyan gates purchased by the Duke of Bedford, and presented by his Grace to the Baptist chapel at Bedford about four years ago, has given the original castings to the College in Regent's Park, of which Dr. Angus is the principal. The same institution has also been fortunate enough to get from the Duke of Bedford a replica of Mr. Beehm's magnificent statue of John Bunyan, which the Duke presented to the town of Bedford in 1873. The panels of the gate will be placed in the entrance hall of the College.

An imperial ukase, bearing date Sept. 24 (O. S.), has been issued in Russia decreeing that Baptists, who are legally free to exercise their religion, require authorization from the Provincial Governors to open chapels; that their pastors cannot preach sermons or officiate until they have been confirmed in their office by the Governors; that pastors of foreign origin must swear fidelity for the duration of their stay in Russia; and that the Baptists' registers shall be kept by the local civil authorities. The ukase is accompanied by temporary regulations for keeping the registers. The Russki Pravda, a newspaper which recently received a second "warning," publishes the following statement from Ust-Kamenogorskay as to the persecution of the Old Believers in these parts: In the district of Bisk, in the neighborhood of Kamenogersk (Semipalatinsk region), an ancient sect of "Old Believers" has long been located. The members of this community are quiet and patriarchal. They belong to the Episcopal, or "priestless" sect, and emigrated to Siberia in the reign of Elizabeth, retaining their old forms and customs. A great calamity has now befallen this quiet people, devoting themselves to peaceful and industrial pursuits. Some officials, "more zealous than sensible," bethought themselves of persecuting this ancient sect, notwithstanding that these Old Believers have been located there since the year 1750, and have exercised the right of worshiping there according to their own forms. The persecution commenced by annulling their marriages, prohibiting religious worship, &c. Most distressing scenes took place on the annulment of the marriages. In several cases the parties have been married several years and have large families. The families are separated. The mother and children are taken away from the father to another village. Not unfrequently they are exposed to all manner of insults, and thus a family loses its head and bread-winner. A man and wife, after living together ten or fifteen years, are torn apart. The persons engaged in prosecuting their investigations against these people allow themselves most unwarrantable licenses—taking away the religious books of the sect, burning them, and holding out throats of manacles, &c. Not unfrequently the officials are aided in their persecutions of these unfortunates by denunciations on the part of the local priests (of the "orthodox" or National Church). The officials of the communes and the priests in this distant part of the empire are, as a rule, far below the position they occupy.

A proposal has been made in the Common Council of London to open the Guildhall Library on Sundays, and a letter against the Sunday opening, signed by Lord Shaftesbury, the Bishop of London, Sir J. H. Kennaway, M. P., Sir Charles Reed, Mr. Samuel Morley, M. P., the president of the Wesleyan Conference, Mr. Spurgeon, and eighty-seven bishops, members of Parliament, and the leaders of religious bodies, has been sent to the members of the Council. The letter stated that the Sunday opening of libraries cannot be carried out without the Sunday employment of the attendants, and if the Sunday closing principle be broken down in favor of libraries it will be broken down for the opening of numerous other places of amusement and recreation throughout the country. If, says the letter, the libraries be opened on Sundays for those who find pleasure in them, why should the aquariums, the concert rooms, and the operas be closed against those who find pleasure in these? The arguments for opening libraries on Sunday are equally strong for the Sunday opening of numerous other places of amusement, and if it be right for men to work in a public library on Sundays it cannot be wrong for them to work in a shop or factory on Sundays. The religious character of the Sunday is what more than anything else preserves it as a day of rest from labor, and if the religious observance of the day be broken down an immense impetus will be given to secular work and amusements on the day of rest. Proposals to open the free libraries on Sundays have been refused in Leeds, Leicester, Salford, Bolton, Nottingham and other places. The proposal has been negatived by 104 votes against 4.

DAVIDSON COLLEGE.

Those who had the pleasure of hearing the address of Prof. J. R. Blake, at Synod, in behalf of Davidson College, are to be esteemed fortunate. We shall endeavor to present a part of what was said, for our readers cannot know too much of the advantages of this excellent institution of learning.

The present outlook of the college is very encouraging. Its patronage is increasing. Owing no doubt to the lack of funds in the treasury of the Church, the number of candidates in preparation for the ministry is not so large as usual; nevertheless, there are now eighteen or twenty more students in the regular college classes than at the corresponding time last year.

The preparatory class of the college, established two years ago, has been of great service. This preparatory school, unlike those of many Southern colleges, contains only a few boys, and is simply a drill class just below the Freshman, designed to fit unprepared scholars coming from academies, to enter upon the regular college course of Davidson. To accommodate friends in some sections, who desired to educate their boys at Davidson College, it became necessary either to lower the standard of instruction to the level of the academies in those sections, or to devise a way to elevate those who might apply to the proper educational standing. The drill class was therefore a necessity, and the wisdom of its establishment has been fully verified by results. Besides its special work, this class brings up any students of the Freshman class who may be deficient in any department of study pertaining to that class. Several Freshmen are now in this way receiving gratuitous aid in the preparatory class.

The finances of the college are adequate to meet current expenses, but are not sufficient to justify the outlays which a more extended usefulness would demand. But for the liberal benefactions of the college there would be a large surplus for these additional purposes. An aggregate of $2,240 is now received by students in gratuitous tuition, and of this amount one-half is given directly to the Church in tuition to candidates for the ministry.

The expenses of any student need not exceed about $200. Several of the best young men of the institution expend only from $192 to $220, and this includes tuition, board, wood, lights, washing, books, society fees—indeed everything except clothing. The lightness of these expenses will be apparent by comparison with many colleges furnishing no better education, and at a cost of from $300 to $600.

The educational work done at Davidson College is of very superior quality. In the lower classes the foundation is laid and cemented with hard, patient, pains-taking drill work. Thoroughness in the ground-work is considered essential as a preparation for the advanced studies, and the special merit of the scholarship of the institution and its great success in the higher culture of the classics and the sciences, is to be ascribed to the pains-taking and laborious elaboration of first principles.

There is probably no curriculum college in the land which has a more extended or more thorough course than Davidson in the Scientific Departments. A double course in both Natural Philosophy and Chemistry is furnished, with extensive philosophical, chemical and geological apparatus and cabinets. In the Sophomore year students are taught in the line of general and experimental Physics; this is continued in the Junior year with the aid of Mathematics, and is followed up into Astronomy during the Senior year. General Chemistry likewise begins in the Junior year, and is followed up in the Senior year by practical Chemistry, Mineralogy and Geology. The department of English Literature, History, Logic, &c., is in the hands of Rev. Dr. Hepburn, President of the college, well known for his fine scholarship and wonderful magnetism in the class room.

Johns Hopkins University is placed on a higher plane than any in the South, and it may not be too much to say than any other in the United States. It is largely a post-graduate institution. A recent report shows that the graduates of twenty-nine institutions in this country and in Europe are found within its halls. Of these twenty-nine institutions only three have as many graduates as Davidson College has, and none have more. Howard, Yale and the University of Virginia, each, has four, and Davidson College has four. No other college has so many. The entire State of North Carolina sends only four students to Johns Hopkins University; of these three are from Davidson College. Nothing can more certainly prove the extent and thoroughness of the educational training of Davidson College.

The moral and religious influences by which the students of Davidson are surrounded are exceptional, and confer upon that institution a special claim to patronage. The following facts are given in illustration:

There are at this time in the college fifty members of the various Christian Churches, and of these twenty-four are candidates for the ministry. There are two Christian Associations among the students, and they contain twenty-eight working members; of these twenty are engaged in Sabbath school work in and around the village. They maintain also three or four Sabbath schools for white and colored children, and four weekly prayer meetings among the young men.

We regret that we have not full notes of the able address of Rev. L. McKinnon, President of the Board of Trustees of Davidson College, which address supplemented that of Prof. Blake. Mr. McKinnon dwelt particularly upon the moderate cost at which the very superior advantages of the college could be obtained, and especially called attention to the liberality of the institution, in that it offers free tuition to sons of ministers of any denomination, and provides that deserving young men otherwise unable to secure to themselves its advantages, may do so by giving their promissory notes for tuition, without interest during their stay in the institution. As board can be had in clubs at $6 per month, and at boarding houses at from $8 to $10 per month, thorough education is thus placed within the reach of every young man of the right material.

A committee was appointed to prepare a paper setting forth the importance of Davidson College to the Church and country, and urge the friends of Presbyterianism and learning to aid in its endowment.

JOTTINGS OF THE TRIP TO SYNOD.

The atmosphere of Statesville, cold and crisp, we found a pleasant change from the moist but balmy air of our city by the sea, and the gently undulating hills of clay were in not unpleasing contrast to the sandy plains of the East. Statesville is a bright little town, in which the handsome residences and tasty gardens and lawns bespeak the thrift and comfort of its inhabitants. Our opportunities did not admit of visiting the many objects of interest which had been named to us, but a few moments were snatched from duty to take a view of the surrounding country from the observatory of Simonton Female Institute. From this point the prospect is one of surpassing loveliness. Below and immediately around lay the quiet little village of Statesville, and stretching away the broad, green forests, with here and there a farm to tell of man's dominion over nature. Far away to the north the Pilot Mountain, in outline so strikingly unique, reared its bold crest, and next door neighbor rose the Sauratown. Many miles to the east the Blue Ridge threw out its peaks in one continuous chain, and prominent among them, the lofty Grandfather stood forth to special notice. Thus like wave upon wave the mountains rolled upon each other, till in the distant south they were lost to view. No visitor to Statesville should miss the sight.

What rare enjoyment is furnished by a meeting of Synod. Here old friends come together, friendships are cemented and new friendships formed. Friends? No! all these are brethren: children of one Father, and heirs of a common inheritance. And like brethren they meet. Hands are crossed and swift the electric flash of Christain love courses from heart to heart. The cordial greeting, the merry jest, the social badinage, the quick but kindly repartee—how delightful all! But these are incidentals. Work for the Master calls them together, and all hearts, all minds, strive together for its accomplishment. Looking over an assembled Synod one sees the aged patriarch, his work wellnigh done, awaiting his call almost within the gleamings of the heavenly glory; and the strong man, full panoplied for work, wrestling, striving, is the very host of service; and the young man, just entering the field, earnest, hopeful, watchful, and vigorous—and all are pressing on.

During the recent sessions of Synod there were opposing arguments and animated discussions, but nothing to rankle into malice. The sessions of our Synods are always harmonious, but this was unusually so. The elders were interested in the proceedings, and occasionally took part in the debates. In the work of the churches there is clearly improvement, and promising indications of a movement forward.

But all earthly pleasures have an end. The time comes when we must part, and how sadly pleasant is the parting. As all stand, brethren of the Synod, and brethren not of the Synod, and sing the parting hymn

Blest be the tie that binds,
Our hearts in Christian love,

how memories of the past and forecastings of the future crowd themselves upon the mind! How many who were wont to join in just such parting scenes have crossed the narrow stream of death, and look down upon us from the heavenly rest! The now sainted forms of Douglas and Anderson, who were with us when last we met, rise up before us, and Graves, gentlest of men, absent indeed in body, but with us in spirit. How many singing that parting hymn will meet again on earth? To many it was a parting for all time; let us hope to none a parting for eternity.

We shall always cherish fondest recollections of the meeting of Synod at Statesville.

SOUTHERN PRESBYTERIAN REVIEW FOR OCTOBER.

This excellent Quarterly has just reached us at the end of the month for which it is issued. Its contents are as follows:

1. The Lord's Supper. By the Rev. Prof. Thos. E. Peck, D. D., Union Theological Seminary, Virginia.
2. The Ministerial Gift. By the Rev. P. P. Flournoy, Knowles, Md.
3. The Jurisdiction of the Evangelist. By the Rev. J. A. Lefevre, D. D., Baltimore, Md.
4. Professor Flint's Sermon before the General Council at Edinburgh.
5. The Public Preaching of Women. By the Rev. Prof. R. L. Dabney, D. D., LL. D., Union Theological Seminary of Virginia.
6. The Alternatives of Unbelief. By the Rev. Prof. H. C. Alexander, D. D., Union Theological Seminary of Virginia.
7. Davidson's Hebrew Grammar. By the Rev. Alfred Jones, Petersburg, Va.
8. The Recent Ordination at Hangchow. By the Rev. John B. Adger, D. D., Pendleton, S. C.
9. Critical Notices.
10. Recent Publications.

A glance at the above will satisfy any one that this number has special interest. It is rich with timely articles. Perhaps in this State, article 5 will be first read. Dr. Dabney well says: "The arguments advanced by those who profess reverence for the Bible in favor of this unscriptural usage must be of course chiefly rationalistic." Those conversant with the pleas urged in this State in advocacy of Mrs. Moon's and Miss Painter's preaching must have been painfully impressed with the bold rationalism avowed. Not seldom has it been said, "They do good; therefore the Scriptures ought to permit females to preach, if they do not." For this bold impugning of the wisdom of God the way has been prepared by long years of unscriptural and rationalistic revival methods. Sometimes it takes centuries to develop evils which lie hidden in the wisdom of man. It is better to adhere to the "Thus saith the Lord" in all matters of doctrine, worship and polity.

Article 7 is interesting to those who persevere in Hebrew.

Article 1 is interesting and instructive for everybody.

Articles 3 and 8 are companion pieces. They discuss a living question, and should be read together. It is strange that for these many years, during which the foreign evangelist has done a noble work, his status has not been accurately determined. The revival of Home Mission work first brought the question prominently before the mind of the Church. Even the New Book does not define the evangelist, and we are glad that the last Assembly appointed a committee, with Dr. Lefevre as chairman, to add a new chapter on this topic. The New Book, even, makes no provision for the foreign evangelist. It says he (the evangelist) may organize churches and ordain ruling elders and deacons therein. It does not extend his authority to the ordination of pastors and evangelists, even though such be natives of foreign countries. Now Dr. Lefevre is obviously right in one principle: "the measure of the evangelist's power is the work which his field requires him to perform," though this principle must of course be limited by other principles permanent in our Constitution. For want of such limitations we agree with Dr. Adger in some points on which he dissents. The Synod of North Carolina was the first to define the nature and functions of the evangelist's office. This was in 1876.

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

Any new subscription for one year sent between this time and the first day of January next will be credited to January 1, 1880.

Many of our subscribers expected to pay us this fall. The Southern country is certainly in better financial condition now than for many years past, and we beg all who are in arrears to send forward promptly whatever is due.

In our notes from the Synod of North Carolina, in our last issue, we omitted to state that the proposition to reduce the number of Trustees of Union Theological Seminary was not adopted.

It seems so irrational as to be hardly credible, that any one professing to be a religious teacher should announce what is stated below as coming from a Roman Catholic bishop. The queries of the Philadelphia Presbyterian are well put:

"The closest medium of intercession between God and man" is what Bishop Elder, of Natchez, Miss., calls the Virgin Mary." Where is He that ever liveth to make intercession for us? He also declared that as "Christ was the Redeemer of all mankind, so was the Blessed Virgin truly and really the mother of all mankind." Where is mother Eve?

The Christian at Work furnishes the following:

"The revision of the Bible, now nearly completed, has been a far more expensive work than most persons imagine. There are fifty-two members of the committee, and these meet for five days in every three weeks. No salary is paid to any one of them, but they are allowed their traveling and hotel expenses. These, with other items, will bring the cost of the first edition of the Revised Bible as estimated by the University Presses, who are responsible for it, to about $200,000, and, consequently, it has been determined to sell the first few issues at a high price, in order to cover the outlay. The new Bible will receive no "authorization" either from Parliament or Convocation. It has been discovered incidentally during the sittings of the committee that the so-called Authorized Version never was in fact authorized either ecclesiastically or politically. It made its way by its own merits, and the Revised Bible is expected to do the same.

Simonton Female Institute, at Statesville, N. C., is under very superior management, offers the best accommodations to boarders, and furnishes admirable instruction to the pupils. At present there are fifty students in the school, twenty of whom are boarders.

We had the very great pleasure recently of meeting Mrs. Grant and Miss Mitchell, in charge of the Institute, and of meeting the other ladies who assist in the instruction. Among the latter we were especially gratified in forming the acquaintance of Miss McGilvary, daughter of Rev. Daniel McGilvary, Missionary to Siam. The lady was educated in the school for the responsible position she now occupies. Through her kindness we hope in our next to give our readers some interesting news relating to the mission referred to.

A "corner" on newspapers is one of the novelties of the age. An association composed mostly of foreigners has purchased many of the leading newspapers in Italy, and is actively negotiating for the possession of others. An unbought organ makes the discovery, and urges the minister of the interior to take into consideration the danger which threatens the government. We give the item as from the Interior.

The city authorities of Charlotte, N. C., deserve credit for having forbidden a travel-Operatic Company to give a concert on a recent Sunday night. And this recalls to mind that the same city sometime ago refused to permit a grossly indecent performance by a strolling band of women. We know of a city nearer home that did not act as well.

At Statesville we had the pleasure of meeting Mr. J. B. Ramsay, editor of the Landmark. We here take occasion to return our thanks for courtesies received. The Synod highly appreciated the kindness of Mr. Ramsay in publishing a report of each days proceedings for distribution among the members.

The Carolina Spartan of Spartansburg, S. C., very kindly says:

The N. C. PRESBYTERIAN, John McLaurin, editor, published at Wilmington, N. C., price $2 55 a year, has been regularly received at this office the present year. This is a paper which we can most heartily commend. The leader in the last number—"What is the Matter?"—might be read with profit by every layman of that Church, or any other, as for that matter. The selections are well and judiciously made; the editorial columns are not cramped and one-sided, and there is a sprightliness about the paper that makes it very readable. Again, we say that we can heartily commend this as a first-rate family paper.

The Lumberton Robesonian also referred specially to the article "What is the Matter?" which makes it becoming in us to say, that the article was written by an editorial correspondent of this paper. The name of the writer we do not feel authorized to mention.

NEWS NOTES.

We specially invite news from all quarters for this column.

At an adjourned meeting of Concord Presbytery, held last week, in Salisbury, N. C., Mr. J. N. H. Summerill was, after a thorough and satisfactory examination, licensed to preach the Gospel. Mr. Summerill is a grandson of Rev. Dr. Elisha Mitchell, and a son of Dr. J. J. Summerill, an elder in the Presbyterian church at Salisbury. We think under the circumstances we can answer for his knowledge of the Shorter Catechism. Mr. S. spent several months in Scotland prosecuting his theological studies, but wisely determined that he would study special branches in our Union Theological Seminary.

LADIES' MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

The Ladies' Foreign Missionary Society of the First Presbyterian church, of Wilmington, met in annual session on November 3rd, at the Lecture Room of said church, where a brief address was made by Dr. Wilson, and the Society re-organized for the ensuing year, by the re-election of Mrs. Dr. Dickson as President, and Mrs. Dr. Wilson as Secretary, and Mrs. Geo. Chadbourn as Treasurer.

This Society was very successful during the past year, the amount collected being $253.05, altogether by subscription on the part of the ladies alone.

At Synod we learned that the health of the venerable and greatly beloved Rev. Dr. Drury Lacy is very infirm, but he still retains his mental faculties unimpaired, as our readers will note. No one can have more heartily the sympathies of the brethren.

We are glad to know that the article from Dr. Lacy, published in this paper sometime ago, and recommending "The Light, is it Waning?" brought to him several letters of thanks from persons who had bought the book on his recommendation.

Three persons were received by letter into the Presbyterian church at Yanceyville, N. C., on the first Sabbath in October. Through the efforts of the ladies the church has been newly and neatly painted.

The Concord Register says: "Rev. J. F. Cannon, a native of this county, and at present pastor of the Presbyterian church at Leesburg, Va., is on a visit to his relatives near this city."

A friend writes that Rev. Roderick Henderson, of Canada, is preaching with great acceptance to the churches of Centre Point and Turkey Creek, in Harmony Presbytery.

A KIND RECEPTION.

MORGANTON, Oct. 31, 1879.

Mr. McLaurin: I drop you a hurried note. Got home from Synod Tuesday and found one room of the manse lined with good things; was puzzled to know why our folks had anticipated Christmas; learned of a report reaching here that Statesville was starving us! This explained it. I shall not make mouths water by going into detail. One gentleman's contribution was a barrel of cut loaf sugar and a mat of the finest old Java. The note accompanying was better even than the gift.

Most truly yours,
R. B. ANDERSON.

AND ANOTHER.

On his return home from Synod, bringing with him his family, who had been absent some weeks, Rev. C. M. Payne, pastor of the Second Presbyterian church of this city, met a most cordial welcome. Kind friends of his flock had warmed and lighted the manse, and a fine supper awaited their arrival. The whole was a sincere testimonial of the affection of the people for the pastor.

The church at Tarboro, N. C., is without a pastor, and earnestly desires to secure one. The session solicits correspondence to that end. The point is an important one, and we earnestly trust that the want of the church will soon be supplied.

THE SYNOD OF MISSOURI.

[Condensed from the St. Louis Presbyterian.]

Met at Boonesville, October 16th, ultimo. Rev. Dr. J. K. Hazen addressed the Synod in behalf of the cause of Publication, of which he is Secretary, and resolutions looking to increased support of this cause were adopted by the Synod. Resolutions were adopted in response to an address from Rev. E. M. Richardson, Secretary of Education, urging the churches to increased liberality, and calling upon ministers and elders to encourage the young men of the Church to consider seriously the demand for more ministers. The Committee on Sabbath Schools made a lengthy report, urging more thorough organization and recommending Presbyterians to appoint Sabbath school superintendents. The Foreign Mission cause was earnestly commended to the increased liberality of the churches. A committee on the Sabbath was appointed. A request from the Presbytery of Upper Missouri to be united with the Presbytery of La-Fayette, forthwith, was granted.

PRESBYTERIAL MEETINGS.

Presbytery of Florida assembled on 15th ult. Rev. A. Duncan, D. D., of Schuyler Presbytery, Illinois, was received upon certificate, and according to the prescribed form. A question raised by a member as to whether an Episcopal minister, who says that "as a priest I can forgive sins" should be allowed the use of our pulpits, was referred to the session in each case.

Cherokee Presbytery met Oct. 16th. Order was taken for the installation of Rev. James E. Jones as pastor of Silver Creek church for one-half his time. Davidson College was again commended to the confidence and patronage of the people. Rev. W. A. Milner presented the following inquiry, "Whether a minister has any right to change the contract entered into between himself and the church at the time of his installation, with the consent of Presbytery?" The Presbytery having declined to answer said inquiry. Rev. W. A. Milner gave respectful notice of complaint to Synod.

Augusta Presbytery met Oct. 21st. Mr. Donald McQueen, a licentiate of Mecklenburg Presbytery, was received under care of Presbytery, and after his examination sessions were taken for his ordination and installation as pastor of the Milledgeville church. Synod was overtured to appoint a day of fasting and prayer in view of the general low state of religion. Synod was also overtured to divide the Presbytery.

For the N. C. Presbyterian.

TO THE LADIES OF ORANGE PRESBYTERY

The field of labor on which the evangelist assigned to the eastern part of the State entered a few years ago has been worked up and assigned to pastors, with the exception of one point. That one point is the beautiful town of Wilson, between Goldsboro and Rocky Mount. It is an enterprising, thrifty town, of about 2,500 inhabitants. Your evangelist has had encouraging congregations, but he has been hindered in his work by the want of a church building. The Baptists have all along courteously given us the use of their own, but it is obvious that courtesy and Christian propriety demands of us silence on all distinctive points of doctrine in their own home. This effectually prevents all direct effort to build up our own Church. Just so long, too, as we have no building of our own the mission lacks stability and prominence in the eyes of the people. This has been so obvious to the writer that he has, from time to time, set forth the facts and urged the churches to give us a building. Small sums have been contributed and we have procured a site. For this we had to pay $500.

We ought to have a church in Wilson. The strongest denominations in the town are the Primitive (anti-Missionary) Baptists and Methodists. Then come the Episcopalians and Missionary Baptists and a small body of Disciples (Campbellites). The town is one of considerable importance. That we may do effective work there a church-building is an imperative necessity. Without it the mission must be ultimately abandoned, and we know not for how long. In case Orange Presbytery should be divided the need of a church in Wilson will be all the more felt. With a building we could invite outside sympathy and co-operation, organize a Sunday school and conduct protracted services. Now what we ask is that the ladies in Orango Presbytery take this matter in hand, through home mission societies or otherwise, and build a church there themselves, with what aid they can get from the few Presbyterians in Wilson. Put it in this way rather than ask them to help the Wilson people. Make it your enterprise, and correspond with John Hutchinson, Esq., of Wilson, or Mrs. M. E. Nadal, as to amount needed and amounts reported raised from time to time. I suppose that $500 would be necessary, and we ask the co-operation of all the churches. Let us remember, however, that there are few strong churches and many weak ones, so that the burden will have to be assumed mainly by the few. In conclusion I call attention to a resolution of the Presbytery, made at Alamance:

"The building of a Presbyterian church in Wilson is commended to the liberality and zeal of the ladies in the churches of Orange Presbytery."

We would gladly receive help from any outside the Presbytery who are disposed to help us. J. W. P.

MONTHLY REVIEW OF MISSIONS.

We have a letter from Mr. Lane, of the Campinas Mission, as late as the 2d of September. He writes, "In the midst of all the drawbacks we have, I have never felt more encouraged than at present with the spread of the Gospel in the interior of the country. I cannot just now think of leaving this field, nor would be wise to do so. We must labor and pray for more grace and for more entire resting upon our Lord."

We have intelligence from Pernambuco to the 29th of August. Mr. Smith reports progress in his work. He writes, "Some weeks since we commenced a Sunday School in the morning before regular worship, for old and young, married and unmarried, and of both sexes. It is in its infancy as yet. We have between twenty-five and thirty pupils, divided into seven classes, that are taught by myself and members of the church. About the same time I changed the Thursday evening service to a Catechism class for the whole congregation, having as text-books the Shorter Catechism and Confession of Faith. Both of these measures have been well received. My class makes very satisfactory progress, but I fear the attendance on the Thursday evening service may be diminished. I have also instituted the monthly concert of prayer for Foreign Missions on the first Monday of each month."

These are important measures, especially in a community that has known nothing about evangelical religion until recently.

From Spencer Academy we have had intelligence as late as the 12th of September, and from Mr. Reid, who had been detained at Paris, Texas, on account of sickness in his family, as late as the 22d of September. We were glad to learn that Mr. Reid's health had been greatly improved during the vacation in the school, and that the sick members of his family were also improving. He was about to leave for Spencer to be present at the opening of the new session. Less inconvenience has been experienced from the prevalence of intermittent fever than in former years. It was expected that there would be a full school at the opening of the session.

We have letters from the Soochow missionaries as late as the 14th of August, and from Mrs. Randolph from Tungchow, in north China, where she had gone for relaxation, as late as 15th of August. The hot season in Soochow had been so unusually severe this year that all the missionaries had to withdraw to the sea coast for a few weeks. This has become an almost absolute necessity, if our brethren would escape the utter prostration that would unfit them for active labor during the remainder of the year. Fortunately the island of Poodoo, which is very accessible, affords them all the advantages of sea air that could be desired. Mr. DuBose, at the date of our letter, was on his way back to Soochow, almost too soon we fear. Mr. and Mrs. Davis were still at Poodoo, and Miss Safford was about to leave Soochow for a few weeks' recreation.—The Missionary.

REDUCED FARE.

Delegates to the State Sunday School Convention, which meets in Greensboro, November 14th and 15th, will buy return tickets, as the Railway Companies of the State kindly consent to pass them at reduced rates.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

We advise all our readers, whether they own a foot of land or not, to supply themselves with that treasure of useful, practical, reliable information, the American Agriculturist, so named because started 38 years ago as a rural journal, but now enlarged to embrace a great variety of most useful reading for the Household, Children included, for the Garden, as well as the Farm—for all classes. Each volume gives some 800 original Engravings, with descriptions of labor-saving and labor-helping contrivances, of plants, fruits, flowers, animals, etc., including many pleasing, as well as instructive, pictures for young and old. The constant, systematic exposures of Humbugs and Swindling Schemes by the Agriculturist are of great value to every one, and will save to most persons many times its cost. Altogether, it is one of the most valuable, as well as cheapest, Journals anywhere to be found. The cost is only $1 50 a year, or 4 copies for $5. Single numbers 15 cents. Subscribe at once for 1880, and receive the rest of this year free, or send a 3-cent stamp for postage on a specimen copy. Address Orange Judd Company, Publishers, 245 Broadway, New York.

Bound neatly in handsome paper covers and containing 234 pp., there comes to us from D. Appleton & Co., Appleton's Dictionary of New York and Vicinity. From the inspection we have been able to give the work, it is just what it purports to be. The model is Dicken's Dictionary of London, but the present book is essentially original. We should say that it would be of immense service to either the commercial or the uncommercial traveler.

Bibliotheca Sacra: Vol. xxxvi. October, 1879. W. F. Draper. Andover. 1. The Angel of Jehovah, Prof. C. Goodspeed, Woodstock, Ontario, Canada. 2. Notes on Grotius' Defense, Rev. Frank H. Foster, North Reading, Mass; 3. Bible Illustrations from Bible Lands, Rev. Thos. Lawrie, D. D, Providence, R. I.; 4. The Last Days of Christ, Exegetical Notes on the Basis of Mark xiv: 17 to xvi: 20, the late Rev. Horatio B. Hackett, D. D.-LL. D.; 5. Relations of the Aryan and Semitic Languages, No. 3, Comparative Phonology, Rev. J. F. McCurdy, Ph. D., Princeton, N. J.; 6. An Essay in Systematic Theology, Rev. Geo. T. Ladd, Milwaukee, Wis.; 7. The Sabbath Under the Old Dispensation, Rev. Wm. DeLoss Love, D. D., South Hadley, Mass; 8. Theological Education, No. 8: The Multiplication of Theological Seminaries; 9. Recent Publications; Index to the 36th volume. With this number the 36th volume is completed. While we may differ from its views in many respects yet we recognize the ability with which the magazine is conducted, and no one can study its pages without advantage, but it calls for study, not skimming.

From the days of our earliest boyhood, when we were wont to look for fair weather promised on the holidays, and search hopefully for the "snow" in which we so much delighted, we have had a tender spot in our memory for Turner's Almanac. A copy from James H. Enniss, publisher, is before us, and the predictions, as of old, are there. We intend to stick to Turner, in spite of many disappointments, and defy "Old Probabilities" forever. The recipes, too, are there, and the farm and garden notes. Price 10 cents.

ECLECTICISMS.

LOOK TO IT.

Nashville Advocate:

The man who shrinks the payment of his just share toward the support of the Gospel, has taken the first step in backsliding. No command of God can be violated with impunity and without loss.

QUIET WORK.

United Presbyterian:

There is more quiet work done for the Saviour and his suffering people, and other poor, than the world knows of. The men and women who go about on quiet missions, reading the Bible, praying, talking, providing material help in food and clothing, and otherwise distributing their charities are more numerous than even Christians imagine. They get no mention in the newspapers—it is part of the glory of their work that they do not.

OUTLIVE CRITICISM.

S. S. Times:

The best way of meeting unjust criticism on your spirit and conduct is by showing in your spirit and conduct that the criticism is unjust. There is very little use in arguing the case. In the long run no one but yourself can harm either your character or your reputation. There may be times when you will suffer unjustly; but sooner or later the public will judge you at your true worth. As you work and as others defame, "Commit thy way unto the Lord; trust also in Him; and He shall bring it to pass. And He shall bring forth thy righteousness as the light, and thy judgment as the noonday. Rest in the Lord, and wait patiently for Him."

DO YOUR WORK WELL.

Southern Christian Advocate:

Now, we have no objection to a young man making a good lawyer of himself, or a good doctor, or succeed well in any of the high callings of civil life. We have objections, however, in behalf of the well being of society, to his making a pettifogger or a quack of himself, when he might have been a decent man and have made an honest, honorable living in an humbler vocation. It is not the business that ennobles the man; it is the man that dignifies the business. Any one whose opinion is worth consideration will think more of an humble laborer who does his work well, than of another who awkwardly intrudes himself into the prominence of professional life without capacity or fitness for its duties and obligations.

TIRED OUT.

Congregationalist:

It is a pity so many people expect themselves or their children to suffer by being tired of sitting during the Sunday service. The same children are in the school room five and six hours a day five days in the week, and would have the finger of scorn pointed at them if they were found yawning and whining day after day about being tired. Recently I saw more than twenty men and boys sitting on logs in the hot sun fishing, and although not half of them got a nibble once an hour, every man and boy sat in his place for three full hours; how much longer I cannot tell. Commend me to the parents who take their children to church with them, and who, from the youngest to the eldest, have back-bone and faith and red blood enough not to think of being tired, even if they sit in one place for forty minutes. It is about time that sensible and observant Christian people discarded all this weak and washy nonsense about the tiresomeness of Christian worship.

WHAT THE CHURCH NEEDS.

Southern Churchman:

It is evident what the Church needs is not so much to have people baptized and confirmed as to have them converted. Place in any community a small number of converted men and women, thoroughly and wisely in earnest, and they would accomplish a mighty work. They would be considered by the mass of the people very old fashioned and disagreeable. But probably not more so than the Apostles, who gave themselves up to the work which would be approved of God.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

SOUTHERN.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Rev. W. S Johnson reports to the Texas Presbyterian that an interesting meeting is in progress at Palo Pinto, Texas, and that Rev. Mr. Chaney is with him.

The Rev. R. D. Stimson writes to the Central Presbyterian from Accomac county, Va., saying: "Our new church at Belle Haven is almost completed, and will be dedicated on the second Sabbath in November. The Rev. N. M. Woods, of Norfolk, is to preach the sermon."

The Rev. J. W. Rosebro assisted Rev. J. E. Booker, pastor of the Second church of Staunton, Va., in the services preparatory to a recent communion. There was one addition on profession of faith. The quarterly voluntary offering for the debt on church amounted to $200—the four offerings for the year amounted to $550.

Rev. W. T. Thompson, of Harmony Presbytery, accepts a call to the church at Shelbyville, Tenn.

The Southwestern Presbyterian states that in the Napoleon Avenue church, New Orleans, a neat tablet has been erected to the memory of Rev. Benjamin Wayne.

On Sunday, the 19th inst., a new Presbyterian chapel was dedicated at Brambletea, on the eastern suburbs of Norfolk. This building is of brick, and cost $1,000. It was put up by Dr. Armstrong's congregation, and the dedication sermon was preached by the minister.—Central Presbyterian.

At Jonesboro, Ga., a Presbyterian church has been organized with thirty-seven members, four elders and three deacons.

CERTIFICATE REVOKED.—Notice is hereby given to ministers of the Presbyterian Church, and all others, that a certificate of character issued by me to Rev. J. Phelps is revoked. A letter from the pastor of the First (Congregational) church of Hartford, Conn., informs me of his improper use of it. All Presbyterian and other religious papers are requested to copy this notice and to caution ministers and churches against receiving him on that letter. JAMES PARK.

Stated Clerk Presbytery of Knoxville.
Knoxville, Tenn, Oct. 13, 1879.

Four additions are reported to the church at Selma, Ala. From this church, recently, a new church called Vine Hill was organized. The church embraces ten members formerly of Selma church. Dr. Todd and John Lapsley were elected ruling elders and James Lapsley deacon.

To the church at Jacksonville, Texas, recently seven persons were admitted to membership. The church is under the care of Rev. R. W. Smith.

Eight additions are reported to the church at Brunswick, Ga., under care of Rev. R. A. Mickle; and four additions, three being on profession of faith, to the church at Florence, Ala. Rev. M. J. Frierson has charge of the latter church.

The postoffice address of Rev. Wm. McCarthy has been changed from Shawneetown, Mo., to Ashley, Pike county, in the same State.

Rev. Dr. Donald McQueen, through physical infirmity, is unable to preach. Harmony Presbytery, at his request, concurred in by the congregation, dissolved the pastoral relation, which had existed forty-three years. The congregation have requested him to retain the parsonage and minister to them as far as his strength will allow.

A few weeks ago fifteen communicants were added to the Dry Creek church, in the Presbytery of Mississippi.—Southern Presbyterian.

Rev. W. W. Houston, who has been supplying the church at Salem, Va., since July last, has notified the sessions that he will retire from that relation to the church. The session regret, expressing in strongest terms their appreciation of his services.

As pre-announced would be the case, Mr. C. W. Robinson was on Oct 24th, duly ordained to the ministry and installed pastor of the church at Glasgow, Ky., by a committee of Louisville (not Louisiana) Presbytery.

Some thirty or forty colored persons have their membership in the Bethel church, in Fayette county, Ky., and the colored people attend there in larger numbers, perhaps, than any other Presbyterian church of its size in the State. They study the Shorter Catechism, and have a part in the Sabbath school.—Christian Observer.

Sixteen persons have lately been added to Oak Grove church, Ala.

Mr. McDonald's friends in North Carolina—they are numerous—will be glad to hear of his and his work. We clip from the Christian Observer: "The church at Elizabethtown, Ky., has been for two years and a half under the pastoral care of Rev. Angus McDonald. He is an earnest, pointed preacher, and the people of Elizabethtown may congratulate themselves in securing such a man to minister unto them. He has a good field for work; the material from which to draw in building up the church is very good, and plentiful. Since Rev. Mr. McDonald has had charge of this field, by his faithful efforts and the blessing of God, sixty or more persons have been added to their number. He has a large place in the hearts of his people, and is loved by the community in general. His Sabbath school is a capital one, and the great number of children and young people connected with it is a hopeful sign for the future of the church. On the 19th inst. the pastor closed a meeting of some six days' continuance, assisted by the Sunday school missionary, J. H. Hopper, in which was considerable interest; four professed faith in Christ, and three united with the church; the prospect is good for several other additions before many days."

Rev. S. R. Preston writes to the Christian Observer from Blacksburg, Va., October 20th: "We have much encouragement in our church at this time. Within the last six days we have received twelve into the church, and a few weeks ago three others, making fifteen in all. I know of others still who will join soon. The pastors in town held a joint service, lasting about ten days, closing the 9th of this month. The Spirit is at work among us. A deep seriousness, earnest attention and good congregations at all our services tell plainly of His presence. All of the above number were received on examination except three by certificate." Writing of his work in Montgomery county, Va., Mr. Preston says: "I have recently installed two elders and two deacons additional; young men who have at once taken up the cross of public prayer, and now alternately conduct a weekly prayer meeting of 18 or 20 souls about four miles from town."

GENERAL.

The vote of the Greenville church, S. C., on accepting Dr. Hiden's resignation was a tie. The moderator cast his vote in favor of accepting the resignation. Dr. H. has a host of friends in Greenville, and has accomplished a grand work there.—Biblical Recorder.

The McKendree church, of the Southern Methodist Church, on Fourth street, Nashville, Tenn., was consumed by fire on Sunday last. Loss, $30,000; insurance, $25,000; which is well divided among various insurance companies.—Christian Intelligencer.

Miss Berenice Morrison, a young lady, a simple-hearted member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, living in Missouri, has built and furnished complete, an observatory for the Pritchett Institute at Glasgow, Mo., at a cost of $25 000. It is said to be one of the finest in this country. In addition she gives $75,000 to endow the Institution.—Presbyterian.

NORTHERN.

PRESBYTERIAN.

The Chambers's Presbyterian church in Philadelphia has given a call to Rev. Dr. J. M. P. Otis, formerly of Wilmington, Del.

Rev. Alexander Sinclair, at one time pastor of the First Presbyterian church at Charlotte, N. C., was recently installed pastor of the Presbyterian church at Marion, Ohio.

The Talmage case was brought before the Synod of Long Island at its recent meeting. Only two sections out of seven were allowed as in order by the Judicial Committee to whom the appeal was referred. The Synod heard Dr. Spear, counsel for defendant, and postponed the case to an adjourned meeting of the Synod, to be held in Jamaica, L. I., the second Monday in December.

BAPTIST.

The Rink in Clermont and Vanderbilt avenues, Brooklyn, N. Y., has been purchased by Rev. J. D. Fulton's congregation, that a "People's" church may be made of it.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Rev. Lyman D. Boynton has changed his views on some of the fundamental doctrines of the Bible, and withdraws from the ministry of the Congregational Church.

The Congregationalists have twenty-five churches and twelve preaching stations in Oregon and Washington Territory. They contain 1,045 members.

The Congregationalist says: "The wave of returning prosperity has struck even the ministry. In proof, witness the fact that the people of Williston church, Portland, Me., at a recent church meeting, added $500 to the salary of their pastor, Rev. F. Clark, making it now $2,500. This is the third time the pleasant operation has been repeated.

REFORMED EPISCOPAL.

The Rev. H. H. Washburne, of the Bishop Cummins' Memorial Reformed Episcopal church, Baltimore, has retired to New York to engage in secular pursuits.

The Reformed Episcopalians have leased the old Unitarian church at East Cambridge, Mass., and are subjecting it to thorough repair.

METHODIST.

The Methodist Protestant says that the Mount Vernon Methodist Episcopal church, Baltimore, Md., is encumbered with a debt of $60,000, and that Grace church, the next finest edifice they have in Baltimore, has a burden upon it of some $55,000.

At the Southern Illinois Conference three Baptist ministers, each representing different phases of the Baptist Church, were admitted, their ordinations being accepted by the Conference.—Presbyterian.

GENERAL.

The value of church property of all kinds in the State of New York is estimated at $117,610,-000.

The American Board of Foreign Missions has received and expended $17,000,000; has organized not far from 350 native churches, with about 53,000 communicants; has sent out 550 ordained missionaries, about 250 unmarried lady missionaries; has reduced to writing 26 languages; has issued in 46 languages more than 2,300 educational and religious publications, and has under instruction more than 400,000 pupils. About 100,000,000 of heathen are reckoned as falling to the care of the American Board.

SECULAR MISCELLANY.

A Michigan man has sent the A. & N. C. R. R. a railway velocipede. It requires to be worked with the hands as well as the feet, and can be made to travel twenty miles an hour.

Hon. Zachariah Chandler was found dead in his bed at a hotel in Chicago on the morning of Nov. 1st. He had addressed a large political meeting the night before.

Disastrous gales and floods have interrupted travel in Spain. Bridges have been swept away, railroad embankments washed down, dwelling houses and mills carried away and a large extent of country flooded. Sixty persons were drowned.

People are flocking back to Memphis. The Avalanche and the Appeal resumed publication in full size. Total number of deaths by yellow fever to date 1,521.

A set of desperate outlaws, white men, have occupied an impenetrable swamp near Milledgeville, Ga., and from their fastness sally out to commit murder and to plunder. They are known as the "swamp angels." The Governor is resolved to capture the gang, but thinks not less than a regiment of soldiers will be required to do it.

The richest heiress in this country is said to be the daughter of the late Dr. Ayer of Massachusetts, the manufacturer of patent medicines. Her fortune is estimated at five million dollars, and there is a rumor that she is betrothed to the grandson of Dom Pedro I. of Brazil.

The Paris Gaulois asserts that the ex-Empress Eugenie, notwithstanding all efforts to dissuade her, will embark next February for Zululand to pray on the spot where her son was killed.

Ouray, the chief of the Utes, owns a farm of 300 acres, about 100 of which he cultivates. He lives in a neatly built and commodious adobe house, built for him by the government and neatly furnished and carpeted.

Queen Victoria has outlived every bishop and judge in England, Scotland and Ireland who was in office when she ascended the throne. She commissioned eight premiers to form thirteen different administrations, and has outlived all her premiers but Mr. Gladstone and Lord Beaconsfield.

The Christian at Work says: Mr. Judah P. Benjamin has recently purchased a beautiful Parisian residence for the sum of $60,000. It is stated that this sum amounts to less than one-half of his yearly income from his practice in the English Courts. A Southern journal recalls the fact that Mr. Benjamin, fourteen years ago, after the dispersion of the Confederate Government, tramped on foot from Central Georgia to Florida and escaped in an open boat to Nassau with a single ten-dollar gold piece in his pocket, which he gave to the negro who rowed the little boat. He is said to preserve an unchanged sympathy and devotion to his Louisiana friends, and to look forward enthusiastically to revisiting the State and those old friends.

A boy has recently made an extensive discovery of Roman coins near Nassenfuss, in Styria. Near the high road, about a foot and a half below the surface of the ground, he found nearly 5,000 coins, almost all copper, the greater portion in an earthen pot, and the rest lying upon and around it. The pot was quite soft, but after a short exposure to the air it became quite hard. Owing to oxidation and the infiltration of clay most of the coins were welded together in a shapeless mass, and great pains and care were needed to separate them with as little injury as possible. They belong to the reigns of Severus, Gallianus, Claudian, Aurelianus and Probus. The largest portion belong to these two. There were none of Diocletian, so that probably they were hidden shortly before his reign.—Christian Union.

The millinery assortment of Mr. N. H. Sprunt, is complete and full, and well deserves the attention of the ladies. For further particulars we refer to advertisement.

In Milton, N. C., on the 24th September, 1879, Mrs. FANNIE M. SALZMAN, in the 38th year of her age.

This estimable christian lady had been for 19 years a devoted member of the Milton Presbyterian church, and in her personal character, as well as in all the relations of life—as a wife and mother, a daughter and sister, she illustrated the virtues of a christian profession, and adorned it with a godly walk and conversation; of a gentle and amiable disposition, she was dearly loved by a large circle of friends and kindred, and warmly responded to their affection.—Her piety was deep-toned, but bright and cheerful, evincing its controlling influence over her heart and life, but coupled with that "meek and quiet spirit which is in the sight of God of great price," and her death was one of the greatest triumph and peace.—It seemed indeed to be deprived of all its terrors, and her sorrowing husband and friends cannot soon forget the scene as she bade each one farewell—gave them precious words of comfort and counsel, and committed to their care her three little children.—With a mind unclouded even to the last, she engaged in pleasant conversation with those around her bedside, and seemed as one just waiting to enter upon some pleasant journey. Truly of her it might be said, "her end was peace." As life slowly ebbed away and her voice grew faint, she was heard repeating as to herself, the words of a favorite hymn—

"In the sweet fields of Eden,
On the other side of Jordan,
There is rest for the weary," &c.,

and when it was almost impossible to catch the dying whispers, said, "Glory and honor and ..... forever and ever." Thus passed away her gentle spirit, leaving loving hearts to mourn their loss, but not as they that have no hope. May they all meet again in joy, in those "sweet fields," on the other side of the flood. PASTOR.

In Caswell county, at his residence, on the 6th of October, of Typhoid fever, Capt. ELBRIDGE G. MITCHELL, in the 52d year of his age.

Capt. Mitchell will be sadly missed, not only by his bereaved family, but by the whole community. He had been for a number of years a professing christian, and was for some time previous to his death a ruling elder in Grier's (Presbyterian) church. He was honored and respected by all who knew him, for his firm integrity and uprightness of character. He was a man of great industry and energy, and was cut down just at the meridian of life, in the midst of prosperity. He has left a widow and three orphan children to mourn his loss. In their sore affliction they will have the warmest sympathy of many relatives and friends; nor will they be forgotten, we may be sure, by Him who has promised to be the Father of the fatherless and the Judge of the widow.

"The pains of death are past,
Labor and sorrow cease;
And life's long warfare closed at last,
His soul is found in peace."

IN MEMORIAM.

Minutes adopted at a meeting of the session of Madison church, Oct. 12, 1879:

Whereas, it has pleased God in His wisdom, and as we surely believe merciful providence, to take from the session and the Church our revered and most highly esteemed brother elder, Mr. W. R. D. LINDSAY, we desire to express and record upon our Session Book a sense of our love for him and gratitude to God for the loan of His servant, whom He has permitted to go in and out amongst us so many years.

1st. We do acknowledge every good gift as from the Lord. We do most gratefully acknowledge the Christian example of our brother in every relation of life as husband, parent, citizen and officer in this church.

2d. Whilst ever diligent in business, his heart was ever open and warm to the Church and her interests, to hospitality and to the calls of charity.

3d. We do most cordially commend the remembrance of him and his walk, to ourselves, the members of the church over which he was called to rule, and to all who knew him, as well calculated to end in the joyful welcome of "Well done, good and faithful servant, enter into the joy of the Lord."

4th. We extend to his widow and surviving children our hearty sympathy, and pray that the God of the widow and the fatherless may ever be near to them in love.

Mrs. SUSAN MARY READ, wife of Mr. Isaac Read and oldest daughter of the late Frederick Nash, departed this life on the 15th ult., after a protracted illness, which she bore with christian patience and fortitude, with a tender and affectionate consideration, and a grateful sense of kind attentions, assiduous care and devoted love, which she received in unceasing ministrations of willing hands and loving hearts. The writer was acquainted with her from blooming youth to the withering touch of age, and loved her for her moral worth, as did all who knew her. She leaves a husband with seven sons and many friends and relations to mourn their irreparable loss. All her sons were in the Confederate army and conspicuous for their gallantry—they are settled in various parts of the country from New York to Texas, citizens of intelligence and worth, living monuments of the wisdom of her maternal care and training. During Mrs. Read's illness no words of impatience passed her lips, and she expressed in glowing and earnest terms her assured hope of salvation through the merits and righteousness of the Saviour. She was a woman of culture and literary taste, with a large share of sound judgment and common sense garnished with the grace of the christian's faith, developing in all the walks of life the well balanced character of a bright and lovely woman. She was ever mindful of her duties to God and neighbor, all the endearing relations of friends, daughter, sister, wife and mother, she sustained with a steadfast affection, a uniform and sweet affability and a courteous dignity, which could only spring from the impulses of a high nature, ennobled by the principles of christianity. She was in her 74th year and came from her home in Brooklyn in feeble health on a visit to the family home-stead, and now rests in the burial place of the family, with the remains of the loved ones, who have preceded her in the journey to that "House not made with hands eternal in the Heavens."

Hillsboro Oct, 24, 1879.

At Mebaneville, N. C., October 27th, of typhoid fever, after one month of intense suffering, MARY IDA, aged 19, daughter of John and Elizabeth Mebane, of Marion county, Texas.

When Ida was six months old her mother died, leaving her to the tender care of her aunt, Miss Mag Woods, who trained her up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. Two years ago she was received into the full communion of the Hawfields church, and her walk as a christian was blameless.

When tortured by disease she longed for the rest of the people of God, and agonized for those dear to her, who she felt were wandering from the fold of God. "Write, Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord." P.

EDUCATION.

To the Chairmen of the Presbyterial Committees of Education:

Please bear in mind that application for aid to students must be made annually. The fact that a student was on our list last year makes no difference. If he wishes aid this year, application must be made by the Chairman of Education in his Presbytery. Brethren will also please state whether the student is in College, or in the Seminary. The undersigned has authority from the Committee to receive all students as beneficiaries for whom application is made in the regular way.

My postoffice address at present is Covington, Tenn., but letters addressed to me at Memphis will be forwarded. Quite a number of letters on the subject of Education have been addressed to Rev. Dr. Waddel, the former Secretary. Brethren will bear in mind that there has been a change of Secretaries.

E. M. RICHARDSON,
Secretary of Education.

You Can be Happy.

If you will stop all your extravagant and wrong notions in doctoring yourself and families with expensive doctors or humbug cure-alls, that do harm always, and use only nature's simple remedies for all your ailments—you will be wise, well and happy, and save great expense. The greatest remedy for this, the great, wise and good will tell you, is Hop Bitters—believe it. See "Proverbs" in another column.

Consumption Cured.

An old physician, retired from practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure for Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma, and Throat and Lung, Affections, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative power in thousands of cases, has felt it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and a desire to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge to all who desire it, this recipe, in German, French, or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail by addressing with stamp, naming this paper, W. W. SHERAR, 149 Powers' Block, Rochester, New York.

Charlotte Institute.

THE next session begins September 10th, 1879, and ends June 8th, 1880.

No Institute ever made more rapid progress in securing the confidence and esteem of its patrons than this one during the past session. Before the end of the scholastic year the number of its pupils, attracted by the well-earned reputation of the school, increased to 117, exclusive of the adult ladies who availed themselves of the superior advantages here given in the departments of Music, Art, and Modern Languages. In no respect is this Institute inferior to any other first class boarding-school in the Southern or Middle States. Such testimonials as will satisfy an one as to the high standard and thoroughness of the instruction here are published in the catalogue. These testimonials are peculiarly trustworthy, inasmuch as they are given by gentlemen engaged in teaching in well known schools and colleges of the highest grade, and who are therefore qualified to express an opinion in regard to educational institutions.

The total expense for the half session or term will be $125. This amount includes board, with washing, fuel, lights, furnished room and servants' attendance, tuition in all the English branches, Latin, with either French or German, Calisthenics, text-books and stationery for school purposes. Pupils are not permitted to incur additional expense without permission of their parents. Parents are thus assured that their bills will not be greater than they expected.

Special arrangements and special terms for young ladies who wish to take only Music, Painting and Drawing, and Modern Languages, severally or collectively.

The Invention of the Age.

It does not destroy the draft.
It does not interfere with cleaning the tubes.
It will not choke up, and requires no cleaning.
It requires no direct dampers to be opened when raising steam (dampers being objectionable, as they may be left open and allow sparks to escape)
It requires no water to extinguish sparks, which, by condensation, destroys the draft. Besides, when water is used, if neglected, the efficiency is destroyed by evaporation of the water, and the boiler is kept in a filthy condition.
It is simple and durable and can be relied upon.
It can be attached to any boiler.
No planter should be without one of them. Insurance companies will insure gins and barns where the Talbott Engines and Spark-Arresters are used at same rate as charged for water or horse-power.

FOR THE FAMILY

From Statesville American.

The Unlearned Orator.

I heard an aged man, a man of care—
His face was pale, and silver'd was his hair,
His voice was tremulous, but calm and sweet—
He long had worship'd at the Saviour's feet;
He had not knowledge that is taught in schools,
And knew not rhetoric, its laws and rules,
But taught of God, his voice was pray'r and praise,
While health did crown the measure of his days.
To little children he was good and kind,
Plain in his speech, and humble in his mind;
I've seen him seat them silently in line,
And teach them often from God's book divine;
Its bless'd truths fell meekly from his tongue—
It seemed that he again was fresh and young—
So sweet and simple, gentle, was his strain,
The children looked, and listened, looked again;
With him they smiled at pleasant things he said,
Then soon, with him, the melting tear was shed,—
As he now talked of One who for them died,
And named the cruel spear that pierced His side,—
How little children, He had once caressed,
And kindly took them in His arms and bless'd,
When men would them have pushed far off, aside,
Or yet, perchance, to them would scold or chide.
He'd talk to them of cats, of chickens too,
Of anything the children loved or knew,
And then, with beaming eyes, and tone of awe,
He would some precious, touching moral, draw,
Or quote the Saviour's words and deeds of love,
His hands and face, raised reverently above,
The children following his looks on high,
With quivering lip, and moistened eye;
Now o'er Jerusalem, with Christ they weep,
Now, with the winds and waves, are lulled to sleep,
Then to the Mount, he'd gently lead the way,
And show where Jesus went to weep and pray,
How willingly He died, their souls to save,
To conquer Death, and lift them from the grave.
The children, eager on his accents hung,
Truth fell so simply from the speaker's tongue,
And older hearts did listen long and well,
To hear the blessed tidings as they fell,
From lips more eloquent than Plato's tongue,
Of whom the ancient Greeks and Romans sung.
I've heard, he spoke where men were learned and great,
Among the Doctors of the Church and State,
A colporteur, as humble and as mild,
In dress and manners simple as a child,
And that his words fell with such pathos there,
That stony hearts were mov'd to tears and pray'r:—
He spoke of God, his own dear hope and trust,
The blessed joys of all the good and just,—
How he, himself, was taught that love to know,
Which Jesus to the sinner doth bestow.
"I have no learning," were the words he said,
"My friends were poor—we toil for daily bread,
To school, three months, in all, I never went,
But many blessings still, to me were lent;
My mother," then he said, with grateful voice,
"Bereft of him, the husband of her choice,
On me her infant son, bestowed her care,
And knelt with me, in humble fervent pray'r;
How oft, her hand, plac'd on my youthful head,
I've felt the burning tears, for me, she shed,
And now in life's great drama I have part,
Those tears—I feel them trickling on my heart."

These words he said with true, poetic soul—
Behold the tide of feeling swell and roll,
For oft, ambition, wreath, and glory flee,
And leave us, children, at our mother's knee.

—MIGNONETTE.

Statesville, Saturday, May 4, 1867.

A Lesson of Faith.

"If a man die shall he live again? All the days of my appointed time will I wait, till my change come."—Job. xiv: 14.

"Let me hire you as a nurse to my poor children," said a Butterfly to a quiet Caterpillar, who was strolling along a cabbage leaf in her odd, lumbering way. "See these little eggs," continued the Butterfly, "I don't know how long it will be before they come to life, and I feel very sick and poorly, and if I should die, who will take care of my baby butterflies when I'm gone? Will you, kind, mild, green Caterpillar? But you must mind what you give them to eat, Caterpillar! They cannot, of course, live on your rough food. You must give them early dew and honey from the flowers; and you must let them fly about only a little way at first; for, of course, one can't expect them to use their wings properly all at once. Dear me! it is a sad pity you cannot fly yourself. But I have no time to look for another nurse now, so you will do your best, I hope. Dear! dear! I cannot think what made me come and lay my eggs on a cabbage leaf! What a place for young butterflies to be born upon! Still you will be kind, will you not, to the poor little ones? Here, take this gold dust from my wings as a reward. Oh, how dizzy I am! Caterpillar you will remember—about—the—food—"

And with these words the Butterfly closed her eyes and died; and the green Caterpillar, who had not had the opportunity of saying "yes" or "no," to the request, was left standing alone by the side of the Butterfly's eggs.

"A pretty nurse she has chosen, indeed, poor lady!" exclaimed she, "and a pretty business I have in hand! Why, her senses must have left her, or she never would have asked a poor crawling creature like me to bring up her dainty little ones! Much they'll mind me, truly, when they feel the gay wings on their backs, and can fly away out of my sight whenever they choose! Ah! how silly some people are, in spite of their painted clothes and the gold dust on their wings!"

However, the poor Butterfly was dead, and there lay the eggs on the cabbage leaf; and the green Caterpillar had a kind heart, so she resolved to do her best. But she got no sleep that night, she was so very anxious. She made her back ache with walking all night long round her young charges for fear any harm should happen to them; and in the morning she said to herself—

"Two heads are better than one. I will consult some wise animal upon the matter, and get advice. How should a poor, crawling creature like me know what to do without asking my betters?"

But still there was a difficulty. Whom should the Caterpillar consult?

"I wonder which is the wisest of all the animals I know," sighed the Caterpillar, in great distress; and then she thought and thought till at last she thought of the Lark; and she fancied that because he went up so high, and nobody knew where he went to, he must be very clever and know a great deal; for to go very high (which she could never do) was the Caterpillar's idea of perfect glory.

Now, in the neighboring cornfield there lived a Lark, and the Caterpillar sent a message to him, to beg him to come and talk to her; and when he came, she told him all her difficulties, and asked him what she was to do, to feed and rear the little creatures so different from herself.

"Perhaps, you will be able to inquire and hear something about it the next time you go up high," observed the Caterpillar, timidly.

The Lark said "Perhaps he should," but he did not satisfy her curiosity any further. Soon afterwards, however, he went singing upwards into the bright blue sky. By degrees his voice died away in the distance, till the green Caterpillar could not hear a sound. It is nothing to say she could not see him; for, poor thing! she never could see far at any time, and had a difficulty in looking upwards at all, even when she reared herself up most carefully, which she did now; but it was no use, so she dropped upon her legs again and resumed her walk around the Butterfly's eggs, nibbling a bit of the cabbage leaf, now and then, as she moved along.

"What a time the Lark has been gone!" she cried at last. "I wonder where he is just now? I would give all my legs to know. He must have flown up higher than usual this time, I do think. How I should like to know where it is that he goes to, and what he hears in that curious blue sky. He always sings in going up and coming down, but he never lets any secret out. He is very, very close."

And the green Caterpillar took another turn round the Butterfly's eggs.

At last the Lark's voice began to be heard again. The Caterpillar almost jumped for joy, and it was not long before she saw her friend descend with hushed note to the cabbage bed.

"News, news, glorious news, friend Caterpillar," sang the Lark; "but the worst of it is you won't believe me!"

"I believe everything I am told," observed the Caterpillar, hastily.

"Well, then, first of all, I will tell you what these little creatures are to eat"—and the Lark nodded his beak towards the eggs. "What do you think it is to be?—guess!"

"Dew, and the honey of flowers, I am afraid," said the Caterpillar.

"No such thing, old lady! something simpler than that. Something that you can get at quite easily.

"I can get at nothing quite easily but cabbage leaves," muttered the Caterpillar; in distress.

"Excellent! my friend," cried the Lark, exultingly, "you have found it out. You are to feed them with cabbage leaves."

"Never!" said the Caterpillar, indignantly. It was their dying mother's last request that I should do no such thing."

"Their dying mother knew nothing about the matter," persisted the Lark; "but why do you ask me, and then disbelieve what I say? You have neither faith nor trust."

"Oh! I believe everything I'm told," said the Caterpillar.

"Nay, but you do not," replied the Lark; "you don't believe me even about the food, and yet that is but a beginning of what I have to tell you. Why, caterpillar! what do you think those little eggs will turn out to be?"

"Butterflies, to be sure," said the Caterpillar.

"Caterpillars," sang the Lark; "and you'll find it out in time;" and the Lark flew away, for he did not want to stay and contest the point with his friend.

"I thought the Lark had been wise and kind," observed the mild, green Caterpillar, once more beginning to walk round the eggs, "but I find that he is foolish and saucy instead. Perhaps, he went up too high this time. Ah! it's a pity when people who soar so high are silly and rude nevertheless! Dear me! I wonder whom he sees, and what he does up yonder."

"I would tell you, if you would believe me," sang the Lark, descending once more.

"I believe everything I am told," reiterated the Caterpillar, with as grave a face as if it were a fact.

"Then I'll tell you something else," cried the Lark; for the best of my news remains behind. You will one day be a butterfly yourself!"

"Wretched bird!" exclaimed the Caterpillar, "you jest with my inferiority—now you are cruel as well as foolish. Go away! I will ask your advice no more."

"I told you you would not believe me," cried the Lark, nettled in his turn.

"I believe everything I am told," persisted the Caterpillar, "that is"—and she hesitated—"everything that it is reasonable to believe. But to tell me that butterflies' eggs are caterpillars, and that caterpillars leave off crawling and get wings and become butterflies! Lark, you are too wise to believe such nonsense yourself, for you know it is impossible."

"I know no such thing," said the Lark warmly. "Whether I soar over the cornfields of earth or go up into the sky I see so many wonderful things I know no reason why there should not be more. Oh, Caterpillar, it is because you crawl, because you never get beyond your cabbage leaf, that you call anything impossible."

"Nonsense," shouted the Caterpillar, "I know what's possible and what's not possible, according to my experience and capacity, as well as you do. Look at my long green body, and these endless legs, and then talk to me about having wings and a painted feathery coat. Fool—"

"And fool you! you would be wise, Caterpillar!" cried the indignant Lark. "Fool, to attempt to reason about what you cannot understand. Do you not hear how my song swells with rejoicing as I soar upwards to the mysterious wonder-world above? Oh, Caterpillar, what comes to you from thence, receive as I do, upon trust."

"That is what you call—"

"Faith," interrupted the Lark.

"How am I to learn Faith?" asked the Caterpillar.

At that moment she felt something at her side. She looked round—eight or ten little green caterpillars were moving about, and had already made a show of a hole in the cabbage leaf. They had broken from the Butterfly's eggs!

Shame and amazement filled our green friend's heart, but joy soon followed, for as the first wonder was possible the second might be so too.

"Teach me your lesson, Lark!" she would say, and the Lark sang to her of the wonders of the earth below and of the heavens above. And the Caterpillar talked all the rest of her life to her relations of the time when she should be a butterfly.

But none of them believed her. She, nevertheless, had learned the Lark's lesson of faith, and when she was going into her chrysalis grave she said, "I shall be a Butterfly some day."

But her relations thought her mind was wandering and said, "Poor thing!"

And when she was a butterfly, and was going to die again, she said:

"I have known many wonders—I have faith. I CAN TRUST EVEN NOW FOR WHAT SHALL COME NEXT!"—Parables from Nature, by Mrs. Alfred Gatty.

For the Boys.

"Sir," said a boy, stopping before a man on his cart, "do you want a boy to work for you?"

"No," replied the man, "I have no such want."

The boy looked disappointed; at least the man thought so, and asked:

"Don't you succeed in getting a place?"

"I have asked at a good many places," said the boy. "A woman told me you had been after a boy, but it is not so, I find."

"Don't be discouraged," said the man, in a friendly tone.

"Oh, no, sir," said the boy, cheerfully, "this is a very big world, and I feel certain God has something for me to do in it."

"Just so, just so," said a gentleman who had overheard the talk, "Come with me, my boy; I am in want of somebody like you."

It was the doctor, and the doctor thought any boy so anxious to find his work would be likely to do it faithfully when he did find it.

If everybody had the spirit of this little lad there would be no idlers in the world, standing on the corners, sitting in the shops, waiting for work to come to them. Work does not often come so. Almost everything worth having, like ore in the mine, must be sought for.—Canada Presbyterian.

Scottish Songs.

Every way you take them—in authorship, in sentiment, in tone, in language—they are the creation and property of the people. And if educated men and high-born ladies, and even some of Scotland's kings, have added to the store, it was because they had lived familiarly among the peasantry, felt as they felt and spoke their language that they were enabled to sing strains that their country's heart would not disown. For the whole character of these melodies, various as they are, is so peculiar and so pronounced that the smallest foreign element introduced, one word out of keeping, grates on the ear and mars the music. Scottish song has both a spirit and a frame-work of its own, within which it rigorously keeps. Into that frame-work, these molds, it is wonderful how much strong and manly thought, how much deep and tender humanheartedness, can be poured. But so entirely unique is the inner spirit, as well as the outward setting, that no one, not even Burns, could stretch it beyond its compass without your being at once aware of a falsetto note. It was the glory of Burns that, taking the old form of Scottish song as his instrument, he was able to elicit from it so much. That Burns was the creator of Scottish song no one would have denied more vehemently than himself. When he appeared, in 1786, as the national poet of his country, the tide of taste was running strong in favor of Scottish song. He took up that tide of feeling, or rather he was taken up by it, and he carried it to its height. He was nurtured in a home that was full of song. His mother's memory was stored with old tunes or songs of her country, and she sang them to her eldest boy from his cradle-time all through his boyhood. Amid the multifarious reading of his early years the book he most prized was an old song book, which he carried with him wherever he went, poring over it, he says, as he drove his cart or walked to labor, song by song, verse by verse, carefully distinguishing the true, tender or sublime from affectation or fustian. Thus he learned his songcraft and his critic-craft together. The earliest poem he composed was in his seventeenth summer, a simple love-song in praise of a girl who was his companion as a reaper in the harvestfield. The last strain he breathed was from his death-bed, in remembrance of some former affection.—J. C. Shairp, in Atlantic Monthly.

An Anecdote of Carlyle.

One of our friends from Kirkaldy has been a pupil of Carlyle, and when the philosopher visits Scotland he finds a welcome retreat in the home of his old scholar. Some four years ago he was residing thus with a friend, and one evening the host said, "Now, Mr. Carlyle we are going to have family worship"—thinking, perhaps, that he might wish to retire before that exercise was begun. But Thomas said, "Well, bring me the Book, and I'll read for you." The Bible was given to him, and he began to read at the Book of Job, which, as all who know "Hero Worship" will remember, is a special favorite with him. For a time it was delightful to listen, as he went on chapter after chapter, and his quiet but quaint "asides" of parenthetic remark were sometimes exceedingly rich. As, for example, when he came to the words, "where the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest," he said, as if thinking aloud, "Ay, I had forgotten that was there." So, again, in reading the first speech of Eliphaz, he said, "Well, Eliphaz did not make much of that anyway." But it was soon evident that he would put the patience of his hearers to almost as great a trial as that to which Job's was subjected. For anything that appeared, he had become oblivious of the occasion and its surroundings, and was entirely absorbed in that old debate, and if uninterrupted, he might have read on to the end of the book! So, after their patience was exhausted, his niece, by whom he was accompanied, recalled him to himself, saying, "The servants must be weary, and will wish to go to sleep." Whereupon he closed the Book with a sharp, short, clasp-like sound, and betook himself to the next room and to his pipe. Ludicrous a little, doubtless! yet suggestive, too. For is it not better to be absorbed in the thought of the Book than punctilious about the form of worship? And would it not be to edification sometimes, in the closet at least, if not around the family altar, if the fictitious divisions of the books of Scripture were ignored by us, and we were to read them as connected wholes, and not simply in fragmentary pieces? We do not judge, and yet we confess that there is something to us amazingly interesting in the vision of that rugged old man, who has done battle with so many of the shams of his age, sitting there in the midst of that home group and reading at eventide the Book of Job. May He who spoke out of the whirlwind to that afflicted patriarch come at the end also to our gnarled old philosopher, that he, too, may say, "I know that my Redeemer liveth."—Dr. Wm. M. Taylor, in Christian at Work.

DR. C. McLANE'S

Celebrated American

WORM SPECIFIC

OR

VERMIFUGE.

SYMPTOMS OF WORMS.

THE countenance is pale and leaden-colored, with occasional flushes, or a circumscribed spot on one or both cheeks; the eyes become dull; the pupils dilate; an azure semicircle runs along the lower eye-lid; the nose is irritated, swells, and sometimes bleeds; a swelling of the upper lip; occasional headache, with humming or throbbing of the ears; an unusual secretion of saliva; slimy or furred tongue; breath very foul, particularly in the morning; appetite variable, sometimes voracious, with a knawing sensation of the stomach, at others, entirely gone; fleeting pains in the stomach; occasional nausea and vomiting; violent pains throughout the abdomen; bowels irregular, at times costive; stools slimy; not unfrequently tinged with blood; belly swollen and hard; urine turbid; respiration occasionally difficult, and accompanied by hiccough; cough sometimes dry and convulsive; uneasy and disturbed sleep, with grinding of the teeth; temper variable, but generally irritable, &c.

Whenever the above symptoms are found to exist,

DR. C. McLANE'S VERMIFUGE will certainly effect a cure.

IT DOES NOT CONTAIN MERCURY

in any form; it is an innocent preparation, not capable of doing the slightest injury to the most tender infant.

The genuine DR. McLANE'S VERMIFUGE bears the signatures of C. McLANE and FLEMING BROS. on the wrapper.

—:o:—

DR. C. McLANE'S

LIVER PILLS

are not recommended as a remedy "for all the ills that flesh is heir to," but in affections of the liver, and in all Bilious Complaints, Dyspepsia and Sick Headache, or diseases of that character, they stand without a rival.

AGUE AND FEVER.

No better cathartic can be used preparatory to, or after taking Quinine.

As a simple purgative they are unequaled.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

The genuine are never sugar coated.

Each box has a red wax seal on the lid with the impression DR. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS.

Each wrapper bears the signatures of C. McLANE and FLEMING BROS.

Insist upon having the genuine DR. C. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS, prepared by Fleming Bros., of Pittsburgh, Pa., the market being full of imitations of the name McLane, spelled differently but same pronunciation.

PREVENT YELLOW FEVER!

It has been well proved that prevention is better than cure. A very simple and effective preventative for Yellow Fever and other fevers has been found in BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTERS. They were used during last season in New Orleans very successfully. The common method of using them was to apply them over the stomach, changing them every week. They are one OF THE MOST ACTIVE ANTISEPTICS and seem to destroy the poison. One reason why they are of special value is that they stimulate the digestion, and thus enable the system to overcome the influence of the malarial poison. They are a cheap and almost certain preventative. Ask your physician about them. Benson's Capcine Plasters are a sure preventative and cure for chills and fever if worn as above. Price 25 cents.

ABSTRACT

of the Minutes of the Sixty-Sixth Session of the Synod of North Carolina, held in Statesville, N. C., October 22, 25, 1879.

The Synod of North Carolina met, according to adjournment, in the Presbyterian church of Statesville, N. C., Wednesday, October 22, and adjourned October 25, 1879. The Synod was opened with a sermon by the Moderator, Rev. Joseph R. Wilson, D. D., from Rev. v: 6. After sermon Synod was constituted with prayer.

There were present during the sessions of Synod, one hundred and twelve members, of whom sixty-one were ministers and fifty-one ruling elders. Fifty-four ministers were absent, of whom fourteen sent excuses for absence, and one hundred and seventy-five churches were not represented.

The Rev. E. F. Rockwell, of the Presbytery of Concord, was elected Moderator, and Rev. J. C. Alexander, of the Presbytery of Orange, and Ruling Elder H. C. Hamilton, of the Presbytery of Concord, were chosen temporary clerks.

The special committee appointed at last meeting of Synod, (Rev. J. M. Atkinson, chairman) to lay before the Legislature the action of Synod touching Sabbath Desecration by railways, made the following report:

The committee appointed to bring the matter of Sabbath observance to the notice of the Legislature of North Carolina, would respectfully report that they attended to that duty; and that their efforts were attended with gratifying success. The Legislature took the matter in hand and had such action as it believed will secure a better observance of the sacred day, so far as their authority extends.

Rev. J. M. Atkinson and Gen. J. A. Young were appointed a special committee to report to Synod what further action with reference to Sabbath observance, if any, should be taken under the action of the last General Assembly on this subject. The committee reported that they found nothing calling for further action by the Synod.

The report of the Directors of Union Theological Seminary was read, and with accompanying papers, suggesting certain changes, and a communication from the Synod of Virginia, was referred to the Standing Committee. The committee made report thereon as follows, which was adopted:

The Synod renews its expressions of confidence in this beloved and important institution for the training of ministers, and records its gratitude for another year of signal usefulness and blessing.

With reference to matters on which the special counsel of the Synod is requested, the Synod of North Carolina deems it inexpedient to diminish the number of directors, and refers the question of a change of sessions to the Board of Directors.

The Synod hereby re-appoints the Fourth Class of Directors, whose term expires at this meeting, to-wit: Rev. Walter W. Pharr, Mr. Wm. Murdock, and in place of Rev. J. P. McPherson, Rev. Wm. S. Lacy.

The report of the Agent of Sustentation was approved, and its publication requested by standing rule in the North Carolina Presbyterian.

The report of the committee appointed at last meeting of Synod "As to the Education of a Colored Ministry" was approved and the following resolutions appended thereto, adopted:

1st. That Synod recommends to its Ministers and Church Sessions more vigorous efforts in seeking out suitable candidates for the colored ministry, and when found that the claims of the proposed candidates be referred to the several Presbyteries for appropriate action.

2nd. That Synod urges upon all its churches to give to Tuskaloosa Institute, our seminary for educating a colored ministry, a more liberal material and moral support.

The report of the Agent of Education was approved, and its publication requested by standing rule of Synod, in the North Carolina Presbyterian. The following resolutions appended thereto were adopted:

1st. That, in accordance with the recommendation of the General Assembly, the last Thursday in February, in 1880, be observed as a day of prayer to God for the outpouring of His Spirit upon our institutions of learning and the youth of our Church.

2nd. That this Synod respectfully overtures the General Assembly to convene in Charleston, S. C., next May, to unite the educational interest of our Church with that of publication, under one secretary.

In connection with the report on Education, Synod took order to hear Prof. J. R. Blake, in regard to Davidson College.

The following resolution was adopted:

Resolved, That a committee be appointed to prepare a paper setting forth the importance of Davidson College to the Church and to the country, and urging the friends of Presbyterianism and learning, to increase its patronage and to aid in its endowment.

Under this resolution the Moderator appointed the following committee: Rev. L. C. Vass, Rev. H. G. Hill, and Rev. J. Henry Smith, D. D.

The committee reported the following paper, which was approved, and it was ordered that a copy be furnished the North Carolina Presbyterian for publication:

The Committee on Treasurer's Book and Account made a report, which was amended and adopted, and is as follows:

Your committee appointed to audit and report upon the Treasurer's books beg to submit the following:

The books are kept with that neatness and exactness which are characteristic of the Treasurer, and correct vouchers are on file for all disbursements.

We respectfully call the attention of the Synod to the remarks of the Treasurer accompanying his report.

The committee to whom were referred the Statistical Reports of the Presbyteries made the following report which was adopted:

The Committee on Statistical Reports respectfully report to Synod:

From the Reports submitted to Synod, it appears that during the year six ministers have been received into the Presbyteries, two each by the Presbyteries of Concord and of Fayetteville, and one each by Orange and Mecklenburg; five have been dismissed to other Presbyteries, three from the Presbytery of Orange and one each from Concord and Fayetteville; there have been two licensures, one each by Concord and Mecklenburg; there have been two ministers ordained, both by Orange Presbytery; the pastoral relation has been constituted in seven churches, five in the Presbytery of Orange, and two in the Presbytery of Concord; this relation has been dissolved in three instances, one in each of the Presbyteries of Orange, Wilmington and Mecklenburg; three evangelists have been appointed, two in Orange and one in Mecklenburg Presbytery; seven churches have been organized, three in Orange Presbytery and one in each of the other Presbyteries, and in addition one church of colored people, organized in Newbern under the name of Ebenezer, has been received under the care of Orange Presbytery, according to the plan recommended by the General Assembly.

Your committee further report the death of three ministers of the Synod, to wit: Rev. N. Z. Graves of the Presbytery of Wilmington, Rev. John Monroe Anderson of the Presbytery of Orange, and Rev. John Douglas of the Presbytery of Mecklenburg.

Committees were duly appointed to prepare suitable minutes for the adoption of Synod, relative to the deaths of these brethren. Synod took special order on Saturday to hear these papers, which, after remarks by members of the body were adopted by a rising vote of Synod; after which Synod engaged in prayer, led by the Rev. James P. McPherson.

[The minutes have been published in the N. C. Presbyterian.]

The Stated Clerk was directed to forward copies of the Minutes of Synod to the respective families of the deceased, with the Synod's expression of sincere sympathy.

The report of the Agent of Sabbath Schools was approved, and its publication requested by standing rule of Synod in the N. C. Presbyterian.

The report called attention to the resolutions of the General Assembly of 1879, which were ordered to be recorded, and are as follows:

1. No part of the work of the Church today demands more careful supervision and control from the courts of the Church than our Sabbath schools. The efficiency, thoroughness and success of this work as an agency of Church progress must be greatly promoted by its systematic organization under presbyterial and sessional authority.

2. It is manifest that the Church should afford to those who are engaged in a work so important, so vital in its welfare, every facility to prepare themselves for its successful prosecution, that our presbyteries and sessions should establish a higher standard of qualification for the teacher's work, encourage teachers to attain it, and to afford them the means of doing so.

3. That in the multiplicity of books and the variety of Sunday school aids that crowd themselves upon the notice of our schools, many of them having no church responsibility or control, there can be safety for our Church and its Sabbath school work, only in the closest scrutiny by our constituted authorities of everything that is used in our schools.

The report of the Agent of Publication was approved and its publication requested by standing rule of Synod in the N. C. Presbyterian. The resolutions passed at the last meeting of Synod were reaffirmed, and are as follows:

Resolved, That all our presbyteries be urged to enter upon the work of Colportage, and to prosecute it with vigor to the fullest extent of their means and opportunities.

2. That in the selection of Sabbath school literature, the preference should be given to the publications of our own committee by our ministers and churches, and officers of Sabbath schools, and heads of families.

The editor of the N. C. Presbyterian, John McLaurin, by invitation, addressed the Synod in regard to the interests of that paper.

The following resolutions were adopted in response:

1. That the Synod has heard the editor of the N. C. Presbyterian with pleasure on the condition and prospects of that paper, and assures him of its hearty sympathy and co-operation in his efforts to enlarge its usefulness.

2. That the Synod commends the N. C. Presbyterian as a paper worthy of the confidence and liberal patronage of our people, and hereby encourages its ministers and elders to aid in extending its circulation, until every family is supplied with a copy.

The report of the special committee appointed to report "as to what can be done to promote the greater efficiency of Evangelistic work in our bounds," was read and laid on the table.

The following resolution was adopted:

That Synod hereby appoint a Synodical Agent of Evangelistic Labor to consider and report annually on white and colored evangelization in its bounds.

Under this resolution Rev. C. M. Payne of Wilmington Presbytery was chosen Synodical Agent of Evangelistic Labor.

Rev. Richard McIlwaine, D. D., the General Assembly's Secretary of Home and Foreign Missions, addressed the Synod in regard to those interests.

The following paper in response was adopted:

The Synod of North Carolina has heard with pleasure the address of Rev. Dr. McIlwaine, the Assembly's Secretary of Home and Foreign Missions, and cordially commends to our people the causes which he represents, and adopts the following resolutions:

That we recommend that our presbyteries endeavor to raise for the objects of Home Missions and Evangelistic work $6,000 in the aggregate, or an average of 35 cents per communicant.

2. That we also recommend that our Presbyteries be urged to raise for Foreign Missions the aggregate of $12,000, or an average of 70 cents per communicant.

3. That in order to accomplish this purpose, our ministers be urged to employ the approved agencies in use, viz: The circulation of The Missionary, the monthly concert of prayer, and the faithful and frequent presentation of these causes from the pulpit.

The Committee on Minutes of General Assembly reported as follows, which was adopted:

Your committee would respectfully report that they have carefully examined the Minutes of the Assembly, and call the attention of the Synod to the following matters:

1, p. 38. The Concert of Prayer for the young on the last Thursday of February.

2, p. 39. The repeal of the action touching exhorters.

3, p. 43. The answer of the Assembly, that overtures to that body should come from lower courts, and not from individuals.

4, p. 46. The appointment of Presbyterial Committees on the Sabbath.

5, p. 48. The recommendation of the Earnest Worker and the Children's Friend in Sabbath Schools.

6, p. 52. The collection for Tuskaloosa Institute, first Sabbath in December.

7, p. 54. The Monthly Concert to be observed and collection taken up.

8, p. 59. Sabbath schools under Presbyterial and Sessional authority.

An overture from the Presbytery of Mecklenburg was read and referred to the Committee on Bills and Overtures. Upon the report of the committee, the following action was taken:

The Committee on Bills and Overtures would report Overture No. 1, from Presbytery of Mecklenburg, requesting Synod—first, to decide the question, "Does the absence from the printed minutes of a church court of the proper record suffice to nullify the action of said court;" second, to order the reception of the report of the committee appointed at its sessions in Charlotte, in 1877, in relation the publication.

In response to the overture from the Presbytery of Mecklenburg, Synod replies: first, that the Presbytery was mistaken as to the grounds upon which the Moderator based his ruling at the session of Synod in Goldsboro, October, 1878; that ruling was not that the record spoken of was absent from the printed but from the written minutes of Synod.

It was further ordered that the printed explanation of the absence from the minutes of a correct record of the action taken in Charlotte, made by the former Stated Clerk, Rev. Jacob Doll, be preserved in connection with the record.

It was then ordered that the Committee on the Publication Interests, raised under the action in Charlotte, be discharged.

The following resolution with reference to "Woman Preaching" was adopted:

Whereas, Some of our people have been disturbed by "Woman Preaching," and some of our brethren have desired from this body a deliverance upon the subject; therefore

Resolved, That public preaching by women being opposed to the Word of God, is therefore opposed to the welfare of His people, and all our members are instructed to give it no countenance.

The Stated Clerk presented the Statistical Report of the Synod to the General Assembly. It is as follows:

The Synod of North Carolina respectfully reports to the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States, that it consists in whole of 115 ministers, having under their care 226 churches, 6 licentiates and 19 candidates, viz:

PRESBYTERIES.	MINISTERS.	CHURCHES.	LICENTIATES.	CANDIDATES.
Orange	30	60	1	8
Concord	24	35	2	5
Fayetteville	19	50	..	2
Wilmington	14	32	2	..
Mecklenburg	28	49	1	4
Total	115	226	6	19

The Synod further reports that its next stated meeting will be held in the First Presbyterian church, Raleigh, N. C., on Wednesday, November 10, 1880, at 7 o'clock p. m.

The following resolutions in regard to enrolling members of Synod was adopted:

Resolved, That the stated clerk and the pastor of the church in which the Synod holds its annual session be constituted a Committee of Enrollment, who shall at a convenient hour before the opening of the Synod prepare the Roll of the Synod, after the manner of the preparation of the Roll of the Assembly. And to this Committee of Enrollment shall each member report for enrollment upon appearing at Synod.

The following persons were chosen Trustees of Synod for another year: Col. John E. Brown, chairman, Charlotte, N. C.; Col. J. B. Rankin, Charlotte, N. C.; Mr. J. L. Brown, Charlotte, N. C.; Mr. R. J. McDowell, Charlotte, N. C.; Mr. J. H. Welbourne, Lexington, N. C.; Mr. D. F. Cannon, Concord, N. C.

The next stated meeting of the Synod of North Carolina will be held in the First Presbyterian church of Raleigh, N. C., on the second Wednesday of November (10th), 1880, at 7 o'clock p. m.

Closed with singing, prayer and the apostolic benediction.

Wm. S. Lacy,
Stated Clerk.

For the N. C. Presbyterian.

SOME THINGS DONE BY ORANGE.

The October session of Orange Presbytery was one of special interest. It is not our purpose to give a resume of its proceedings, as this has been already done.

One afternoon was devoted to a free conference on Church work, with closed doors, but owing to pressure of business and other circumstances the order was passed over. We hope the brethren will give this matter thought prior to the spring meeting. There are many things which might be discussed at such a conference which it would be manifestly improper to discuss with open doors—many things which make the burden of much serious conversation, but which cannot be reached ordinarily in open Presbytery, because without a motion some routine brother will call us to order.

Another matter of interest was the Presbytery's order in the matter of sessional

REPORTS ON STATE OF RELIGION.

The committee to abridge the routine work made a valuable report, and in accordance with their suggestions much time will be saved in future. Among other things, instead of semi-annual reports on state of religion as heretofore, only the spring report is required. But prior to this action is was resolved that the recording of these reports on the session books be left optional with the churches. We think this was a mistake. Though whipped out in this matter we don't wish to stay whipped. It was urged by a large minority, and at a time when many of the members had been excused from further attendance, that at least the spring report ought to be recorded, because thus only could much interesting matter for the future historian be preserved. We think this reason good and sufficient. The only argument urged against it was the labor of transcribing. The strength of this argument—if, indeed, it ought to be accorded any force—is diminished by the fact that henceforth only one annual report is required. In response to the minority's plea it was said that the statistical report furnished all necessary historical data. With this we cannot concur. It gives bare figures and none of the facts which explain these figures. The statistical report shows, for example, a decrease or increase of membership, but not the causes. It may have been due to war, pestilence, migration; or, in case of large increase, to a wonderful work of grace, but on all causes the figures are silent. There may be a vacancy, but the statistical report will not show it; neither can it appear, except by inference, in the ordinary record of sessional meetings. If it should be explicitly stated, red-tapism would certainly find an exception. History has to do not merely with phenomena, but with metaphenomena. Our sessional records at present are unfit material for the future historian. They furnish him a skeleton only, whereas he wants a portrait. The Church as a living organization is what we wish to hand down to posterity. Every one who has ever attempted to sketch the history of a Presbyterian church by the aid of its ancient records has found himself baffled at every step. Let Brother Rumple testify. Our sessional records do not give even all the facts. What say they of Sunday schools and Bible classes, and prayer meetings, and home and foreign mission societies, and religious instruction of the negroes? What say they of any of the facts which show that the Church lives, and how it lives and labors? Surely the brethren have made a mistake. This action is the grave of our Presbyterian history. It is optional with the session to record this report: they may make it obligatory on themselves. Let us rescind the ruling, however, at next Presbytery, for the benefit of the Church at large, and because it is unconstitutional. "Every session shall keep a fair record of its proceedings." One of its proceedings "is to carry out the injunction of the higher court," in making a sessional report on state of religion. This ruling says they need not keep any record of it at all.

LOVELINESS IN WOMEN.

Loveliness in women, though it may vary in its character and manifestations at different periods of life, is not the property of youth only. There is a great and undeniable charm in the fresh beauty of eighteen, to which inexperience and early romance lend perhaps additional fascination. A pretty girl of that age; who has been untouched by care, and who knows of the world through imagination only, is a very delightful object, and many men may wish they might take captive her first affections. Between eighteen and twenty-two, the changes of a girl, so far as the charms of her person go, are not likely to be great; but in that time, by longer intercourse with society and by natural development, she may grow more companionable for men of maturity, find her carriage and self-control better and greater. Those are important years in a young woman's life, the years during which, in our climate, the majority of the sex are married. And yet from twenty-two, twenty-five or twenty-six, a maiden may and generally does still further advance in attractiveness and adds to the store of her charms. She is still young, but she has outlived many youthful fancies, and feels some of the dignity of womanhood. No better age than those in a maiden's life, and never is she lovelier. But why stop at twenty-six! What fairer women are to be found than those between twenty-six and thirty, and even older? Girls of eighteen may look at them as unsought old maids, and yet they are in their womanly prime, and may capture hearts which have been steeled against girlish fascination. Oftentimes they make the best of wives, and men find a solace and companionship in their society which immaturity cannot give. They have the advantage of experience, and they have learned the lessons taught by longer contact with the world, while still they may not be averse to falling in love. It is not because of a woman being eighteen, or twenty-six, or thirty, that makes her lovely in the eyes of men. She may be just as lovely at one age as the other; but inasmuch as most marriages of women occur between the ages of 18 and 26, it is safe to assume that the majority of men prefer to take wives who are not older. But all men of taste and discernment admire feminine beauty and loveliness, whether they show themselves in budding youth or riper maturity; and it may safely be asserted that if a young women is lovely at 18 she ought to be lovelier at the greater age. But let her give no further thought to the subject. The beauty that is unconscious is the most alluring, and loveliness that exercises its sway without apparent effort is sure to make the best conquest.—Scottish-American Journal.

HID WITH CHRIST.

It is a life hidden with Christ in God. That word "hidden" is but another touch of the apostle's pencil to express the profound marriage and intimacy of the regenerate life with God. All real spiritual unions are hidden ones. A genuine friendship is the hiding of one heart in another. There are external friendships, where one heart touches another, as stone touches stone, in merely outward contact, because society, or interest, or convenience may demand it. Remove the external pressure and the hearts roll apart as stones do. But when two drops of water touch each other, each hides itself in each. All this is but the faintest possible illustration of the meaning of this word "hid." A life hid with Christ is a life so joined to Him as to be lost in Him. It is laid away in Him. It is protected, guarded, nourished in Him. This is the innermost meaning of becoming a Christian—we are dead, and yet alive. We are dead to the old and lower—we are alive to the new and higher.—Christian Union.

UNSANCTIFIED SCOLDING.

Do not advocate a holy life in a scolding and unsanctified tone. Don't press men to seek perfect peace as if you were driving reluctant animals before you. Don't talk in funeral tones about it, and urge it as if the grave was yawning under feet. It is the high birthright of every child of God to be like Him. You are not in the happiest condition to set it forth unless the "candle of the Lord" shines brightly upon your own heart and face. It is a Beulah land where heavenly gales fan the earth and the fruits of Paradise invite the taste. Encourage the people of God to go up and possess it. Tell them they are well able to do so, although the Anakim may still remain in the land. It is a good thing to carry into the pulpit with you one of the clusters of grapes native to this "enchanted ground." There is nothing so impressive and subduing as a real, loving, glowing, melting heart experience. Let this be seen, and the milk and honey and the fruit of that region will be greatly coveted.—Zion's Herald.

GOSSIP.

Can the evil wrought by gossip be estimated? We think not. A wise woman can scarcely say too little in company if the conversation trenches in the least upon scandal. Many a social, noble-minded woman has been obliged to withdraw herself from a neighborhood intimacy which would have been pleasant otherwise, because her remarks were returned by some idle tale-bearer, so perverted as to make her doubt the existence of genuine friendship, and accept loneliness for the sake of the safety it brought. You say we must talk "about something." Yes; and through that very fact we see a remedy for the evil, to so thoroughly interest ourselves in other and better things that we find no space to spare for our neighbor's affairs. Let us talk of our work, our homes, our house-plants, our books or our babies. Let us teach our eyes to find beauty everywhere, while we blind them by constant watchfulness to blemish. Never, under any circumstances, cast the first stone. Then, if any erring neighbor goes down, you cannot blame yourself for assisting the downfall.—Scottish-American Journal.

CHINESE MISSION.

The missionary laborers now in the field are, Rev. J. L. Stuart and Mrs. Stuart, Rev. G. W. Painter, Mrs. A. E. Randolph and Miss Helen Kirkland of the Hangchow Mission; Rev. H. C. DuBose and Mrs. DuBose, Rev. John W. Davis and Mrs. Davis and Miss A. C. Safford of the Soochow Mission.

At an early period in the history of the mission, a station was formed at the Gin-tsin, a large city to the west of Hangchow, by Rev. Messrs. Stuart and Helm. It was continued something more than two years, but being found so difficult of access from Hangchow, it was given up. Soon after, however, the Soochow Mission was undertaken. Soochow is situated somewhat to the north of a line extending from Hangchow to Shanghai. It communicates by water not only with Hangchow and Shanghai, but with Ningpo, a large and important city to the south. Soochow has a large population and in some respects is one of the most important cities in Central China.

It will readily be understood that in entering upon the missionary work in places like Hangchow and Soochow, where the Gospel had never before been made known, that a great deal of what may be called preparatory work had to be done before any very marked results could be realized. The language had to be acquired; the character and habits of the people themselves had to be studied; superstition of the grossest character and forms of idolatry that had grown gray with age had to be assailed; evangelical truth had to be disseminated; schools and seminaries had to be established and maintained; the Scriptures had to be translated and circulated in the vernacular tongue; the people had to be visited at their homes, and in innumerable other ways the minds of the people had to be prepared for the reception of the Gospel. The history of missionary operations in China, shows, too, that while this work of preparation is necessary and unavoidable, it is by no means a just cause for discouragement. All the older missions in that country are now being crowned with abundant success in the conversion of men, and such, no doubt, will be the case with our own mission at no distant day, if we only continue to sow the good seed in faith and hope. The seed time, in the providence of God, must precede the harvest season.

Our brethren in China have not been idle. They have been exceedingly industrious in breaking up the fallow ground; in scattering the good seed far and wide, and now they are cheered by unmistakable signs of a rich approaching harvest. Their employments and their labors are varied and manifold, but all tending to the one great object of the salvation of lost men.

At the two Stations six street chapels are open daily, in which the missionaries and three native preachers hold daily service from one to three hours. Three boarding schools of 30 pupils each are kept in active operation, whilst there are nine day schools, embracing 178 pupils, all of whom are receiving thorough Christian instruction from day to day. The four missionaries spend about one month each year in evangelistic labors in the surrounding country and in circulating religious books and tracts. The ladies of the mission visit the schools and the parents of the children from day to day, as they have strength to do so. Besides these labors the members of the two missions have prepared as many as seven different books, viz: Two Catechisms, a Treatise on the Soul, an Arithmetic, Peep of Day, a Sabbath School Hymn Book, a translation of the Book of Daniel, whilst the four Gospels and the Acts are now passing through the press. The last mentioned has been prepared by Rev. John W. Davis, of the Soochow Mission; the hymn book by Rev. Ben. Helm; the Treatise on the Soul, the Peep of Day and some others by Miss Safford of the same mission. Schools, chapel services, daily visits to the Chinese women and itinerating labors are all carried on at both of these stations. There are connected with the two stations two organized churches, embracing thirty-two native members in all.

From this brief statement of facts, it will be readily seen that our missionary brethren have not only been actively and laboriously engaged in their work, but that a most important footing has been gained, and, that if these labors are followed up in reliance upon the blessing of God, the time is not distant when they will be permitted to reap a rich harvest in the conversion of precious souls. They need and they expect the sympathies, the prayers and the aid of God's people whom they have left behind, and it is earnestly hoped that in this most reasonable expectation they shall not be disappointed.—The Missionary.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

FOREIGN.

Gleaned from exchanges:

It is reported that the Jews in the Don Cossack territory have received notice to leave the country within two years.

The Examiner says: "We learn from St. Petersburgh that the Holy Synod is engaged examining a proposal of the Metropolitan of Moscow for establishing a Russo-Greek bishopric in Japan."

The rich Englishman, Thomas Holloway, is erecting, at his own expense, an institution for the higher education of girls. The building alone, which has been begun, is to cost $1,385,000; it is 410 feet in length.

It is stated that the late Rev. Dr. J. P. Thompson's chief purpose in fixing his residence at Berlin was to write a great book on Moses, to which all his studies in Egyptology were subsidiary; but it is feared that he was not able to complete his task.

The Parsees of Sholapore have invoked the aid of the Sun on behalf of the British arms in Afghanistan. With this object in view what is known in the Zoroastrian religion as the Japan ceremony was performed for six days in the local fire-temple.

Alarmed at the position of affairs in Belgium, the Pope will despatch Monsignr Pallotti as Nuncio to Brussels, with special instructions to the Belgium bishops to adopt a more conciliatory attitude in their present conflict with the State.

The Bishop of Gibraltar has just been visiting the congregations in South Russia belonging to his diocese. At Odessa he is said to have expressed a wish that some of the rites and ceremonies of the Russian Church might be adopted by the Anglican establishment.

Cardinal Nina, overworked and fatigued, has asked permission to resign his office of Pontifical Secretary of State. The Pope has emphatically refused to accept his resignation, but has accompanied his reply with warm encomiums on the services he has rendered.

The new schools of St. Wilfred, which, with other buildings, have been erected by the Duke of Norfolk at Sheffield, at a cost of £10,000, have been opened by the Roman Catholic Bishop of Leeds. The noble Duke intends also to erect a church close to the schools on a scale of considerable magnificence.

John Dunn's declaration against Christianity has caused universal disgust and indignation. There are nine deserted missionary stations in Dunn's territory, which is that nearest the Natal frontier. The Swedish Bishops Schroeder and Ofteboro have been advised by their counsels to proceed with building operations, throwing upon Dunn the responsibility of forcibly ejecting them—if he dares.

According to a Constantinople despatch, Sir Austen Layard is endeavoring to obtain the release of Hodja Ahmed Noureddin, who is under arrest for having assisted a Protestant clergyman to translate certain religious works into the Turkish language. The tribunal by which he is to be tried has, it is stated, already been appointed, and the Constantinople papers say he will be condemned either to death or fifteen years hard labor.

For three years past there has been preaching to Hindoo converted natives in English. Rev. W. Milne says: "There are more than 15,000 educated natives in Calcutta who understand English perfectly, and it is thought the Gospel should now be preached to them in the same simple, full, and direct way that it is preached to those who are nominally Christians."

Stanly calls the great river which he is ascending into the heart of Africa "the Livingstone." He has a company of fifteen Europeans and about two hundred native Africans. His instructions are in a religious spirit, though not given by a religious society.

The Home at Constantinople, under the charge of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, is overrun with applications to such an extent that the teachers have given up one of their parlors for a dormitory. This year for the first time Turkish girls have entered the institution.

An English exchange says: The Hon. and Rev. Mr. Petre is a priest, and will on his father's death succeed to the earldom. He will be the first priest who has sat in the English House of Lord since the days of Queen Elizabeth.

More persons were added to the mission churches of the American Board in 1878 than in any other year since the great revival in the Sandwich Islands. Thirteen new churches were organized, and 2,000 members added.

A new "Mortara case" is reported from Turin—this time a girl. The daughter of a Jew has been induced to enter a convent and kept there in spite of the earnest endeavors by her friends to secure her escape.

The Roman papers publish the Latin text of a letter addressed by Leo XIII. to Cardinal di Luca on the subject of the philosophy of St. Thomas. The Pope says that inasmuch as the city of Rome is the cathedral of the supreme Pontiff, and as youth from all countries flock to it for instruction, it should excel all others in its teaching, and therefore an academy should be founded in Rome under the patronage of St. Thomas Aquinas, which should be devoted to illustrating and explaining his works, to demonstrating the force and reasoning of his sentences, to propagating his salutary doctrines, and preventing the diffusion of gross error. He concludes by confiding to Cardinal di Luca the task of drawing up for his approval and authorization a plan which shall respond to his intention.

The death of the Rev. Nicholas Armstrong, which took place at Albany Heath last week, marks as nearly as possible the last stage of what some may regard as a crisis in the creed of the "Catholic Apostolic Church," known as "Irvingites." Mr. Armstrong was the last but one survivor of the apostolic brotherhood, the Apostle of England, Mr. John Bates Curdale, having predeceased him in July, 1877. A surpassing interest attaches to the sole remaining Apostle, for a belief had prevailed that the second coming of Christ would take place before the last of the band of Apostles had passed away. As it is nearly fifty years since the "resuscitation" of the apostolate, it will be seen that within a very short period, to be measured by the duration of a single and now protracted life, either a momentous event is to be realized or an article of Irvingite belief has to be exploded or modified.

WILMINGTON, N. C.:

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 12, 1879.

WHAT IS THE MATTER?

NO. III.

Unavoidable delay has occurred in our discussion of this most important subject. Meanwhile the Baptist Convention has met and the report of their Board of State Missions shows their work advancing and their church growing and prospering in every section of the State. When the Methodist Conference shall meet, a similar exhibit will be made.

We are not envious at the prosperity of these churches. But we do long to see our own church moving with equal energy and success. We therefore ask again the attention of all our people and especially of all who bear rule in the Church.

Another defect in our methods of work is to be found in what may be called the total lack of any

RESERVE FORCE.

An illustration will more plainly show our meaning. A pastor finds in his congregation such a state of things as leads him to believe that a "protracted meeting" would result in revival and increase in the church. But his hands are full. Such a meeting involves the preaching of eight, ten, or more sermons, on certain special points of divine truth. He has no such sermons on hand, and he has no time to prepare them. He sends for help and fails to get it. Repeated efforts result only in failure. And after awhile he sees the prospect which did look so fair, pass away. Some neighboring church of another denomination holds a series of services, such as he desired to hold, and the fruit of his long labor is gathered by others. Now the reserve force of which we speak would in this case furnish the needed help. Reasons for the establishment of such a reserve have been found in the experience of all who have ever attempted to work where churches and ministers are few in number. A controlling reason is that but a small number of men have been endowed with gifts such as are needed for instructing the people, and also with gifts such as are needed for awakening the conscience and leading it to an immediate decision. More briefly, there are but few preachers who are both instructive and awakening. These gifts are not incompatible. Some men have both in a high degree. But most men have only one.

Now where this is the case there is an urgent call for some one to supplement the deficiency. We have seen the sad results of neglecting to meet this want, in one congregation after another, till we feel confident that there is hardly a pastor in our Synod who has not observed it, and but few of our churches that have not lost heavily by it.

In the Methodist Church this reserve force is provided by the Presiding Elder, whose field of labor covers the fields of several other ministers in charge of circuits and stations. To this reserve may be added the local preachers of the various charges. Of these two classes it may be said that they are often men of high qualities, sometimes of commanding abilities. And where they are not, they can at any rate fill for one or two Sabbaths the place of one whose gifts are suited to meet the crisis which calls for the use of the reserve. Thus, every emergency—whether of promise or of danger—can be met, and that by men who ought to be specially qualified to meet it.

In the Baptist Church there is not so full provision made to meet emergent needs, and they as well as we sometimes suffer from the lack of it. But their evangelists traveling among their churches, and the much larger number of their ministers enables them to make special provisions far more effectually and frequently than we can.

AND IT PAYS.

We know the objection will arise, "But it is impossible for us to do what is here required." We are not sure of that. "The slothful man saith there is a lion in the path." If one is there he is in the "King's highway" where he has no right to be and it is our business to put him out.

This may suggest another of our troubles. Many of our people, and perhaps all of our pastors, have been troubled with cases of spurious conversion and have at least seen what they regarded as spurious revivals. We suppose there will be no question raised as to the injury done by these counterfeits wherever they appear. But one form of the injury is so striking that it deserves a special notice. It comes from a natural re-action against the evils noted, and may be described as caution degenerated into suspiciousness. Unquestionably there has been produced in the minds of many a which has not failed to do mischief. It is not a little singular that such distrust ever obtained a foot-hold in a Church which makes the divine sovereignty a cardinal point of its doctrine. And it is still more singular that it should ever have been able even for an instant to obtain rest for the sole of its foot in a Church with a history such as ours has. And yet more is it remarkable that any Christian should ever seem to be less alive to the dangers of stagnation, than to the fancied perils of revival.

We use the expression "fancied perils," because we are sure that the very caution which produces the fear would avoid the dangers which under other circumstances become real. Now what is the effect of this distrust? In some cases, at least, it has led to a careful repression of any unusual manifestation of interest, lest an outbreak of "wild-fire" should occur; and this repression has too often repressed the interest as well as the expression thereof. There is a terror resulting from over-caution that is as dangerous as that which is the child of over-confidence. And we earnestly ask our brethren to consider whether in avoiding the one they have not fallen upon the other.

There is only one other defect to which we now have time to refer. In our judgment it is one of high importance. Indeed, if it is a defect at all, its very nature makes it a momentous one. We suggest it, in a spirit of the profoundest deference, to the candid judgment of our ministerial brethren. To us it seems that there is too little of the ethics of religious thought in the ordinary preaching of our ministers. We believe that our people need to be more fully instructed in the matter of Christian practice and duty; in the character, malignity, and effect of sins as well as of sin; in their honest obligations to God and to their fellow men. We believe that the particulars of morality as well as its foundation, ought to be expounded; that the precepts of the law as well as its authority, and its connections ought to be explained and applied to the conscience. We are not unaware of the use that is made of the proposition that "doctrine is in order to godliness." We assent to the statement, and ask does not doctrine concern itself with the law?

Is not the neglect of this teaching one explanation of the shallow convictions of sin, and of the too easily satisfied consciences, of which we hear so much complaint? Let these subjects be generally and publicly understood and then it will be held that he who by extravagant living deprives himself of the power to pay his honest debts is a cheat, and he who idly takes up a false and injurious report against his neighbor is a slanderer and a liar, even though he repeat the story precisely as he heard it. And with such principles well and fairly understood the discipline of the Church would conform more fully to the Word of God; the scandal and offense of inconsistent living would be in a measure put away, and spurious conversions would be less frequent because enlightened consciences would refuse the false peace that comes not from the Spirit of God.

We hope to return to this subject at an early day.

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

We are requested by the Stated Clerk of Synod to say that as the official lists of elders and deacons will be the last matter placed in the hands of the printer (in the issue of the next minutes of Synod) if any church or session has failed as yet to send the list asked for, to the stated clerk of the Presbytery to which such church belongs, if it will at once respond to this call, it will yet be in time. Such reports must reach the stated clerks of Presbyteries before the 18th of November.

Let every church in the Synod, that has neglected to do this little thing, send at once to the Stated Clerk of the Presbytery in which it is, a correct list of the elders and deacons, with their respective postoffices. Be careful as to the initials and the spelling of the names, and state who is the clerk of the session.

The Richmond Christian Advocate says:

"Sometimes a church, like a monitor, has a revolving turret—"articles" facing several ways—sweeping the sea at all points. Mr. Gladstone gives the Establishment of England the credit of "a Popish Liturgy, a Calvanistic creed, and an Armenian clergy."

Spain and Portugal are close neighbors, yet the latter is far in advance of the former in the matter of religious liberty. It is now more than a year since the King of Portugal and his Cabinet signed a decree, which went into effect at the beginning of the present year, for the civil registration of the births, deaths and marriages of the Protestants of the kingdom. This signifies that these Protestants are freed from all penalties and disabilities on account of religion. Better this, an equal chance before the intelligence of a responsible people, than a summary appeal to the cruelty of the Inquisition.—Southern Christian Advocate.

The New York Synod makes a good showing on benevolent work. The contributions for the past year aggregate $263,000, an excess of $41,000 over the previous year. The New York Presbytery gave upward of $232,000, an average of $13 per member. The average in the Synod is $8.

Professor Tyndall in the last number of the Fortnightly Review says:

"If asked whether science has solved, or is likely in our day to solve, the problem of the universe, I must shake my head in doubt. Behind, and above and around us the real mystery of the universe lies unsolved, and, as far as we are concerned, is incapable of solution. The problem of the connection of body and soul is as insoluble in its modern form as it was in the pre-historic ages.

"There ought to be a clear distinction made between science in the state of hypothesis and science in the state of fact.

"And inasmuch as it is still in its hypothetical stage, the ban of exclusion ought to fall upon the theory of evolution.

"After speaking of the theory of evolution applied to the primitive condition of matter, as belonging to the dim twilight of conjecture, the certainty of experimental inquiry is here shut out.

"Those who hold the doctrine of evolution are by no means ignorant of the uncertainty of their data, and they only yield to it a provisional assent.

"In reply to your question, they will frankly admit their inability to point to any satisfactory experimental proof that life can be developed, save from demonstrable antecedent life.

"I share Virchow's opinion that the theory of evolution in its complete form involves the assumption that, at some period or other of the earth's history, there occurred what would be now called spontaneous generation. I agree with him that the proofs of it are still wanting.

"I hold with Virchow that the failures have been lamentable, that the doctrine is utterly discredited."

This is simply a clear, outspoken, truthful confession that those who profess to have found light that will supersede the revelation of God are yet hopelessly in the dark.

The Covenant of Philadelphia is a spicy little sheet. It is a Reformed Episcopal advocate, and here is the way it flings into the Churchman:

"The Churchman says:

"'The idea of sect is the formation of a body of believers who are like-minded; there is no object in seeking any others.'"

"Now it occurs to us that St. Paul had something of that idea? He even made so much account of it, as to write to the Philippians, 'Fulfil ye my joy, that ye be like-minded, having the same love, being of one accord, of one mind.'—Phil. ii: 3.

"Why, that's the very idea of sect"—isn't it? Nay, he went so far as to pray: 'Now the God of patience and consolation, grant you to be like-minded one toward another, according to Jesus Christ!"—Rom. xv: 2.'

"Manifestly, St. Paul wasn't much of a Churchman—was he? And we, of 'the sects,' are in pretty good company, after all!"

Again:

"'Is there any body of believers in the land which does feel the stress of a church position? Certainly, the claim of apostolic succession implies a doing of apostolic works.'—The Churchman.

"Certainly it does. And the world has about settled down to the conclusion that the "doing of apostolic works" is, by all odds, the best "apostolic succession." The Apostles' spirit will prove the apostolic ministry; and without that spirit, all claims to that ministry are a sham and an offence.

"'If I do not the works of My Father, believe me not.'"

Great Britain finds herself compelled not only to conquer Afghanistan, but to govern it. A protectorate is a necessity. By the way, it is said that Russia will seize Northern Afghanistan if the new Parliament follows the Beaconsfield policy."

Mr. J. B. Gill has consented to act as agent for this paper at Statesville, N. C. He may be found at the postoffice, and we will be greatly obliged to any persons in Statesville or the vicinity who may pay any arrears due, who will subscribe through his agency, or who will aid him in procuring new subscriptions.

We make no reference to any political party of the past, present or to come, for it will be hey-day with us when we enter the realm of of politics; but when we hear politicians crying themselves hoarse for a stable government, we cannot refrain from asking: Should any government be stable if it be not founded on principles of equity and right? We answer, Nay.

Our readers may have heard much nonsense about the undertaking of a half crazy friar to find the chariot wheels of Pharaoh in the Red Sea. On this subject we clip from the Christian at Work: "The Abbe Meigne of Paris wants 300,000 francs as capital with which to start an expedition in search of the remains of Pharaoh's army. His object is not only to pick up such valuables as may be at the bottom of the Red Sea, but, by finding the whole or any part of the Egyptian host, to demonstrate the truth of that part of the Bible which tells of their destruction. The Abbe has a heavy undertaking before him. Apart from the fact that nobody knows where Pharaoh's host went down, there also remain the hypotheses that an impenetrable strata of sand overlies the deceased Egyptians, or that men and beasts were driven hither and yon by wind and wave, and so far from resting in the precise spot where the floods covered them; and are in a state of infinitesimal saline solution, which even a thousand-power microscope would fail to reveal. So the Abbe Meigne's prospects of discovering any part of those "six hundred chosen chariots, and all the chariots of Egypt, and captains over every one of them," is about as slim as that of discovering a pair of Abraham's cast-away sandals. All of which suggests the question, Where did the Israelites cross the Red Sea? Three or four theories are prevalent. The Arabs locate the Exodus several miles south of Suez, between the promontory of Atakah and Ayun Musa, where the Red Sea is about ten miles wide. This view is strengthened by the Bible reference to the walls of water on both sides of the army, but, as Dr. Schaff says, "it is impossible that 600,000 armed men, with women and children, and their herds of cattle, could have crossed such a distance in one night without a prodigious accumulation of miracles." Another theory places the crossing at the head of the gulf, a little north of Suez. Here is a shoal channel, four miles long and less than a half mile wide, in which there are several islands and sandbanks, bare at low water. The Israelites might easily have crossed here; indeed, so strong is the tide that a strong east wind—such as we are told Jehovah caused "to blow all night"—would have made the walls of water of which the Bible speaks. This locality is generally favored by modern biblical critics, Right here the reader will recall the fact that it was here that Napoleon, deceived by the tidal wave, attempted to cross in 1799, and, in his own words, nearly became a second Pharaoh. As we have said, it is not likely any of the rusty old chariots, nor so much as a broken axle or harness buckle, will ever be brought to light. Possibly some papyrus may be found with a private record of the wonderful event. But the search for this would be about as uncertain as the hunt after the precious stones that Aaron wore in his breastplate."

The secular papers are having a happy time over the plagiarism of Dr. Lorimer of Chicago. We don't object, for he deserves it all, but the Christian at Work has assuredly hit the mark in the following: "And now we suggest to the Doctor, if the war upon him goes much further, to have himself put on trial before some ecclesiastical tribunal. Then see how quickly the tide will turn in his favor! There is nothing like an ecclesiastical trial to insure one permanent popularity and a big share of public sympathy. It was never known to fail."

The notorious D. W. Bennett, confined in the penitentiary for circulating obscene matter through the mails, was a shining light in the National Liberal party. Since his imprisonment, and failure to get a pardon from the President, his former friends and supporters are turning against him. Another prominent character in this infidel set who propose to elevate the universal brotherhood of man above the plane of Christianity is one Rawson, secretary of the National Liberal League. This elegant type of superior morals has just been divorced from his wife for bigamy, of which his victim was not aware at the time of marriage. On his trial it was proved that he had served a term in the New Jersey penitentiary for larceny. Elisur Wright, president of the League, declares that there is no justification for an attack on the league because of the characters of these men; that the principles of the league are correct, notwithstanding the wickedness of its prominent supporters. A style of logic this, that they do not allow, for the Christian Church. But one cannot, on seeing this early fruitage of evil, ask what will be the harvest of full maturity.

The Abstract! Then the Reports! We love to do the Synod's bidding, and our Presbyterian people must know what is going on in the bounds of this great Synod. There is much to be thankful for, and to rejoice over. There is much, alas! to make us hang our heads with shame. "The man," says Sidney Smith, "is on the high road to improvement who sees wherein he comes short and feels sorry for it." Some day, when we recover from the perusal of these long (may we say dry?) documents, and dreary and valuable figures, with which the Stated Clerk and the Synod has deluged us, we shall take a quieter ramble through the field and note what we survey. The metaphors of the above are somewhat mixed, but the idea is doubtless understood. We mean that after awhile we hope to say something about what is told us in these papers. Meanwhile let them be read.

NEWS NOTES.

We specially invite news from all quarters for this column.

ORDINATION.

At a called meeting of Montgomery Presbytery, held at Lynchburg, Va., on the 28th of October, the Rev. W. B. Arrowood was ordained that he may become pastor over the churches of Hoge's Chapel, Pearisburg, and Walker's Creek, Giles county, Va. A committee was appointed for his installation, to take place on the 21st, 22nd and 23rd of November, Rev. W. W. Dinwiddie to preach the sermons and Rev. S. R. Preston to deliver the charges.

Dr. C. N. Hutchinson, for many years a ruling elder in Sharon church, Mecklenburg Presbytery, died at his home on the 7th inst. He had been in failing health for some years. He was an earnest and efficient church officer.

One person was added to the Presbyterian church at Carthage, and one by certificate, recently. Much interest has been manifested by the congregation in the preaching of Rev. M. McQueen, the pastor, and of Rev. David Fairley, by whom he was assisted.

MECKLENBURG PRESBYTERY.

CRAB TREE, HAYWOOD COUNTY, N. C., October 27, 1879.

MR. EDITOR:

Dear Brother:—We held our Sacramental meeting yesterday, the fourth Sabbath of October, in Waynesville. There was preaching Saturday, Saturday night, and also on Sabbath before the Sacrament. And a pleasant season it was. The session had the pleasure of receiving six persons to the communion of the church, three by letter and three by examination. Two of the candidates received the Sacrament of baptism, after the example of Saul, of Tarsus; "having stood up, they were baptized." (Greek Testament.) It was a pleasant sight to see a young maiden in the morning of life, as well as an aged matron, of nearly or quite 70 summers, consecrating themselves to the service of their Saviour. Thanks to the Great Head of the Church for mercy drops, and to the riches of His grace be all the praise. D. T. TOWLES.

Rev. W. A. Gregg writes, Nov. 6th:

"The congregation of Hopewell church, Harmony Presbytery, have invited Licentiate E. Geddings Smith, of the same Presbytery, to supply their pulpit, with a view to his becoming their pastor."

COVINGTON, Tenn., Nov. 5.

Mr. Editor: After this date my address will be Memphis, Tenn. We have seventy students enrolled, and will have more.

I frequently get money orders for the cause of Education. All money for this cause should be sent to our Treasurer, G. W. MacRae, 300 Front street, Memphis, Tenn.

Fraternally, E. M. RICHARDSON,

TO STATED CLERKS.

It will be remembered that when the Clerk read the Statistical report on the floor of Synod in Statesville, objection was made to the form as conveying an erroneous impression as to the composition of a presbytery. Our good brother Lacy, the Clerk, seemed to think the objection was well taken, and requested to be referred to the record, chapter, page, &c. But the oldest Clerk in the Synod rose and said he had served in this capacity for many long years and had always used the form objected to, and would continue to do so until better advised. Of course such a speech would move all objections, and the Synod reported the General Assembly that it consists of five presbyteries, and that these presbyteries consist of so many ministers, having under their care so many churches, &c.

It is the last clause that I object to. Churches (or sessions) are parts of Presbytery. Why say they are under care of ministers, as if ministers only constituted Presbytery? A church session—every session—belongs as much to a presbytery as a minister, and when the name of a church is enrolled its representatives are just as much members of Presbytery as a minister is when his name is enrolled. Indeed, one presbytery in our connection only calls the roll of churches when it organizes, and enrolls the minister and elder representing as members, giving every session its right to be represented by a minister and elder.

This matter was brought to the attention of the General Assembly, and the Publication Committee was instructed to correct the blank forms for presbyterial reports, and I respectfully refer my brethren to the Minutes of the General Assembly of 1875, St. Louis, where they will find (pages 10 and 20, printed minutes,) the following record:

"Overture No. 15 is from the Presbytery of Macon, calling attention to the fact that the phraseology of the Presbyterial Reports, issued in blank under the direction of the Assembly, conveys an erroneous impression as to the composition of a presbytery, and requests that the defect be corrected.

"The committee recommend that the Assembly order the substitution of the following form for that now employed, viz:

"The Presbytery of —— reports that it comprises — ministers and — churches, and has under its care — licentiates and candidates."

Two brethren from the Synod of North Carolina served on the Committee of Bills and Overtures in the Assembly of 1875, which recommended and secured this change, and I call on these brethren (Rev. H. G. Hill and Prof. W. J. Martin) to help me in the difficult matter of correcting the errors of my most respected fellow servants—the Stated Clerks of the North Carolina Presbyteries.

PURGE THE ROLLS.

We often hear complaints that injustice is done churches in the comparison of their substantial offerings with those of other churches, because their recorded membership is not correct.

The remedy is with the sessions. Let them purge the rolls. It is the duty of the session to "keep a fair record of baptisms, of those admitted to the Lord's table, of non-communicating members, and of the deaths and dismissions of church members." If the church membership be not correctly reported, it is the fault of the session. Often the registers have been kept in so slip-shod a fashion that members dead and dismissed have been retained on the rolls. Still, under the old book, there was good ground of complaint, inasmuch as sessions were required to report non-resident members. All this is remedied by the new book, and this brief notice is meant to call attention to its provisions.

In the first place, "When a church member or officer shall remove his residence beyond the bounds of the court to whose jurisdiction he belongs into the bounds of another, if he shall neglect for twelve months, without satisfactory reasons given to both these courts, to transfer his ecclesiastical relations, the court whose bounds he has left shall be required to transfer them. And should that court neglect this duty the one into whose bounds he has removed shall assume jurisdiction, giving due notice to the other body." Rules of Discipline, chap. xv., sec. 2.

And again: "If the residence of a communicating member be unknown for three years, shall be retired upon a separate roll until he shall reappear and give satisfaction, of which due record shall be made." Ibid, sec. 4.

It remains now for the sessions to carry out these provisions of the new law in time for the spring reports and the next General Assembly.

WHAT ARE WE DOING FOR OUR CHURCH PAPER?

The Raleigh Christian Advocate states that within the last twelve months, after dropping 700 old subscribers for "deliquency," its list has been increased 1,200, showing 1,900 more subscribers obtained in that short interval—certainly very surprising and gratifying results, and, I suppose, far outstripping any other religious paper in the State. I wish I knew how this result was accomplished. Has it been on account of some great improvements made in the subject matter and methods of conducting the paper? Perhaps there may be something in this, but it seems to me there is more in the following explanation: Every minister belonging to the Methodist Church in North Carolina, I suppose, is an agent for the Advocate, and most of them are active agents, and they make it a point as they go from house to house to urge upon the people the necessity of subscribing for "their own Church paper." Now, there have been religious awakenings all over the State, and quite a number have been added to the Church. I venture to say that most of them have already been instructed as to their obligations to the paper, and that very many of them have sent on their names to the Advocate. Without meaning to reflect at all upon the excellency of that paper, we believe that its subscription list has been swelled by the efficiency of its agents, and especially its ministerial agents.

Now for my reasons for making the above reference: At the late meeting of Synod I met the editor of our Church paper, the N. C. PRESBYTERIAN. I listened with pleasure to his remarks, and the flattering resolutions adopted in indorsement of the paper, and I saw with much pleasure his warm reception, and I have no doubt many promises were made in his favor. But I have seen this done over and over again for years, and still I know the subscription list is very much smaller than it ought to be, when we remember the real merit of the paper and the number of Presbyterians in the State. I would liked to have asked Bro. McLaurin how many of that Synod acted as interested agents for the paper. I did ask some questions from those of the brethren with whom I was brought into contact, and I was surprised to meet with some who did not even take the N. C. P. but encouraged papers published in other States. Now I never heard of a Methodist minister doing this, and I submit that, if many of them were to do so, the list of the Advocate would soon fall off. I claim that the Church paper is a great aid to the minister, that our own paper is as well if not better suited to the wants of our people than any that is published, and that our first obligations in that respect are unto that paper; and I believe that if every Presbyterian minister in the State were to exert himself to enlighten his people as to their duty, making it a point to bring the matter before them, and either act himself or have some efficient man in his congregation appointed agent, we too would find the subscription list of our paper rapidly increasing. Brethren, let us try the experiment.

MINISTER.

EDUCATION.

To the Chairmen of the Presbyterial Committees of Education:

Please bear in mind that application for aid to students must be made annually. The fact that a student was on our list last year makes no difference. If he wishes aid this year, application must be made by the Chairman of Education in his Presbytery. Brethren will also please state whether the student is in College, or in the Seminary. The undersigned has authority from the Committee to receive all students as beneficiaries for whom application is made in the regular way.

My postoffice address at present is Covington, Tenn., but letters addressed to me at Memphis will be forwarded. Quite a number of letters on the subject of Education have been addressed to Rev. Dr. Waddel, the former Secretary. Brethren will bear in mind that there has been a change of Secretaries.

E. M. RICHARDSON,
Secretary of Education.

PRESBYTERIAL MEETINGS.

Presbytery of Enoree met on the 16th ult. Licentiate H. C. Fennell was received from Bethel Presbytery and order was taken to ordain him and install him pastor of Liberty Springs for half his time.

Presbytery of Mississippi. Rev. J. W. Kerr was received from the Presbytery of Tuskaloosa, and Rev. G. S. Boudebush from the Presbytery of Louisville. Mr. A. Hall Fant was received as a candidate for the Gospel ministry. A very favorable report of the standing and prospects of G. W. Brown, colored candidate for the ministry, was made.

Presbytery of South Carolina. A committee was appointed to organize a church at Flat Rock, in Oconee county, if the way be clear. Rev. E. P. Davis was elected Presbyterial Sabbath school Superintendent.

Presbytery of St. Johns. An overture to the Synod of Georgia relative to the formation of a Synod of Florida was adopted. Petitions from persons residing at Bereford and Akron, praying for the organization of churches at each of these places, were granted. Rev. T. D. Latimer, of the Presbytery of Eastern Texas, was continued an evangelist of the Presbytery of St. John's.

Presbytery of Louisiana. The organization of Grace church was reported. J. H. McWharton is the elder and R. H. Carruth deacon.

At an adjourned meeting of the Presbytery of Missouri Rev. W. B. Y. Wilkie was received from Presbytery of St. Louis. A call from Columbia church was placed in his hands and accepted. Mr. J. H. Gauss was taken under care as a candidate for the ministry.

Presbytery of South Alabama. Vine Hill church was reported as organized.

Presbytery of Ouachita met October 18th. Rev. E. M. Monroe was elected moderator. Prescott and Shady Grove churches were enrolled. A call for services of Rev. W. T. Howison to Hope church for one half his time was placed in his hands, and he retains until spring meeting of Presbyterry.

For the N. C. Presbyterian.

Presbytery of Central Texas met at Robinson Oct. 23. Present, 13 ministers and 15 ruling elders. Rev. R. M. Tuttle was received from the Presbytery of Paducah. Rev. H. Moseley was elected evangelist of the Presbytery to make his headquarters at Comanche. The churches of Carolina and Blue Ridge received permission to employ Rev. R. M. Loughbridge till the next meeting. Licentiates Wm. Boyd and A. H. P. McCurdy were given leave to labor within the Presbytery. The name of the Robinsonville church was changed to Robinson. Committees previously appointed to organize churches were continued, and one was appointed to organize, if the way be clear, at Perry Station, in Falls county. A committee was appointed to settle with the depositary the affairs of the depository at Waxahatchie, so far as this Presbytery is concerned. For the purpose of securing more attention to the benevolent operations of the Church and more general contributions, the churches were directed to hold a meeting in reference to each object at some convenient time before the regular collection therefor, at which the pastor, or some one appointed by him, or by the session, shall make an address on the subject. The narratives of the state of religion were generally favorable, though only 3 churches reported revivals. The additions to these three numbered 60. The next meeting is to be at Rockdale, on Thursday before the full moon in April next. L. TENNEY, S. C.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

Scribner & Co. send vol. viii. of Scribner's Monthly, containing the monthly issues from May to October, 1879. Once a month for the past six months we have brought Scribner's Monthly to the notice of our subscribers, sometimes approvingly, sometimes otherwise. This volume is handsomely bound in green cloth and contains 952 octavo pages and 400 wood engravings.

St. Nicholas we have always commended. Vol. vi., Nov. 1878 to Nov. 1879, is at hand. More fancifully bound than Scribner, but more to suit the young people, probably.

The Preacher and Homiletic Monthly is in. A very good number of a very good magazine. $2 50 per annum. Address Religious Newspaper Agency, New York.

The Fortnightly Review for October, 1879. $2 25 per annum or 20 cents a number. Geo. Munroe, publisher, 17 to 27 Vandewater st., New York. The cheap republication in America of this valuable English Review on excellent type contains: South Africa Once More, by J. A. Froude; The Channel Islands, G. S. Lefevre, M. P., and many other excellent articles.

The Westminster Question Book. International Series for 1880. A manual for teachers and older scholars. Presbyterian Board of Publication, Philadelphia. This little handbook seems capitally arranged, with a variety of maps and helps, and with the Shorter Catechism taken up in each lesson.

The Mohammedan Missionary Problem: By the Rev. Henry H. Jessup, D. D., for 24 years missionary to Syria. 1879. Presbyterian Board of Publication, Philadelphia. 138 pp., flexible cloth. Dr. Jessup was the Moderator of the last Northern General Assembly, in May, at Saratoga. He there delivered a remarkable discourse, which, at the earnest request of many, has been rewritten and enlarged, and published as above.

Old Faiths in New Light: By Newman Smyth, author of "The Religious Feeling." 12mo. 391 pp. Charles Scribner's Sons, New York. 1879. This is a reverent essay towards formulating our "ultimate philosophy" in the light of science and unshaken consciousness, that shall harmonize all questionings. In many ways old forms of divine truth have been discredited. Mr. Smyth, passing through agitations and doubts of the day, here maintains the faith—the heritage of his Christian childhood as taught by honored parents. He says: "I would read the old faiths, which I still believe, in the light of modern thought, to which I cannot be blind; I would help others, if possible, to walk still in the old ways which prophets and apostles have trod, but in the light of to-day." Dorner, Ewald and Lotze lead him, while mindful of Draper, Hegel, Kuenen, Oehler, Huxley, Vogt, Buchner and others who are pioneers in scientific and biblical studies. He endeavors to marshal the results of the researches of specialists under one leading idea, and to show how, on the scientific theory of development, the Bible—all truth—has grown up under healthy and perfect law; under the light and necessity of human nature and history on one hand, and under the manifest, co-ordinating, supernatural guidance and inspiration on the other. Though sometimes he may admit almost too much, yet he writes clearly, honestly and vigorously, opens new lines of thought and may help many troubled souls out of the thickets of speculative and scientific doubt. It is right to meet infidelity thus, yet above all, lighten the old, precious faith in the clear light of the Holy Spirit.

The first Presbyterian church in Houston, on 27th ultimo, unanimously extended a call to Rev. Dr. R. K. Smoot, of Austin. Dr. Smoot is called to succeed Rev. J. H. McNeilly, whose pastoral relation with the church was recently dissolved. Item from Texas Presbyterian.

Changes of Postfiices.—Rev. W. H. Vernor, evangelist of Presbytery of Brazos, from Velasco, Texas, to Columbia, in same State; Rev. O. B. Caldwell, from Hempstead to Lancaster, Dallas county, Texas; Rev. J. K. Hitner, from Mayslick to Mayesville, Ky.

The postoffice address of Rev. C. M. Howard is at Oldtown, Grayson county, Va.

At Amelia C. H., Va., a protracted meeting was held recently. About twenty have expressed a hope in Christ, and others are still concerned. We received fourteen into our full communion on Sabbath before last.—G., in Central Presbyterian.

Rev. Dr. R. G. Brank has tendered his resignation of the Central Presbyterian church of St. Louis.

Rev. Dr. J. A. LeFevre, of Baltimore, is recovering from a spell of sickness.

Rev. J. N. McCain is supplying the church at Lavacca, Texas. Two members were received into the church by profession on the second Sabbath in October.

Licentiate B. F. Thompson, through the Presbytery of Nashville, has received calls from Madison and Hendersonville churches.

Rev. J. N. McCain, of the Presbytery of Western Texas, writes us that Texana church has received sixteen members within just six months of the present year, and none of them were raised in connection with the branch of the Church with which they united.—Christian Observer.

A fine church building for the Presbyterian congregation of Eminence, Ky., is being erected. A correspondent of the Louisville Courier-Journal says it does great credit to the congregation constructing it; it would do credit to a large city. Our church is indebted to the faithful labors of Rev. William Irvine, of Christiansburg, who has been preaching at Eminence, as well as to the large hearted Presbyterians of the place, a small band but a liberal band, for the beautiful church building.

Rev. Dr. J. T. Hendrick has been visiting the church at Columbus, and preaching. At a recent communion ten persons were received on profession, and there was deep religious feeling throughout. They want a minister—can pay about $600.

Rev. J. M. Caldwell, of Carrollton, Miss., was seriously injured recently by being thrown from his buggy. His left hip joint was dislocated and the bone fractured.

"Last Sunday evening, the colored Presbyterians of this city took initiatory steps towards organizing a colored Presbyterian church, by encouragement and sanction of the Tuscaloosa Presbytery. This move has been delayed from the want of at least a partially educated ministry; but as this difficulty is being met by the practical success of the Institute for Training Colored ministers, the organization of a separate church seems to be the next step in order. We learn that Mr. Rankin, the Assembly's Professor, is the right man in the right place; and that the students under him are making commendable progress. The colored people being thrown on their own resources, the most important step in their elevation is the school room and educated ministry; and in this every true Christian patriot can but wish them success."—Tuscaloosa Gazette, Oct. 30.

Mr. J. J. Chisholm, on Oct. 19th, ult., by the Presbytery of Transylvania, was ordained to the full work of the Gospel ministry, and at the same time installed pastor of the Presbyterian church at Harrodsburg, Ky.

A protracted meeting was held in the church at Decherd, Tenn., beginning on the second Sabbath in September, which resulted in greatly reviving the church. The Rev. Alexander Cowan assisted the Rev. W. Bryce Thompson, the pastor, and preached twice a day during the week. The result of his faithful labors was an addition of eleven members to the church. The Rev. Harry Wheless, a student of Vanderbilt University, afterwards preached for the pastor on two Sabbaths, and four others professed faith in Christ. On Sabbath, October 26th, seven were admitted to membership in the church; making eighteen in all that have been received since the special services began, last month—fifteen upon profession and three upon certificate.—Christian Observer.

Rev. E. M. Yantis has resigned the charge of the Barnesville, Bethel, and Lawson churches. His correspondents will please note that his post-office is changed from Converse, Clinton Co., to Brownsville, Saline Co., Mo.—St. Louis Presbyterian.

Rev. W. J. Lapsley, of Troy, Woodford county, Ky., has been called to the Mizpah church, near this city. Mr. Lapsley was formerly pastor of Mizpah, and his return will give great joy to a people who have continued most warmly attached to him.—St. Louis Presbyterian.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Three years ago only 100 members of the Presbyterian church in Holt county, Mo.; no Presbyterian preaching in eighteen months. Since that time 252 members have been gathered, through the exertions of two men, and two houses of worship built. Now in the county five churches, and will be another soon.

The Ninth Presbyterian church of Indianapolis, Ind., has arranged to bring together its scattered members and have one preaching service a day. It has been nine years under suspension.

A member of Rev. Dr. Shaw's church, Rochester, N. Y., determined to celebrate his birthday by sending $25,000 to the Board of Home Missions of the Presbyterian Church.

BAPTIST.

The Welch Baptists have some six conferences in this country, the largest of which is the Eastern Pennsylvania, with thirty churches and 2,500 members. In all, there are about 5,000 Welch Baptists in the United States.

The Journal and Messenger, some time ago, announced the ordination at Richmond, Ind., of H. B. Blakewell, formerly a Presbyterian minister, and said to have a letter showing that he was in good standing in his Presbytery. It is believed that the said "Blakewell" was none other than a B. H. Blackwell, formerly of Seymour, Ind., who had been excluded from the ministry of the Presbyterian Church.

METHODIST.

The original debt on the Mount Vernon Place Methodist church, Washington, D. C., was $18,-000, which with eight years interest added amounted to nearly $30,000, and after full and free conference among themselves, the gentlemen holding mortgages resolved to surrender the entire claim upon the church, except the small sum of $3,000; in other words to give $27,000.

CONGREGATIONALIST.

Rev. C. W. Pitcher, of Randolph, N. Y., was encouraged by Bishop Coxe and decided to enter the Episcopal ministry, but on mature reflection has concluded he cannot subscribe to the doctrine of apostolic succession, nor countenance Episcopal exclusiveness. He will remain a Congregationalist.

Twenty-one missionaries of the American Board are now on the way to their fields of labor and nine more are under appointment to go ere long.

Among the missionaries sent out last year by the American Board five were children of missionaries.

The State of Missouri has received $4,800 less from the New York Society than during the year previous, and paid $350 more into the treasury. Seven churches in the State have come to self-support during the last three years.

The South will raise this year about 5,000,-000 bales of cotton, 200,000 hogsheads of sugar, and very nearly 600,000,000 pounds of tobacco. This will be half a million more bales of cotton, twice as much sugar, and 100,000,000 more pounds of tobacco than she ever raised before.

A German Jewish paper believes that the Jews are descendants of Ishmael. Among the facts in support of this theory it notes that circumcision is practiced, that Abraham is a common name among them, that they eat pork, and that the laws respecting individual purity are very similar to those prescribed in the book of Leviticus.

Lately 149 carrier pigeons were carried from Aix-la-Chapelle to Metz and imprisoned a month. On being liberated 134 went directly back home, the first bird reaching Aix-la-Chapelle, 112 miles distant, in four hours and twenty-eight minutes. On another occasion, the weather being clear and fine, and the wind fair, some birds flew from Cologne to Berlin, 300 miles, in five and a half hours.

A cheap and simple piece of machinery has been invented, and is in operation at Winchester, S. C., which spins seed cotton into thread. It is claimed this invention will save 100 per cent. to the profit of the planter, as it saves him the expense of ginning, bailing, bagging and ties.

SECULAR NEWS.

The steamer Champion, bound from New York to Charleston, collided with the ship Lady Octavia early (before day) on 7th inst., forty miles directly north from Cape May. The steamer sank in four minutes. Thirty persons of the crew and passengers are supposed to be lost and twenty-five saved and placed on another vessel. Capt. Lockwood of the steamer is saved. The steamer is valued at $200,000.

Rev. Dr. Lovick Pierce, the father of Bishop Pierce, of the M. E. Church, died at his home in Sparta, Ga., in his 95th year.

The steamer Falcon, Capt. Kirby, of Charleston, out from Baltimore with a full cargo and eleven passengers, collided with a three-masted schooner off Barren Island. The passengers were put in the boats and saved. The officers and crew, twenty-five in number, saved themselves by climbing into the rigging of the Falcon, whence they were rescued.

At Meares' Bluff, near this city, at 6 A. M., November 4th, after a few hours illness, of membraneous croup, HARRY, son of Richard and Eva Chapman, aged 2 years and 26 days.

This sudden bereavement fully exemplifies the saying, "Death loves a shining mark." Little Harry was a promising child of fine form, beautiful features and bright, winning ways, which attracted him to all who knew him, and made him a pride and joy to his fond parents. But alas, Death has claimed "the Darling," and left us lonely, desolate and heart-broken. And yet we believe a "covenant keeping God" has done this in love and mercy, for our good and his gain, and in the midst of our great sorrow we hear the voice of Jesus saying, "Suffer the children to come unto me;" and since we know that a loving Saviour has taken the little ones to his own dear arms, shall we not be comforted, "that he is safe in the arms of Jesus." PASTOR.

MARY ROXANA CARSON, wife of W. P. Carson, of Rutherford county, was born December 1 1829: died October 15, 1879, of typhoid fever, after an illness of 23 days. She calmly fell asleep in Jesus. She professed religion in her 15th year, and joined the Methodist church. After marriage she went with her husband to the Presbyterian church, but always remained a Methodist in sentiment. She was a consistent christian. She was beloved, respected and honored by all who knew her. She had no enemies. On her death bed she said to her husband: "If I should die, I would go straight to heaven." Before her death she frequently sang "Pass me not, O gentle Saviour," and "Jesus can make a dying bed." She leaves a husband and nine children. Let us endeavor to follow her example and meet her in heaven.
ROBAH F. BUMPASS.

In Harnett county, on the 11th of October, near Little River Academy, N. C., Mrs. JANETT A. HARRIS, relict of R. E. Harris, in her 47th year. The suffering and afflictions of the subject of this notice were protracted and intensely saddening.—During her life, especially during her widowhood, the tender symphathies of her numerous friends were enlisted in her behalf. And in her last illness, and at her death, the intense sorrow of her two orphan daughters, and the distressing desolateness of these and the feeble and aged mother of the deceased, evoked the profound sympathy of the entire circle of friends and relations.

But they sorrow not as those who have no hope. She was a member of Sardis church, and her last lucid hours were spent in communion with the Saviour, who we trust hath received her, where the weary are at rest, and where pain and sorrow are never known. McB.

MEMORIAL OF REV. JOHN DOUGLAS.

At a previous meeting of the congregation of Steele Creek, the undersigned were appointed a committee to prepare a suitable memorial of our much beloved pastor, Rev. John Douglas, and in compliance, we submit the following preamble and resolutions:

Rev. John Douglas was a native of Chester county, S. C., graduated at South Carolina College, studied Theology at the Theological Seminary, Columbia, S. C. He was licensed by Bethel Presbytery, at Bethel church, S. C., in April 1835, and labored for a time at Purity church, Chester county, S. C., and for a time at James Island. He entered on his labors at Steele Creek in January 1866, was installed pastor of Steele Creek and Pleasant Hill churches, Mecklenburg county, N. C., same year, and as such was diligent, faithful, and successful in his labors.—He fed the flock from the pulpit, and was welcomed in the household by all classes. His labors were not confined to his pastoral charge, but extended to all schemes identified with Christ's Kingdom. He was for many years an efficient Trustee of Davidson College, a Director of the Theological Seminary at Columbia, S. C., and a Trustee of the General Assembly. But his work on earth is done. He breathed his last at his late residence on the 8th September, at 3 A. M., aged about 70 years; and while we mourn our bereavement, "we sorrow not as others which have no hope," as we doubt not that he is now with the General Assembly above, and in the enjoyment of the reward promised to the faithful laborer.

Resolved, 1. We with deep feeling of heart, mourn over our bereavement—that our venerable and much-beloved pastor shall no more be leading and directing us in the way of duty, sympathizing with us in our sorrows, or sharing with us rejoicing. But we humbly bow to the will of Him who does all things well on earth and in heaven—not our will, but thine, Oh Lord, be done.

2. We would offer thanks to the great Head of the Church that he was continued so long with us—and that his labors were so abundantly blessed by the presence of the Holy Spirit, making the Truth effectual.

3. We would hereby express our heartfelt sympathy with his beloved, and now bereaved widow—who so long shared his labors, joys and sorrows. We would cordially and affectionately commend his bereaved family to the protecting care and providing goodness of Him who hath promised He will be "a father of the fatherless, and a judge of the widows."

4. That we as the people whom he taught by precept and example, should endeavor to improve the lessons of instruction which he so often pressed upon our attentions, viz: "For to me to live is Christ"—that in the end it may be gain to die. This solemn event may soon come, as in this instance, it may be—suddenly. Let us then live as becometh the Gospel of Christ—all sacrifices will be repaid. God's promises are true: "Godliness is profitable unto all things, having promise of the life that now is, and of that which is to come."

5. That a blank page in our Session book be devoted to the memory of our beloved pastor.

6. That a copy of the foregoing preamble and resolutions, be furnished the family of our deceased pastor, and a copy forwarded to the Editors of the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN and the Southern Presbyterian, with a request to publish the same.

CURED OF DRINKING.

"A young friend of mine was cured of an insatiable thirst for liquor that had so prostrated his system that he was unable to do any business. He was entirely cured by the use of Hop Bitters. It allayed all that burning thirst; took away the appetite for liquor; made his nerves steady, and he has remained a sober and steady man for more than two years, and has no desire to return to his cups, and I know of a number of others that have been cured of drinking by it."—From a leading R. Consumption Cured.

An old physician, retired from practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure for Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma, and Throat and Lung Affections, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative power in thousands of cases, has felt it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and a desire to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge to all who desire it, this recipe, in German, French, or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail by addressing with stamp, naming this paper, W. W. SHERAR, 149 Powers' Block, Rochester, New York.

TALBOTT'S PATENT SPARK ARRESTER
The Invention of the Age,

It does not destroy the draft.
It does not interfere with cleaning the tubes.
It will not choke up, and requires no cleaning.
It requires no direct dampers to be opened when raising steam (dampers being objectionable, as they may be left open and allow sparks to escape).
It requires no water to extinguish sparks, which, by condensation, destroys the draft. Besides, when water is used, if neglected, the efficiency is destroyed by evaporation of the water, and the boiler is kept in a filthy condition.
It is simple and durable and can be relied upon.
It can be attached to any boiler.
No planter should be without one of them. Insurance companies will insure gins and barns where the Talbott Engines and Spark-Arresters are used at same rate as charged for water or horse-power.

FOR THE FAMILY.

The Prince's Honeycomb.

BY MARGARET J. PRESTON.

I was discomfited and sick and sad,
By reason of the way;
For God's exhaustless store of promise had
Been overlooked that day.

And I was weak to faintness with the weight
Of trials undergone:
This way and that I looked disconsolate,
And blindly stumbled on.

Within my hand I held the pilgrim's rod,
But in my hunger grief,
Disusing it, I had forgotten God,
In sudden unbelief.

When all at once, amid the jagged ways,
Through which I panting clomb,
I found right in my foot-path, with amaze,
A dropping honeycomb.

I asked not who had sent it: all I knew
Was, that my need was sore;
I dipped my rod, and from its sweetness drew,
And I was faint no more.

O hearts that yearn, like princely Jonathan's,
O'ermastered by the strife
That starves the aims and circumvents the plans
Of all the loftier life—

O souls that stagger under doubt's eclipse,
Let but some promise be
The Prince's honeycomb unto your lips,
And how your eyes will see!

The Faithful Martha.

In a little village of Eastern Prussia lived a man named Bluma, with his wife and his three children. A severe typhus fever had prevailed in the place, and the man was attacked with it, and was near death.

They had brought up their children in the fear of God, and loved them tenderly; yet they knew that they could give them nothing more than such love, besides bread and clothing. They taught them that they must not murmur when they were pinched with poverty, but must be thankful that it was no worse. They taught them obedience and discretion, and unity and love, all together. As the father became sick, Frau Blume was often overburdened with work, and the little Martha did all that lay in her power, and behaved like a little housewife. She looked after the cow, milked her, made the butter, cooked the soup, tended the father, and never sat still. The other two children kept as quiet as possible, and were glad to do any work that was laid upon them.

To the sick man the behavior of his children was often a real joy at heart; but his sickness continued a very long time. For many months he could not work, and at last he had to sell the cow, so that his family need not suffer hunger. "It is better," he used to say, "for us to live on water gruel than to get into debt."

Martha prayed and begged to be allowed to go out to service, so as to take a burden off her parents and to earn something for them. At last they consented, for necessity lay upon them, although it made their hearts very heavy; Martha was still so young, and far from strong enough to work out at service. She looked very small and pale, and was poorly clad, so that the other girls who were seeking service always got a place in preference to her.

Martha had tried her fortune with several rich peasants, but everywhere she was refused. It was a trial to the poor child to have to go home as on the evening before, and say that nobody wanted. But there was a Sandbauer, as she called him, because his house stood on a sandy place. She could still ask there; she heard that the wife had just dismissed her maid.

It was a dark, cold evening, and she was very tired, but she mustered up courage and knocked at the door.

The Sandbauer himself opened. "Who is begging so late in the evening?" he demanded of her; for he thought she was a beggar child.

"I heard that a maid was wanted here," said she, modestly.

The bauer laughed, bade her come in, and said to his wife: "Here comes a strong, capable maid," such as you have desired. I wonder what will come next?"

"Come here," said the peasant's wife; and Martha stood in the door.

"How old art thou?"

"Nearly eleven years."

"Art thou strong?"

"I hope so."

"Canst thou not answer yes or no?" asked the wife.

"Father thought I was not, but I feel that I am; so I do not rightly know."

Very well. Is that thy best clothing?"

"Yes."

"Is that thy warmest dress?"

"That is my mother's dress; mine is not good for much."

"And what service canst thou do?" asked the peasant, and looked at her from head to foot.

"That I do not know, sir," said Martha; for she did not well understand what he meant.

"Canst thou milk? Canst thou wash? Canst thou scour? Canst thou feed the pigs? Canst thou make butter?" asked the wife; and to all Martha answered yes.

"Yes, but how?" asked the peasant.

The poor Martha blushed up to her ears, and said: "Well, just as well as I can, sir."

"She is too small, and not strong enough, said the man.

"I don't know about that," answered the peasant's wife, whom the child pleased. "Thou lookest very pale, child; hast thou been sick?" she asked.

"No," answered Martha.

"For I would in no case take you into my house if you had had the typhus fever."

Martha cast down her eyes to the ground, but said nothing.

"Thou hast not had the typhus?" asked the peasant's wife.

"No, I have not been sick."

Then the man and his wife talked together, and at last the latter said: "We will try it with thee; but thy father can give thee some better clothes?"

"Ah, no! he is very poor," said Martha.

"But the tradesman will trust him until thou canst earn the money to pay for them."

"We never run in debt," said Martha.

"Good, good! that I must approve," replied the Sandbauer. "Thou canst give her a dress, to be sure," he said, turning to his wife.

"If she is a good child, I will do it immediately," promised the peasant's wife. "Then canst begin thy service to-morrow morning; for I need help immediately."

Martha looked up at her, her eyes full of tears, and said: "Frau Bauerin, my father has had the typhus."

The peasant couple looked at each other.

"Thou understandest that I cannot take thee when the sickness has been in your house," said the wife.

"Yes, indeed," and the tears dropped on her hand; "that was the reason I told you."

"Now," the peasant's wife went on, "I will consider the matter, and in the morning thou canst come early. If we send thee back, we will send something back with thee; but perhaps we will keep thee."

Martha went home and told her parents everything, and that very evening the Sandbauer made inquiries about the Blumes, and when on the next morning Martha stood at her door, he let her in with a pleasant smile.

"I hear that thy father has had the typhus some time ago," said he, "and we wished to know about thee. Shall I tell thee why? Because thou hast been taught to be truthful and upright and industrious; and that is worth more in our eyes than the fine clothes and the strength of all the maids whom we have sent away hitherto."

So then Martha was hired, and the Sandbauer and his wife proved a good master and mistress; and Martha's good behavior obtained places for both her sisters as soon as they were old enough. And for what did all three children save their money which they so earned? They wanted to buy their parents a cow, and they did it, too.

They prospered more and more, and often said to each other: "We thank our parents for all; what they taught us is better than silver or gold. Rich people can become poor, and great people become abased, but he who is rightly instructed never loses his treasure; and our parents have taught us to live according to the instruction of God's word, and have lived that way before us."

Sammy's Morning Walk.

It was the same Sammy who was nearly choked by a caterpillar when he was trying to steal sugar out of the sugar-bowl.

One cool morning in the fall, when he was about four years old, he slept very late, and when he awoke he seemed to be all alone in the house. To tell the truth, it was so late that the other children had all gone to school, and his mother was out behind the shed hanging out clothes.

Sammy found his little jacket and trousers, and taking them on his arm, went all over the house for some one to dress him, but nobody could be find.

"I know what I'll do!" he said to himself. "I'll go over to Mrs. Packer's. She's a good woman, and she'll dress me."

He had never been over there more than two or three times, for this family had lately moved there, and the house was quite out of sight over the hill "across lots," but he remembered the way, and trudged along.

It was a frosty morning, and the weeds and bushes he had to go through were as high as his head, and so wet that when he got there his little shirt and the clothes he carried were as wet as if they had been dipped in a brook.

Mrs. Packer was busy working over butter when she heard a very gentle tap at the door. "Come in!" she said, both hands in the butter.

In came Sammy, dripping like a drowned rat, and his legs so covered with the blossoms of the golden-rod, through which he had come, that they were as yellow as a Brahma chicken's.

"Why, Sammy Brown!" exclaimed Mrs. Packer.

"Our folks was all gone, but I knew you would dress me," said Sammy, sitting calmly down by the stove.

Lucky for Sammy, Mrs. Packer had a house full of boys, so she could send him home in dry clothes. And one of her big boys carried him on his back through all the high weeds and grass, and put him over the fence into his father's yard.

"How late Sammy does sleep this morning!" his mother was just thinking, when the front door opened, and he came in.

"I'm dressed, mother!" said Sammy. "But these are Billy Packer's clothes, for mine was awful wet. And, oh! my legs was just as yallow as they could be when I got over there. It's a pretty cold, damp morning."

"Sammy Brown!" his mother began. But then she had to stop and laugh.—Youth's Companion.

A Queen's Wedding Trousseau.

A writer in a London contemporary states that the trousseau of the Archduchess Christine, the future wife of King Alfonso, includes a number of costumes devised from models of the time of Louis XIII., one of them being of blue embossed velvet and opal colored satin, with fringes of small pearls, intermingled with silver lace, that will certainly produce an impression at the Escurial. The collar of the corsage is also of the richest silver lace. "I may mention," the writer continues, "another dress, intended for the future Queen of Spain, composed of rose, Lavallière silk, with the front of the bust and the skirt of royal blue satin, and trimmings of antique gold and silver gimp. The Archduchess's bridal veil of Brussels point lace, reproducing the arms of the different kingdoms into which Spain was divided, is the present of her aunt, the Queen of the Belgians. On the occasion of wedding mass the future consort of Alfonso XII. will wear a dress of silver cloth with garlands, brilliant with sparkling white jet, and intertwining myrtle with orange blossoms and lillies. The trousseau, indeed, would well grace Prince Charming's marriage in fairyland. There are cambric handkerchiefs, worked with the arms of Spain and Austria, in gold thread, paignoirs of white taffetas and in several light colors, edged with point d'Alencon. What is there not indeed? I shall have to recur to all these marvels and give you a description of the innumerable presents which the bride is to receive. The Royal corbeille, which already forms the topic of conversation among the lady leaders of society, has full claims to the honor of being chronicled."

Two Poets and the Horse Collar.

"I led the horse to the stable, when a fresh perplexity arose. I removed the harness with difficulty; but after many strenuous efforts I could not remove the collar. In despair, I called for assistance, when aid soon drew near. Mr. Wordeworth brought his ingenuity into exercise, but after several unsuccessful attempts he relinquished the achievement as a thing altogether impracticable. Mr. Coleridge now tried his hand, but showed no more grooming skill than his predecessors, for, after twisting the poor horse's neck almost to strangulation, and the great danger of his eyes, he gave up the task, pronouncing that the horse's head must have grown (gout or dropsy?) since the collar was put on; for, he said, 'it was a downright impossibility for such a huge os frontis to pass through so narrow a collar.' Just at this instant a servant girl came near, and understanding the cause of our consternation: 'La! master,' said she, 'you don't go about the work in the right way; you should do like this;' when, turning the collar manner, will attend, bringing presents for the bride and groom. Besides this, particular and almost peremptory invitations, in writing, are sent to each household on whom the to be wedded folks may have some especial claim for former generosity under like circumstances. Presents of all sorts—food, furniture, fuel, table and chamber linen, and even sheep, lambs, calves, goats and ponies—are among the gifts.

MISCELLANEOUS.

"Look at the fate of summer flowers,
Which blow at daybreak, droop at even song,
And, grieved for their brief date, confess that ours,
Measured by what we are and ought to be,
Measured by all that, trembling, we foresee,
Is not so long."

Self-Contented People.

History has many examples of self-contented people. Queen Elizabeth was decidedly one—at least on the subject of her personal attractions. Malville, the Scotch ambassador, tells us that she inquired particularly regarding the stature of his mistress, Queen Mary. "Was she taller than herself?" and on Melville replying in the affirmative, Elizabeth sharply rejoined, "Then your Queen is too tall, for I am exactly the right height." Possibly Shakespere had this anecdote in his mind when he wrote the scene where Cleopatra questions the messenger regarding her rival Octavia—

"Let him not leave out
The color of her hair * * *
* * Bring me word
How tall she is;"

and contrasts the Roman lady's personal attractions with her own charms. The messenger calls Octavia "low-voiced," which Cleopatra translates—

"Dull of tongue and dwarfish,
He cannot like her long."

Sometimes it is their moral, rather than their personal, qualities that fill people with self contentment. Philip II. of Spain, reviewing his life on his death-bed, could calmly inform his confessor that he could not recall having committed a single wilfully sinful act—a somewhat startling assertion from the lips of a man who was the Nero of his age. In the British Museum is a magnificent Bible presented by this same monarch to his faithful servant, the Duke of Alva, or, as the inscription runs, "from the best of kings to the best of subjects." The inhabitants of the Low Countries during the 16th century might have questioned the truth of Philip's self-assumed title. Kings are not the only people who thus praise themselves. Dean Ramsay tells an amusing anecdote of a Scotch shoemaker who fancied he had a gift for preaching, and who was overheard praying that "as Providence had called him to be great, it would also keep him good." Artists and authors are proverbially self-contented, unless they fall into the other extreme of despondency and self-depreciation. Great men like Buffon and Hogarth extolled their own talents without reserve. "There are only five geniuses in the world," remarked the former, "Newton, Bacon, Leibnitz, Montesquieu and myself;" and Hogarth, completing his "Marriage a la Moda," told his friends that he was "about to gratify the world with such a sight as they should never have equaled." "When I am dead you will not readily meet another John Hunter," said the great anatomist of the last century. Sometimes the self-contented person rejoices in a likeness—generally imagined—which he discovers between himself and some great man, dead or living. His photographs are wonderfully like the portraits of Lord Byron or the Duke of Wellington; or he is often mistaken in a crowd for one of the royal family—at least, so he assures his friends. Swift once rebelled against this kind of vanity in his friend Ambrose Phillips, who believed himself to be an exact likeness of Julius Cæsar, and was fond of telling people that the great conqueror was a "man of lean make, pale complexion, about 5ft. 5in. high, and extremely neat in his dress"—an exact description of Phillips himself. The sarcastic Dean listened patiently, and then dryly remarked that "for his part he always imagined Cæsar to have been a plump man, just 5ft. 5in. high, not very neatly dressed, in a black gown with puddings in the sleeves."—Scottish-American Journal.

The Antiquity of Forks.

Among the recent finds in the explorations of the relics of the ancient lake dwellers of Switzerland is a pair of forks, apparently invented for table use. They were fashioned from the metatarral bone of a stag. This gives a higher antiquity to table forks (if they were really intended as such) than has hitherto been suspected. Other bone implements and ornaments are frequently found. Animal remains are also common. Among them are the bones of the dog, the badger, and the common otter. The latter were doubtless met with in the immediate neighborhood of the lake, but the presence of the bones of the wild ox and of the bear indicate that the lake dwellers were bold and skilful hunters, as well as ingenious tool makers. They were also keepers of cattle, for the most numerous animal remains brought to light were those of the common cow and the moor cow. These exist in every stage of growth, showing that their owners had a taste for both veal and beef, while their fondness for venison is proved by the many bones of the stag and roe discovered by the explorers. Evidence of a like character shows that they were hunters of the wild boar and eaters of the domesticated pig, and the existence of the beaver in Switzerland in prehistoric times is attested by the presence, among other bones, of several which comparative anatomists declare to have belonged to that rodent. One omission on the list is striking. No mention is made of the bones of horses having been found, from which it may be inferred with tolerable certainty that the horse was either altogether unknown to the ancient lake dwellers, or that they had not succeeded in capturing and taming him.—Scientific American.

BE YE LIKE FOOLISH.

"For ten years my wife was confined to her bed with such a complication of ailments that no doctor could tell what was the matter or cure her, and I used up a small fortune in humbug stuff. Six months ago I saw a U. S. flag with Hop Bitters on it, and I thought I would be a fool once more. I tried it, but my folly proved to be wisdom. Two bottles cured her, and she is now as well and strong as any man's wife, and it only cost me two dollars. Be ye like foolish."—B. W., Detroit, Mich.

PAIN in the right side, under the edge of the ribs, increases on pressure; sometimes the pain is in the left side; the patient is rarely able to lie on the left side; sometimes the pain is felt under the shoulder blade, and it frequently extends to the top of the shoulder, and is sometimes mistaken for rheumatism in the arm. The stomach is affected with loss of appetite and sickness; the bowels in general are costive, sometimes alternative with lax; the head is troubled with pain, accompanied with a dull, heavy sensation in the back part. There is generally a considerable loss of memory, accompanied with a painful sensation of having left undone something which ought to have been done. A slight, dry cough is sometimes an attendant. The patient complains of weariness and debility; he is easily startled, his feet are cold or burning, and he complains of a prickly sensation of the skin; his spirits are low; and although he is satisfied that exercise would be beneficial to him, yet he can scarcely summon up fortitude enough to try it. In fact, he distrusts every remedy. Several of the above symptoms attend the disease, but cases have occurred where few of them existed, yet examination of the body, after death, has shown the LIVER to have been extensively deranged.

AGUE AND FEVER.

DR. C. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS, IN CASES OF AGUE AND FEVER, when taken with Quinine, are productive of the most happy results. No better cathartic can be used, preparatory to, or after taking Quinine. We would advise all who are afflicted with this disease to give them a FAIR TRIAL.

For all bilious derangements, and as a simple purgative, they are unequaled.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

The genuine are never sugar coated.

Every box has a red wax seal on the lid, with the impression DR. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS.

The genuine McLANE'S LIVER PILLS bear the signatures of C. McLANE and FLEMING BROS. on the wrappers.

Insist upon having the genuine DR. C. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS, prepared by Fleming Bros., of Pittsburgh, Pa., the market being full of imitations of the name McLane, spelled differently but same pronunciation.

PREVENT YELLOW FEVER!

It has been well proved that prevention is better than cure. A very simple and effective preventative for Yellow Fever and other fevers has been found in BENSON'S CAP. INE POROUS PLASTERS They were used during last season in New Orleans very successfully. The common method of using them was to apply them over the stomach, changing them every week. They are one OF THE MOST ACTIVE ANTISEPTICS and seem to destroy the poison. One reason why they are of special value is that they stimulate the digestion, and thus enable the system to overcome the influence of the malarial poison. They are a cheap and almost certain preventative. Ask your physician about them. Benson's Capsine Plasters are a sure preventative and cure for chills and fever if worn as above. Price 25 cents.

THIS MOTOR can be easily attached to any SEWING MACHINE. The weight of the operator sitting in any ordinary chair will run the machine several minutes, when by rocking back in the chair the motor immediately rewinds itself. No effort is required beyond that of occasionally rocking back in a rocking chair, and thus the great objection to the use of Sewing Machines is obviated.

The Motor will be sent postpaid on receipt of $4.50. The Motor and a Rocking Chair will be forwarded by Express for $7.00. A liberal discount to Agents ordering ten or more at once.

REPORTS OF BENEVOLENT WORK TO THE SYNOD OF NORTH CAROLINA.

REPORT OF THE AGENT OF SABBATH SCHOOLS.

[Published by request of the Synod.]

Your Agent of Sabbath Schools respectfully reports that it is impossible to present to the Synod any satisfactory statement about the general progress and outlook of the Sabbath School work in the Synod, as the Presbyteries fail to furnish him with their reports. This year Mecklenburg and Concord Presbyteries have furnished him no reports, and that of Fayetteville, through some accident, has just been received.

From the data on hand and the Minutes of the General Assembly, the following meagre report is submitted:

Orange Presbytery reports 2,131 scholars, Concord 3,191, Fayetteville 1,759, Wilmington 805, Mecklenburg 1,899. Total 8,872.

This shows an increase of 645 scholars over the number reported last year. In the three Presbyteries reporting there have been 434 additions to the Church by conversions from the Sabbath schools, which constitute the largest portion of the entire additions to the churches.

There are some signs of hopefulness and increased attention to this great work of the Church among her children, who are her wards under the covenant; and a little more attention seems to be paid to training the youth in systematic giving. But there is need to call the earnest attention of all our Presbyteries to the action of the Synod for the last two years, and to the resolutions of the General Assembly of 1879, as recorded in the Minutes, page 59, which are herewith appended.

Respectfully submitted.

L. C. VASS, Agent.

[The report was approved, and the resolutions appended appear in the abstract already furnished.]

REPORT OF THE AGENT OF EDUCATION.

[Published by request of the Synod.]

The Agent of Education would respectfully submit to the Synod the following report:

1. There are at present under the care of the several Presbyteries comprising this Synod 16 candidates for the Gospel ministry, being three less than the whole number last year. This number is distributed among the Presbyteries as follows: Orange Presbytery has 6 candidates, Mecklenburg 4, Fayetteville 1, Concord 4 and Wilmington none.

2. Of these 16 candidates 11 are beneficiaries, 10 receiving aid from the Church and 1 supported by a minister of the Synod of North Carolina. The number of beneficiaries is the same as last year.

3. The whole amount of money raised within the bounds of this Synod for the cause of Education is $5,349. Of this amount Mecklenburg contributed $381, Orange $433, Fayetteville $213, Concord $4,228, and Wilmington $94. Of the amount credited to Concord Presbytery it should be stated that the First Presbyterian church in Salisbury gave $3,000 to endow a scholarship in Davidson College, and $1,000 for their own educational enterprises. This leaves $228 as the real contribution of Concord Presbytery. The whole amount contributed by the Synod as above obtained by your Agent is $3,161. This is $1 more than the contribution made for the same purpose last year.

Your Agent would respectfully submit for the consideration of Synod the following resolutions:

[These resolutions as adopted appear in the abstract.]

Respectfully submitted.

L. MCKINNON, Agent.

[The report was approved, and the resolutions adopted, as already published.]

REPORT OF THE AGENT OF FOREIGN MISSIONS.

[Published by request of the Synod.]

The Agent of Foreign Missions reports:

That during the year ending April 1st, 1879, the sum of $4,947 was raised in the Synod for Foreign Missions—$531 more than was raised the year before—being a fraction more than 27 cents per communicant.

Concord Presbytery raised $1,159, an increase; Mecklenburg $1,133, an increase; Orange $1,078, an increase; Fayettoville $797, a decrease; Wilmington $555, an increase.

Only 33 Sunday schools in the Synod contributed. They raised $634. Some Sunday schools raised as much as the congregations. One Sunday school in the largest congregation of communicants in the Synod raised for this cause a little more than the congregation did. Ladies' Aid Societies raised a good portion of the aggregate sum. 37 ladies' aid societies contributed for this cause, which is 11 more than last year.

Concord Presbytery makes special mention of the efforts of the Statesville church in this matter for the last two years, and commends to others the benevolence in this direction of the Statesville church, its Ladies' Aid Society and the Female Seminary. The contribution of this church last year was $148, of the Ladies' Missionary Society $101, of the Simonton Missionary Society $24, aggregating the sum of $273, the largest contribution in the Synod.

Of the 222 churches in the Synod 184 contributed.

One minister of this Synod, a member of Concord Presbytery, a native of Rowan county, the Rev. John W. Davis, is still in the Foreign field, in the China mission. The Assembly's committee report him in good health in July last, but resting on the seacoast during the heated summer season. He has been translating the New Testament into the Soochow dialect, and had Matthew and most of Mark printed.

This is about all that can be reported as to the efforts of this Synod in this work.

Your Agent has no information touching the agencies used to advance the cause. He cannot report how many copies of the Missionary are taken, whether it is carefully and generally read; how many monthly concerts are held, or what attentions are given to the children in Sunday schools to encourage their interest in this cause.

It is gratifying to Synod to learn that there has been a constant increase in the amount of funds raised for Foreign Missions for several years.

This work devolves mainly on the ministry. There are 117 ministers in the Synod, and the aggregate sum raised has been about $42 per minister. Our brethren in the Synod of Virginia raised about $61 per minister. Might not we of the Synod of North Carolina do as much? Respectfully submitted.

R. Z. JOHNSTON, Agent.

[The report was approved.]

REPORT OF THE AGENT OF PUBLICATION.

[Published by request of the Synod.]

The Treasurer of the Assembly's Committee acknowledges the receipt of contributions to Publication for the year ending March 31, 1879, as follows: Presbytery of Concord, $24 75, Fayetteville $134 72, Mecklenburg $191 60, Orange, $231 42, Wilmington $41 99, total $624 48; an increase of $80 24, compared with the amount raised last year.

The Presbyteries report the following amounts contributed to Publication for the same year, viz: Concord $117, Fayetteville $158, Mecklenburg $219, Orange $201, Wilmington $72; total $767.

The difference is accounted for by the fact that in some of the Presbyteries a certain part of the collections was retained for the work of colportage at home.

Last year 118 of the 217 churches in the Synod reported collections for this cause; this year 141 of the 221 churches, showing a considerable increase (23) in the number of contributing churches.

Ten out of 35 churches in Concord Presbytery, with an aggregate membership of 548, report no collections.

Ten out of 49 churches in Fayetteville Presbytery, with 691 members, no collections.

Twenty-one of 47 churches in Mecklenburg Presbytery, with 1,151 members, no collections.

Twenty-three of 58 in Orange Presbytery, with 791 members, no collections.

Sixteen of 32 in Wilmington Presbytery, with 540 members, no collections.

The average per membership of the contributing churches is 5.4 cents.

COLPORTAGE.

The work of Colportage is properly embraced under the Publication Department of Church Work, but your agent has been unable to get at the facts fully in regard to this work in the Synod.

Concord Presbytery has engaged actively in the work during the year, keeping a colporteur in the field for a large part of the time.

In Fayetteville Presbytery a colporteur has been employed for at least three months.

In the Presbyteries of Orange, Mecklenburg and Wilmington nothing has been done in the field, but steps are being taken with the view of actively engaging in the work as soon as possible.

As to the condition of the Assembly's Committee of Publication, it is hardly necessary to say what is well known, that the committee is still burdened and straitened with debt.

Considerable progress has been made by way of reducing the indebtedness during the year, but the reasonable expectations indulged have not been realized, and the operations of this committee especially in the line of benevolent provision and distribution of religious literature are still wholly stayed. A contribution of $5 00 from each church, or of ten cents from each member, would extinguish the debt and leave the committee free to carry out the original design of this arm of the church's benevolent work.

Your agent would call the attention of the Synod to the excellence and cheapness of the Sabbath School literature furnished by this committee: the Earnest Worker, we have every reason to believe, is growing in favor with our people. Its circulation has increased by 2,000 since last year. It ought to have a circulation of 2,000 at least in the Synod. It is a very valuable aid to parents and teachers in their instruction of the children, and ought to have the exclusive patronage of our people. The same thing may be said of the Childrens' Friend. It is an additional reason for supporting these papers that the royalty the committee receives from the publishers is, with the present circulation, sufficient to defray about one-half the expenses of the committee. If the circulation were doubled the royalty alone would defray the expenses and leave the general contributions of the church to be applied wholly to the benevolent work of the committee.

Your agent has no new resolutions to offer this year, but recommends that the action taken last year be re-affirmed. [See Minutes of Synod, p. 14]

Respectfully submitted,

F. H. JOHNSTON, Agent.

REPORT OF THE AGENT OF SUSTENTATION.

[Published by request of the Synod.]

Your Agent for Sustentation would make the following report: The facts and figures presented over the Assembly's year, ending the 1st of last April, and are gathered from the Assembly's Minutes, the Annual Report of its Treasurer, and the information given by the chairmen of Sustentation Committees in the several Presbyteries.

1. Your attention is first directed to Ministerial Support.

In the Synod we have 117 ordained ministers, 7 licentiates, and 222 churches. The amount paid in salaries, according to the Assembly's Minutes, is $57,354.

Orange Presbytery, with 32 ministers and 2 licentiates, pays $12,677; Concord, 23 ministers, 2 licentiates, $10,512; Fayetteville, 19 ministers, no licentiates, $10,554; Wilmington, 15 ministers, 2 licentiates, $8,944; Mecklenburg, 28 ministers, 1 licentiate, $11,667.

The average salary actually paid laboring ministers is as follows:

In Orange Presbytery, with 3,515 communicants, $653; Concord, 3,526, $584; Fayetteville, 4,025, $659; Wilmington, 1,727, $688; Mecklenburg, 4,054, $530; Synod, 17,747, $616.

In obtaining this average only laboring ministers, with charges, have been considered. For this reason, and because the whole amount is slightly larger, the average salary paid in Synod is reported as $100 more than last year. According to the statements of Presbyterial Agents, the average salary promised is as follows:

In Orange $600, Concord $775, Fayetteville $710, Wilmington $800, Mecklenburg no report.

Ministerial support has made some advance in the Synod since last year. The whole amount contributed to this object has somewhat increased, and the average salary paid to laboring ministers has been considerably augmented.

2. The next subject claiming notice is Sustentation proper. This includes the aiding of feeble churches in supporting their ministers, and in completing their houses of worship.

To this object Orange Presbytery has contributed, to the cause, $333, to the Assembly's Committee, $333; it has received $350, disbursed $350; Concord—to cause, $258, to Assembly's Committee, $54, received nothing, disbursed $212; Fayetteville—to cause, $140, to Assembly's Committee, $140, received $100, disbursed $87; Wilmington—to cause, $234, to Assembly's Committee, $70; received nothing, disbursed 234; Mecklenburg—to cause, $593, to Assembly's Committee, $593, received $400, disbursed $400. In Synod, to cause, $1,558; to Assembly's Committee, $1,190.

Three Presbyteries co-operate with the Assembly's Committee in this work and two act independently, though some of their churches send contributions to the General Treasury. The average contribution to Sustentation in the Synod has been about 8½ cents per communicant; a decrease upon last year of more than 6 cents.

Churches have generally been grouped into self-sustaining pastorates, and of 222 churches in Synod, only 22 are reported as vacant. Some of these have been supplied since the spring meetings of Presbyteries.

In Concord Presbytery, during the year, three church buildings have been erected.

In Fayetteville, two have been completed and one is in progress.

In Wilmington, one church has paid for a parsonage, which causes the contributions to congregational purposes in this Presbytery, to exceed this year, $16,000.

In Mecklenburg, two churches have been built and one is in progress.

3. Evangelistic Work now claims attention.

Orange does not co-operate with the Assembly's committee in this work, has 2 Evangelists on salaries of $700 and $600. Of these amounts $750 is expected from the fields, and $550 from the established churches. This Presbytery contributed to Assembly's Committee, $37.

Concord does not co-operate with the Assembly's Committee, and has one Evangelist on a salary of $700. Its contributions to the cause are $316, to Assembly's Committee, $7. Its disbursements are $325.

Fayetteville co-operates with the Assembly's Committee, but has no Evangelist for his whole time. It reports contributions to cause $176, to Assembly's Committee $176. received from it $50. Some evangelistic work is done by settled ministers, and one minister has given one-fourth of his time to this work, on a salary of $125 from the field.

Wilmington does not co-operate with the Assembly's Committee, and has no Evangelist. Some mission work has been done by its settled ministers. It has appropriated $80 to aid church erection.

Mecklenburg does not co-operate with the Assembly's Committee, and has no acting Evangelist, but three ministers give part of their time to evangelistic work, and receive in salaries $500. This Presbytery contributes to cause $500, to Assembly's Committee $42.

In the Synod there are 7 Evangelists for the whole or a part of their time, on salaries amounting to $2,880. For evangelization outside of our bounds we have contributed $212. The average contribution to evangelization within the bounds of the Synod has been about 16 cents per communicant.

4. Your Agent would report as to Invalid Fund: Orange Presbytery has contributed to the cause $235, to Assembly's Committee $235, received $160, disbursed $160; Concord—to cause $100, to Ass. Com. $37, received nothing, disbursed $100; Fayetteville—to cause $146, to Ass. Com. $146, received $120, disbursed $120; Wilmington—to cause $103, to Ass. Com. $103, received $50, disbursed $50; Mecklenburg—to cause $208, to Ass. Com. $208, received nothing, disbursed nothing.

Six families and four invalids are reported as aided.

Average contribution to this object in the Synod, about 4½ cents per communicant. Last year it was 5 cents.

5. The Relief Scheme should be mentioned. So far as your Agent can learn, this scheme for providing for the families of deceased ministers by paying an annual sum, has been embraced by but 3 ministers, and no church in the Synod.

6. The Evangelization of the colored people is the last subject embraced in this report.

In Orange Presbytery there is one colored church, and one colored minister, on a salary of $400—$100 furnished by the Assembly's Committee, and $300 by the field. No contributions for this object for the Assembly's Committee are reported.

In Concord the ground is occupied by the Northern Assembly. It reports no colored churches, and has given no contributions to colored evangelization.

In Fayetteville, there are two colored churches, preached to one-half the time by a white minister, who receives $25 from the Assembly's Committee. Four churches have contributed to this object $10. Some preaching to the colored people has been done by settled ministers.

In Wilmington, there is occasional preaching to the colored people by white ministers. There are no colored ministers or churches. The contributions to this cause amount to $20.

In Mecklenburg, there is occasional preaching to the colored people by white ministers. In one church a large number of colored members contribute to the support of the white pastors.

In the Synod, we have one colored minister and three churches, while the amount of contributions for the evangelization of the colored people will probably not exceed $300.

Respectfully submitted,

H. G. HILL, Agent.

For the N. C. Presbyterian.

PRESBYTERY OF ORANGE.

ABSTRACT OF PROCEEDINGS OF THE 219TH SESSION AT ALAMANCE CHURCH, OCTOBER 16-21, 1879.

Presbytery met according to adjournment, and was opened with a sermon from Matt. xiv: 31, by the moderator, Rev. A. Currie.

Rev. C. H. Wiley was chosen moderator and Rev. T. U. Fancette and Elder T. A. Watkins temporary clerks.

There were present at the meeting 22 ministers, and 20 churches were represented.

The minutes of the last meeting were read, and the usual committees were appointed.

Candidates received.—Mr. James Kivett Stockard, member of Graham church, was, after careful examination, received under the care of the Presbytery as a candidate for the Gospel ministry. He is now pursuing his literary course at the University of North Carolina. Mr. William F. Thom, a member and ruling elder of Alamance church, and formerly a candidate for the ministry, was again, after examination, taken under care of Presbytery and directed to enter upon his theological course at the Union Seminary, Va.

Calls and Dismissals.—Rev. Messrs. W. R. Atkinson and H. B. Pratt were dismissed by their own request, the former to the Presbytery of Mecklenburg and the latter to the Presbytery of Bethel. Rev. D. C. Rankin returned the call from the church at Tarboro, and obtained leave to labor without the bounds of Presbytery until the spring meeting. A call from Grassy Creek church for the pastoral services of Rev. John W. Primrose for one-fourth of his time at a salary of $150 was placed in his hands and accepted—Rev. John S. Watkins to preside, preach and charge the people, and Rev. D. E. Jordan to propose the constitutional questions and charge the pastor: time left discretionary with the committee. Shiloh church obtained permission to employ Rev. J. W. Primrose for one Sabbath as stated supply at a salary of $125. Mebaneville church obtained permission to employ Rev. T. J. Allison as stated supply for one year for one-half his time at a salary of $500. Bethlehem church asked for the other half of this brother's time at a salary of $225, which request was referred to the Agent of Sustentation. Rev. A. M. Watson of the Presbytery of Memphis obtained leave to labor within our bounds for one year. (At the adjourned meeting, during the session of Synod, the Lexington church obtained permission to employ Mr. Watson for the whole of his time at $600.) Calls from the churches of Oregon and Oak Forest for the pastoral services of Rev. D. I. Craig for one Sabbath each were read, but Presbytery declined to put them in his hands, and directed the Stated Clerk to write to those churches explaining the reasons of its action. The church at Company Shops obtained leave, provided the church at Graham consent, to employ Rev. B. W. Mebane, pastor of Graham church, to preach for them two Sabbath nights in the month on a salary of $50.

Sustentation and Evangelistic Work.—Presbytery, after considerable discussion, adopted the following resolutions:

1*st. Resolved*, That the Presbytery, warmed and encouraged by the experience of the past, desires to impress afresh on the mind of the Church the vital and solemn importance of Sustentation.

2*d. Resolved*, That the effort be made to raise during the year ending April 1, 1880, for Sustentation proper the sum of $1,000, for the Evangelical Fund $800, for the Invalid Fund $500, and for the Colored Evangelistic Fund $300—being an average of 73 cents per communicant.

3*d. Resolved*, That the Agent of Sustentation distribute among our churches their respective proportions of the sums indicated in the foregoing resolution, taking as the basis of division not the membership but the pastor's salary, and advise each church through its session of the amount, and that they be requested to make earnest efforts to raise the amount.

Foreign Missions.—The Agent of Foreign Missions made his report, and the following resolutions were adopted:

Resolved, 1*st*, That this Presbytery feels the great importance of Foreign Missions, and regrets that more has not been done for this object by its churches.

Resolved, 2*d*, That we are glad and thankful to hear of the success that our Church at large has had in this important work.

Resolved, 3*d*, That we will make greater effort to have our people informed with regard to what our missionaries are doing, and thus strive to stimulate our churches to greater liberality in supporting this cause.

Resolved, 4*th*, That we recommend to our people to subscribe for and read the Missionary, that they may learn what our Church is doing for the heathen and how greatly their aid is needed.

Minutes of the Assembly.—The following action was taken: First.—In regard to the direction of the Assembly to Presbyteries "to exercise due diligence in assisting to collect back funds appropriated on their recommendation to candidates who have abandoned preparations for the ministry," the Presbytery directs its Agent of Education (1) to inquire if there are any such who are or have been under the care of this Presbytery, and (2) if there are to correspond with them as to their paying back the money furnished them with a view to entering the ministry, and (3) to make a report of the whole matter to this Presbytery at the next spring meeting. Second.—The observance of the usual concert of prayer for youth on the last Thursday of February is recommended to all our churches. The Presbytery reports the recommendation to all the churches under its care. Third.—The Presbytery concurs in the recommendation of the Assembly in regard to the Sabbath, and hereby appoints —— as said Presbyterial Committee, and further that a minister be appointed to preach at the next meeting of Presbytery a sermon on the Holy Sabbath, its nature, design and observance. (The moderator appointed Rev. J. M. Atkinson, Rev. J. H. Smith, D. D., and Rev. W. B. Tidball to be the committee above recommended; and, on motion, Rev. J. H. Smith, D. D., was appointed to preach the sermon as above directed.) Fourth.—In regard to the request of the Assembly to the Presbyteries, "to send up from year to year to the executive committee of Home Missions statements of the work undertaken independently of the executive committee by the churches under their care on behalf of the colored people, and of the contributions made in support of their work," the Presbytery directs its Stated Clerk to make such report to the executive committee. Fifth.—The Assembly having recommended that the first Sabbath in December of each year be designated as the day for the annual collection in behalf of the colored institute at Tuskaloosa, Ala., the Presbytery calls this subject to the consideration of our churches, and concurs in the recommendation of the Assembly as to the first Sabbath of December, or the first convenient day thereafter.

Routine Business.—The Presbytery made some changes in the method of conducting the business of the body, with the view of avoiding waste of time in mere routine any further than was absolutely necessary, and of securing at the same time full reports from all the churches on the various matters required by the Standing Rules. The following is an abstract of the action: 1st.—It is ordered that "wherever in the Standing Rules the roll is required to be called for reports of the churches of their diligence in the matters specified they be changed so as to require written reports to be sent up annually to the spring meeting." 2d.—Rules 30 and 31 are changed so as to make it the duty of the Committee on Systematic Benevolence, at the spring meeting, to examine and report judgment on the reasons given by any church for failing to take up any collection ordered by the General Assembly, and making it the duty of the Stated Clerk to endorse said judgments on the report of the delinquent church, and return it to the same on the adjournment of the Presbytery. 3d—A special committee to be called the Committee on Routine Matters is to be appointed at the spring meeting to review and report on the written reports (except the Narrative) on matters required and specified in the Standing Rules. Churches reported (by this committee) delinquent without good excuse are to be immediately notified by the Stated Clerk of their delinquency, and required to report in writing to the fall meeting what they have done towards repairing the failure. 4th.—A standing committee, consisting of the Agent of Sustentation, the Stated Clerk and the Treasurer, is appointed, to be called the Committee on Assessments, whose duty it shall be to raise at every spring meeting, or at any meeting if necessary, the assessments to the Presbyterial Fund and the apportionments to the Evangelistic Fund, and recommend such changes in the amounts as in their judgment may be deemed wise and proper, and to fix the amounts for newly organized churches. 5th.—Four committees, instead of two, are hereafter to be appointed to review Sessional Records. 6th.—The Stated Clerk is directed to issue a blank form of report for the use of sessions in making out their reports on matters required by the Standing Rules.

Resolutions.—A resolution was adopted commending the building of a church at Wilson to the liberality and zeal of the ladies of the churches of this Presbytery. A resolution to divide the Presbytery was introduced and placed on the docket and finally referred to a committee to bring in a report upon it at the next meeting—the committee consisting of Rev. Messrs. F. H. Johnston, J. H. Fitzgerald and D. E. Jordan.

Resolved, That the Presbytery return their hearty thanks to the people of this community for their hearty hospitality, and to the people of Greensboro for entertaining the members, and that the pastor read this resolution to the congregation.

Supplies.—Rev. Messrs. J. L. Currie, J. S. Watkins, C. N. Morrow, T. J. Allison and J. H. Fitzgerald were directed to preach, each one Sabbath, at Chapel Hill between this and the time of next meeting. Rev. D. E. Jordan and Rev. J. S. Watkins were appointed to visit Lonisburg and administer the Sacrament and preach at discretion before the next meeting.

Washington was chosen as the place and Wednesday before the last Sabbath in March next as the time of the next stated meeting. The reading of historical sketches was postponed to the next meeting. Rev. John S. Watkins was appointed to write the history of the Raleigh First church from the close of Dr. Lacy's ministry to the present time. Col. Thos. M. Holt was re-elected trustee of Davidson College, to serve four years.

The commissioners to the General Assembly, Rev. Messrs. Alexander and Johnston, reported attendance on the meeting of that body at Lonisville, Ky.

Presbytery adjourned Tuesday at noon, to meet in Statesville during the Synod at call of the moderator.

THE STRANGER IN CHURCH.

In our churches we do not make enough of what may be called the gospel of the handgrip. There the utmost cordiality of personal intercourse should be exhibited. After every prayer meeting there should be cheerful mingling of God's people in conversation. Inquiries should be made about each other's "good estate;" there should be no stiffness or formal introductions. Especially should strangers be welcomed by an immediate approach to them. This same rule of Christian courtesy applies just as strongly to the Sabbath service.—Presbyterian at Work.

CHRIST UNVEILED.

A Spanish artist was once employed to paint the "Last Supper." It was his object to throw all the sublimity of his art into the figure and countenance of the Lord Jesus; but he put on the table in the foreground some chased cups, the workmanship of which was exceedingly beautiful. When his friends came to see the picture on the easel, every one said, "what beautiful cups!" "Ah!" said he "I have made a mistake; these cups divert the eyes of the spectator from the Lord, to whom I wished to direct the attention of the observer." And he forthwith took up his brush and blotted them from the canvas, that the strength and vigor of the chief object might be prominently seen and observed. Thus all Christians should feel their great study to be Christ's exaltation; and whatever is calculated to hinder man from beholding Him in all the glory of His person and work should be removed out of the way! "God forbid that I should glory, save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ."

MARRIAGE.

As a school of character matrimony tends to develope truthfulness, which is the cornerstone of character, and the occurrences of common life are continually showing us that there is no relationship in which truth is so greatly rewarded or falsity and disloyalty so bitterly punished as in this estate. The parental relations ensuing from matrimony develope courage, patriotism and loyalty, as shown in the father's defence of his home and the mother's defence of her children, and the changed and improved attitude of those who have thus given hostage to fortune. Matrimony developes also self-control and self-sacrifice, which issue from mutual labor, mutual affection, mutual interest and the mutual suffering of domestic affliction. As a conservator of the home and family ties we find that the stability of social order and the hope of human progress are involved in the preservation of this estate. All human associations may dissolve or change without fatal disaster to society if the family survives. When we consider what life and society would be without the parental and fraternal instincts that run through it like golden threads, the imperious necessity of preserving the home and family ties becomes strikingly apparent, and when we ask theorists what they would offer us in place of this sacred estate we are amazed at the futility and inadequacy of their answer. I offer to young women some practical hints. Remember you are not forced to marry. There is an honorable career for you outside of matrimony. Never marry a man whom you cannot respect. The marriage of convenience is an unholy compact. Never marry a man to reform him. Avoid certain popular, but lying maxims, about the reformed debauchee making the best husband. Choose an honorable single life before an alliance with a man who lacks the prime elements of truthfulness, personal purity, honor and sobriety.

A religion that never suffices to govern a man will never suffice to save him. That which does not distinguish him from a sinful world will never distinguish him from a perishing world.—John Howe.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

FOREIGN.

Gleaned from exchanges:

Under the auspices of the "Indian Female Instruction Society" nine ladies have just left for India as Zenana missionaries.

The debt of the French Protestant Missionary Society, 60,000 francs, has been paid by private subscriptions.

At Canterbury, England, the seat of the Archepiscopal palace, they are building a Presbyterian church.

Native Christians only two or three years out of heathenism are building and sustaining churches and schools on the Mortlock Islands in Micronesia.

At a meeting of this Presbytery last week a resolution was passed that a strong remonstrance be sent to the Colonial Secretary against John Dunn's arbitrary exclusion of missionaries from Zulnland. Astonishment was expressed that such a "character" should have been entrusted with such powers.

Many persons will learn with interest that of late the health of the Rev. John Cumming D. D., F. R. S. E., has somewhat improved, although he is still utterly unfit for ministerial work. A fund sufficient to secure the sum of £300 as an annuity to the Rev. gentleman has been realised.

The Old Believers and peasants of the village of Butkeff, having built a new church in lieu of the one destroyed seven years ago, have been condemned by the Circuit Court of Vladmir to two months' imprisonment. The church is to be sold, and the proceeds handed to the provincial authorities.

The Greenock Presbytery, United Presbyterian Church, Scotland, has voted unanimously to suspend five of the elders of Gourock church, Mr. Macrae's old parish, for refusing to return to their allegiance.

A splendid new church was opened in Liverpool, England, lately, by Rev. Dr. Dikes. The church, which cost £15,000, was erected by a few friends as a memorial of the union between the two branches of the English Presbyterians.

Two Protestant native preachers have been imprisoned by the Spanish authorities at Figueras, and that in the most filthy and unendurable prison. The Spain of Philip II., of the Inquisition of the Anto da Fe, is still the same, except in the onteide moral pressure of the nineteenth century.

An important concession to foreigners has been made at Tientsin, where a large hospital for the treatment of disease has been built by Leung Chang in gratitude for the recovery of his wife under the treatment of foreign physicians after the native doctors had given her up. The hospital is entirely under the care of foreign medical men.

A deputation from the General Council of the Evangelical Alliance, which represents England, France, Germany, Switzerland, and other countries, will have an interview with the Emperor of Austria for the purpose of presenting his Majesty with a memorial having reference to various recent acts of religious persecution in the Austrian Empire.—Mr. Alderman M'Arthur, M. P., and the Hon. and Rev. E. V. Bligh have been appointed the delegates for England on the deputation. They left for Vienna on Thursday morning.

The Secretary of the (London) Prayer-Book Revision Society has sent the London Weekly Review some papers on a subject of the very gravest importance to the community at large, namely, that of Auricular Confession and Priestly Absolution. These papers consist of the copy of a Bill introduced into Parliament by Lord Ebury (President of the Society) near the end of the last session, for the alteration of a few passages in the Book of Common Prayer which have been wrongfully alleged in support of Auricular Confession and Priestly Absolution. When this bill is re-introduced by Lord Ebury next session, it is proposed to add a clause to the following effect: "Wherever in the Book of Common Prayer the word 'Priest' is used as designating a minister of the Church of England, such word 'Priest' shall be deemed and held to have the meaning of the word 'Presbyter,' and no other meaning." It is said that Lord Shaftesbury has expressed concurrence in the step taken by Lord Ebury. A form of petition in favor of the bill has also been forwarded to us, in which regret is expressed at the rapid increase of the practice of Auricular Confession and Priestly Absolution in this country, "as being alike inconsistent with the Protestant character of the National Church, injurious to public morals, and subversive of the peace of families," and it is added that some members of the Episcopal Bench, when appealed to, have expressed their inability, under the existing state of the law to deal effectually with the evils complained of

An incident, noteworthy as bearing upon the attitude of the French Government to the Romish Church, took place at a recent sitting of the Paris Municipal Council. On assuming office as prefet of the Seine, M. Herold found that all patients received into public hospitals were, failing a declaration of religion, assumed to be Roman Catholics, and placed under the charge of the chaplain. This the Prefet regarded as an abuse, and he forthwith ordained that every sick person should, on entering a hospital, be asked, first, if he wished to declare his faith, and next, an affirmative reply having been given, of what particular sect he claimed membership and spiritual succor. The change met, it is said, with public approval, but on September 29 the Cardinal-Archbishop of Paris issued a circular directing the chaplains to ignore M. Herold's regulation, and proceed with their duties as though it did not exist. At a meeting of the Council to which reference has been made, M. Delabrousse drew the Prefet's attention to the circular, and demanded an assurance that any chaplain preferring the authority of the Archbishop to that of the department he served should be at once dismissed. In reply, M. Herold evaded discussion of the circular by assuming to regard it as a paper foreign to his administration. He went on to say, however, that his new rule would be enforced without regard to exterior acts, but with "much moderation." Subsequently he declared that it is only possible to proceed a step at a time in the road to such liberty as his interpellators demanded, adding, "I believe I have done something, and I despair not of doing more."

A weak mind is like a microscope; which magnifies trifling things, but cannot receive great ones.—Chesterfield.

The Presbyterian.

JOHN McLAURIN. - - - Editor.

WILMINGTON, N. C.:

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 19, 1879.

The Synod of North Carolina, at its late meeting, passed the following resolution:

"The Synod commends the N. C. PRESBYTERIAN as a paper worthy of the confidence and liberal patronage of our people, and hereby encourages its ministers and elders to aid in extending its circulation, until every family is supplied with a copy."

OUR SABBATH SCHOOLS.

One of the hopeful signs of the times is the very great interest manifested in the work of our Sabbath schools. The discussions of the subject have taken a wide range, comprehending the nature and necessity of these organizations not only, but the modes and principles to be observed in their proper conduct. Necessarily there exists some diversity of views on the latter branch of the subject, but on the former all evangelical Christians may be said to agree; at least, any dissent is remarkable only because of its singularity.

In some quarters there is a disposition to go quite beyond the sphere in which Sabbath schools should move and institute dramatic entertainments for them. We heartily agree with a contemporary that no more reason exists for providing such entertainments for Sunday schools, as such, than for organizing stock-broking concerns for our church members. Some may stand aghast at our temerity, but we demur at the expression that the "Sabbath school is the nursery of the church." We are not, in a spirit of contradiction, quibbling about words, nor should we object, but for the impression, too often carried into practice, that the Sabbath school is to be promoted and sustained, not to say principally worked, by amusing the children.

The Sunday school is a school where children are to be taught as to their relations to God, and so trained in their duty to Him, that in due course they will be prepared to take their places in His church, and appreciating their responsibilities will be fitted to perform them. The grand object for which such schools are instituted should never for a moment be lost to view or obscured.

Presbyterian Sabbath schools should be schools of training for the Presbyterian Church—distinctively so, and decidedly so. With the Bible itself as the cardinal text book, the Westminster Catechisms and the Confession of Faith should be associated, and children taught that these latter are but Bible truths shaped into a different mode of expression. The periodical publications of our own Church, designed to aid in the dissemination of truth, should in all cases be preferred and diligently used. Call this illiberal who will, it is sheer, practical common sense, that those who believe that Presbyterianism is the purest form of doctrinal Christianity should teach their children so.

The children of Presbyterian parents, consecrated to God in baptism, are members of his visible Church, and should be taught, at home and in the Sabbath school, that the whole duties, privileges and responsibilities of full membership await them; and that arriving at years of discretion it should naturally follow that they turn from sin unto holiness, and willingly accept the service of Christ, and God who is faithful will seal the covenant of their childhood to their everlasting salvation.

The children of our Sabbath schools, in order to qualify for their future blessed service, should not only be taught sound doctrine, but they should be trained to its practical application. Broad views of the work of the Church in its entirety should be inculcated, and their aid in furtherance of the cause of Christ should be invoked. Giving, not to one but to every cause in which the Church is engaged, should be laid before them as not duty only, but the highest privilege.

In some schools collections are taken for school purposes, and for them only. When practicable (and when is it not practicable?) books, lesson papers and all things necessary for the school itself, should be provided by the church to which any school belongs, that unselfishness may be promoted, and looking away from themselves they may grow to regard the work of the whole Church as theirs.

These are not fanciful theories, but convictions clearly formed and entirely capable of being realized in practice. Children well taught and trained can be made the lever which will lift our Church to a much larger measure of duty than otherwise it can ever attain. The great hope of the Presbyterian Church lies in the proper training of the children of the covenant.

THE WHOLE WORK OF THE CHURCH.

It will be remembered that very near the hour of adjournment of the late Synod, Rev. Dr. Smith offered a resolution for the appointment of a "Committee on the State of the Church." As time did not admit of the thorough discussion of the subject, it was very properly docketed for consideration at the next Synod.

The resolution referred to contemplates through the Committee an annual report to Synod of the number of evangelists employed, number of churches organized, number of conversions, &c.—in general, whatever will set forth the work, condition, growth, prospect and needs of the Church.

The views of Dr. Smith as to the propriety of the action proposed we think will upon reflection commend themselves to all. The reports of various committees are able, and so far as they go satisfactory, but they are necessarily imperfect as to details, and in a retrospect of the entire work of the Church in the State, the impression forced upon the mind is, that our knowledge is fragmentary, at least not so arranged as to give even to members of Synod a clear, concise, yet full and complete knowledge of what has been done, how the work stands and what is required for our future well-being and advancement.

Let any one undertake to answer to himself with regard to what was done within our bounds during the past year, as to the number of souls converted, new churches organized, ministers ordained, evangelists employed, new territory occupied; what monies were raised for pastoral work, and for the various objects of church and mission work, home and foreign; the number of ministers, elders, deacons, licentiates, candidates, whole number of communicants—we say let any one undertake to grasp his knowledge of these, and he will appreciate how little ready knowledge he has of many of them.

By careful and laborious examination of reports and of the Assembly's minutes, these items can be gathered with tolerable accuracy by each for himself, but few will task themselves to acquire the information, and the general audience at Synod, and the members of the Church at large, by reasons of the difficulties, will remain ignorant of what it is most desirable to know.

A large and judiciously selected committee would be able to make such a report as would present at one view the whole work of the Church, and prove suggestive as to its special wants. Such a report would moreover tend to encourage the hearts, and better concentrate the activities of the whole Church.

These we think are the views of the author resolution, and in them we fully concur.

A reference to the reports of the benevolent work of our Synod as published on the first page of this paper will go far we think to confirm the propriety of the proposed action. Agents of the causes confess that on many points of interest they can furnish no information, and this not because of any lack of interest certainly, nor of diligence, but because no single person can gather and collate all of the facts in reference even to one branch of the work.

Difficulties will present themselves to many minds in the prosecution of the plan, but we suppose none will object to the desirableness of the results contemplated. Dr. Smith would have the committee consist of the stated clerk of the Synod and the stated clerks of the Presbyteries, as having the information more readily available, with perhaps one or two others.

The whole subject is worthy of thought and discussion, and any imperfections in the outworking can be corrected by experince.

THE SYNOD OF ALABAMA.

Met in Talladega on the 29th ult. Twenty-two ministers and eighteen ruling elders were present. Rev. Dr. McIlwaine was present, and addressed the Synod on the various benevolent causes of which he is Secretary. Rev. Dr. J. K. Hazen addressed the Synod on the cause of Publication. A committee was appointed to again lay the subject of Sabbath desecration before the Legislature of Alabama. An interesting and encouraging report was made with regard to the Orphans' Home, of which Rev. A. R. Holderby is principal. Ministers and sessions were recommended to encourage the formation of colored Presbyterian churches in the bounds of Synod as soon as and wherever practicable. Special action to secure contributions to Columbia Seminary was taken.

GOOD NEWS FOR COLUMBIA SEMINARY.

The following, so highly creditable to the Adger family, and which will be so welcome to the friends of Columbia Theological Seminary, we copy from the Southwestern Presbyterian:

"We had occasion, sometime since, to speak of the failure of James Adger & Co., of Charleston. The failure was not only distressing on account of the general esteem cherished for the firm itself, but also for the fact that among the liabilities of the firm there is reported nearly $30,000 of the funds of our Theological Seminary at Columbia.

We see in the Charleston Courier that a statement of their affairs has been published. The liabilities amount to about $1,600,000. Of this amount over $800,000 is due to different members of the Adger family. Something over $300,000 consist of funds held in trust. With a magnanimity which lends additional lustre to their honored name, the different branches of the family withdraw all their own claims until, first, these trust funds, and after that, all other outside creditors shall have their claims satisfied.

By this arrangement the Seminary claims are made perfectly good. They will be paid in full, and all other creditors will be paid in full. If there is any loss it will fall on the members of the firm and the members of their family, who voluntarily assume to share their burden."

DEATH OF REV. T. D. LEA.

The Christian Observer says: The name of this venerable minister, who has been for some time in infirm health, is to be added to the roll of those who have gone to their reward. He died in Sherman, Texas, on the 4th of November, aged 64 years and 9 months. Rev. J. S. Moore, D. D., sends the following brief sketch, conveying the sad news to his wide circle of friends:

"Rev. Mr. Lea had been suffering for years with bronchial affection, and of late had a complication of diseases. Death came, and bade his sufferings cease, and did it so gently that his watchful friends did not know when he died. He 'fell asleep' as quietly as an infant on its mother's bosom. During his illness, when prostrated by disease and racked with pain, when asked how it was with his soul he answered that God had given him peace and grace far beyond what he could have expected. While there were no raptnrous heavenly visions given him, he rested securely and sweetly on the promises of God. He feared no evil as he passed through the valley of the shadow of death.

"The deceased was born in Leasburg, N. C., and graduated at Centre College, Danville, Ky. He studied theology at Princeton Seminary, and was a good scholar and sound theologian. He had been principal of some of our best academies, such as Montrose, Mississippi, and Silliman Institute, in Louisiana. The work which he loved most was preaching, and he never lost an opportunity to preach when able to do so. He began his ministry in Pennsylvania, and had preached in eight States. He was devotedly attached to the doctrines and order of the Presbyterian Church, and he was not ashamed to defend and propagate her principles. His delight was in the house of the Lord. No more faithful attendant or diligent listener could be found in the sanctuary, when no longer able to preach himself. He was always striving to serve his Master in some way. Our Church has lost a faithful, consecrated, true man; his family a loving and devoted father. Our loss is, no doubt, his gain.

"'Servant of God, well done!
Rest from thy loved employ;
The battle fought, the victory won,
Enter thy Master's joy.'"

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

Our readers will pardon us for giving up the first page mainly to reports and abstracts of the work of the Church. We have thought best to devote the space required at this time, so as to allow us the room in the future. The reports are mainly short and should be read. Communications that have been held over will appear as we can spare the room for them. We thank those who favor us and beg that they will be patient. Our wish is to give at least four columns of selected matter on first page every week. Communications should be short. Long communications are not read.

The death of Rev. Jacob Abbott, who died a short time since, is an event worthy of being specially chronicled. The Christian at Work says this of him: "Mr. Abbott was successively a pastor and principal of an admirable school for ladies in this city; but his great success was gleaned in the field of literature, and although the books for the young people have multiplied to a marvelous degree, we doubt if, on the whole, any author has done the work that Mr. Abbott has done. His Young Christian Series, Franconia Stories, and Rollo books, are works of their kind the best possible; and if any reader thinks it easy to write a book for the young folks, we will set before him no severer task than that of rivaling our dead author in his own field. As a writer Mr. Abbott was entertaining and instructive: he never played with facts, nor took the young folks on the boundary-line which separates fact from fiction. To have given such a pure, wholesome and elevating literature to the succeeding generations, is to render beneficent service, for which our author's name will always be held in honored and grateful remembrance. Mr. Abbott left behind, we believe, four sons, two of them distinguished as lawyers, the others being clergymen, and one of the latter the Rev. Dr. Lyman Abbott, the accomplished editor of the Christian Union. Time has been busy the present year, and has gathered many sheaves for his Master; but it has taken from earth none more honored in the field of a wholesome literature than the late Jacob Abbott."

Once in a while news has come from Turkey which raised hopes that the domination of Mahommedanism will be broken, but all such hopes have been premature. A correspondent of the Christian Union cites some facts which prove that reforms, slight as they are, do not give to a Christian any rights in Turkey. Equality as between a Mohammedan and a Christian there is nothing of, and the law does not allow a Mohammedan to change his religon. Two years ago, on account of the difficulties, the Church Missionary Society gave up its mission to the Turks, and now Dr. Koelle, the missionary of that society, and the only missionary in Constantinople, is there on his own authority.

Dr. Koelle, some days ago, was arrested and all papers found on him were seized. These papers were some religious works translated into the Turkish language. A learned Turk who assisted in the translations was thrust into prison, and the papers are calling for summary punishment upon him.

As the government is Mohammedan, every Turk who changes his religion is regarded as not only an apostate but a traitor.

The British Government has been rather compromised by Sir Garnet Wolseley's appointment of one John Dunn to the government of one of the provinces of Zululand. Dunn, some twenty years since, voluntarily renounced civilization, and as far as he could, of course, Christianity along with it, and settling in Zululand relapsed into the barbarism of its inhabitants. He has always been an opponent of the missions, and has done more than perhaps any other one obstacle, to impede their progress. Since his appointment he has denied to the missionaries the right to settle on his territory, though he is said to have been induced to modify this restriction. A man who could willingly renounce Christianity, even only nominal Christianity, for heatheism, or civilization for barbarism, certainly is not the man for such a place as Dunn occupies. The people of Great Britain will regulate that matter we may be very sure.

A contemporary says: "A great many people say, 'I liked so much of that sermon, or that editorial, or that address, or that casual remark; I will write and tell him so.' And then a day or two pass, and then comes the thought, 'Well, I guess I won't—it's too late, anyway.' Which brings us to remark that it is always well to yield to a kindly impulse at once, and above all, don't sacrifice it to a second thought about 'the proprieties,' or something of that sort. There are too few kind words said at best, and the one who purposes to try his friend with a compliment is not apt to go wrong. There isn't too much kindness in the world."

Of a truth it does no harm to encourage any one, when with due regard to truth you can do so. A kindly word often lifts a heavy burden from a desponding heart.

The Baptists are not generally behind, it must be allowed, in any well watered country, but here is what a correspondent of the Examiner and Chronicle, writing from California, has to say:

"In proof of the healthier feeling that everywhere exists on the Chinese question, may be cited the greater emphasis that all Protestant denominations, excepting the Baptist, are now putting upon distinct Chinese evangelization. Kearneyism and its adjuncts practically killed Baptist Chinese work in San Francisco. The record is one for the denomination in California to sit in sorrow over. The Methodists, the Congregationalists, the Presbyterians, and the Episcopalians in San Francisco, and in Oakland, have large constitnencies of Chinese 'schools,' 'homes' and 'churches.' Thousands of dollars are spent in them every year."

Our ministers are recommended by the Boston Transcript to use the bicycle. It is said that English ministers make extensive use of it for exercise in their pastoral visitations.

The Christian at Work says: "The papers are discussing the definition of the Protestant Episcopal Church in McClintock & Strong's Cyclopedia to which the Christian at Work first called attention. The definition is: 'That portion of the Church of Christ which has its local habitation in the United States of America.' Such a definition won't hold water enough for sprinkling a little baby."

We should rather think not. That cyclopedia is likely to be well advertised. The publishers, we may be sure, were caught napping by whoever penned the article in which the definition is found.

NEWS NOTES.

We specially invite news from all quarters for this column.

A lady writes us from Asheville, N. C.:

"We were cheered at our last communion a few weeks since, by the addition of six persons to our church and two persons a few weeks before."

A series of meetings commencing on Wednesday night of last week were held in the Second Presbyterian church of this city. They were very delightful. Three young persons were received into the communion of the church on profession of faith.

The heartfelt sympathies of the friends of Rev. James Kelly, in this Synod, will go out to him on reading the following sad intelligence:

ELIZABETHTOWN, N. C., Nov. 14.

Dear Brother McLaurin: From Leeland, S. C., comes the sad news that on yesterday our dear brother, Rev. James Kelly, lost his eldest child (in her sixth year) by that dreadful scourge diphtheria. Dejannette Mary was a bright little girl, and we all loved her the more tenderly because she was an invalid. May God in mercy spare the little brother and sister left behind, and comfort the sorrowing parents. In haste, I am yours,

A. McFADYEN.

INSTALLATIONS.

The committee of Fayetteville Presbytery appointed to conduct the installation services at Centre and Shoe Heel churches, met on the day chosen, and performed the pleasant duties assigned them.

On Sunday morning, Nov. 16th, 1879, Rev. Roger Martin was installed pastor of Centre church. Rev. John H. Coble of Laurinburg presided, preached the sermon and propounded the constitutional questions. His text was from the parable of the sower, Luke viii: 5-8. His subject was the "Hearers of the Word." Rev. W. S. Lacy of Jonesboro delivered the charge to the pastor, and Rev. H. G. Hill of Fayetteville the charge to the people.

It was a large, solemn and attentive congregation. I could not but recall my last visit. The sacred edifice was the scene of mourning and sorrow, clad in the habiliments of woe, and every one saddened and overwhelmed with grief. Men may pass away, but the Church abides. Men, the faithful and beloved, are called to their rest and reward; but their memory lives and their works do follow them. One standard-bearer falls on the walls of Zion, and God raises up another. With precious recollections of the past, with earnest resolves for usefulness and hopeful purposes for the future, these chastened and favored people enter into new relations, and form their solemn covenant with God and His servant. It was a day to be remembered, and the union consummated promises under the blessing of God great usefulness and comfort.

At night, Rev. Roger Martin was installed pastor of Shoe Heel church, the two congregations of Centre and Shoe Heel being united in one pastoral charge. Rev. H. G. Hill presided, preached the sermon and propounded the constitutional questions. The subject of his discourse was the Divine Estimate of the Church, as shown in what God does for Zion, based upon Isa. xliii: 4. Rev. J. H. Coble delivered the charge to the pastor, and Rev. W. S. Lacy the charge to the people.

These interesting services, attended by a large congregation, were held in the new and comely house of worship which the good people of this young and energetic church are building. It is yet unfinished, but will soon be ready for occupancy. Well-proportioned and spacious, the church is an ornament to the village and a credit to the congregation. Under most favorable auspices the church and pastor enter upon their work, and the pastoral relation thus constituted and consummated gives promise of hope and service.

The simple and impressive directions of the Book (I started to say New Book) of Church Order were followed; and the service was solemn and edifying. The exercises in each case, though of necessity somewhat protracted, were attended with interest and seriousness, and the solemn vows and devotional exercises engaged in with due views of responsibility. Many are the ardent prayers that this charge may be as of old, crowned with special blessings. Pastor and people alike acknowledge the hand of Providence, the guiding of the Great Head of the Church in the union. May there ever be the marks of the Divine favor on both. W. S. L.

A friend sends us the following items:

At a meeting of the Directors of Columbia Theological Seminary, held on 11th inst., Rev. Dr. W. E. Boggs was elected a Director in place of Rev. John Douglas, deceased.

Dr. Plumer declines to visit the churches in behalf of the Seminary, on account of his age and increasing infirmities.

A Columbia paper states: "The deficiency in the income is still somewhere between $350 and $400 per month, and the directors will have to close the Seminary after this term, which ends in May next, unless the churches come to their assistance and contribute the funds necessary to carry it on and pay off an already existing debt of $1,000. The directors are determined not to use any of the endowment for current expenses, feeling that as trustees they are bound not to do so."

COLLECTION FOR THE ORPHAN ASYLUM.

It is to be hoped that the religious and secular press of the State will give publicity to and the ministers of all denominations will carry out fully the proposition to take up a collection for the benefit of the Oxford Orphan Asylum on Thanksgiving Day, the 27th instant, and thus by our works manifest a true appreciation of God's goodness to us during the past year.

If unable to attend the services hand in your private contributions to your pastor or to the Master of the nearest Masonic Lodge, as may be convenient, whom I feel assured will cheerfully forward it to Brother Mills, the Superintendent of the Asylum.

We most cordially endorse the appeal above made to the sense of gratitude, and to the sense of humanity of our citizens. Let us help the orphans.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

The Throat and the Voice, by J. Cohen, M. D., Lecturer on Disease of Throat and Chest in Jefferson Medical College, &c., No. 5 of American Health Primers. 50 cents. Lindsay & Blakiston, Philadelphia. 1879.

We call the special attention of clergymen and all public speakers to this instructive number of the Health Primers.

We have the November number of The Missionary Herald, published by the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, 1 Somerset street, Boston. $1 10 a year. It is an especially valuable number, as it contains the Report at the recent Annual Meeting in Syracuse; and several interesting papers read there, as "Ten Years in Japan," and "The Proposed Mission in Central Africa."

The Medical Intelligencer, a Quarterly Bulletin of New Books on Medicine, and the Collateral Sciences. By Lindsay & Blakiston, Philadelphia.

Messrs. S. W. Partridge & Co., No. 9 Paternoster Row, London, send us the charming November numbers of The Infants' Magazine, The Children's Friend, and The Band of Hope Review, all illustrated profusely.

Messrs. Charles Scribner's Sons inform us that they will soon issue, or are just bringing out several works of universal interest, viz: "The life and works of Gilbert Stuart," the great artist, with illustration by the new photogravure process; "Letters of Charles Dickens;" "Dr. Shedds' Commentary on Romans;" "Uhlhorn's Conflict of Christianity with Heathenism;" "The Boy's Frissari;" and Prof. Baird's "Rise of the Huguenots in France." Charming reading for December, with "Hans Brinker," and Haworth's, and Rousselet's "Serpent Charmer."

Sermons Preached on Various Occasions. By James DeKoven, D. D., late Warden of Racine College. With an Introduction, by Morgan Dix, S. T. D., Rector of Trinity Church. New York: D. Appleton & Co., 549 and 551 Broadway.

Dr. DeKoven, it will be remembered, was a man of the highest ritualistic views, and was nominated but failed of election to a bishoprie. We have not had the time to review the book thoroughly, but it is represented as displaying no great amount of scholarship, but yet evidencing fervent piety in the author, and calculated to please and instruct Dr. DeKoven's friends and admirers.

The Appletons, of New York, are publishing a series of works on Classical Authors. Euripides is now before us. It is a capital work. One that will repay any reader who delights in the study of those who have enriched literature by their works. The price is only 60 cents.

Di Cary is a novel also from Appleton. By M. Jacqueline Thornton. It belongs to Appleton's Library of American Literature. The price is 75 cents.

ECLECTICISMS.

THAT CANNOT BE EXCEEDED.

Interior:

What influence on earth can exceed that spiritual beauty which comes from a long life consecrated early at the cross, spent in the service of God and humility, and ripening daily for its translation to the higher type of heaven.

NOT IN THAT SUCCESSION.

Religious Herald:

A minister of the gospel who is seen to be more anxious about the length of his vacation and the amount of his salary, than about the purity of the church to which he ministers, or the salvation of the souls for whom he is set to watch, is manifestly not in the real apostolic succession, whatever human credentials he may be able to show.

THE RICH POOR MAN.

Nashville Christian Advocate:

We met the man who is not able to take his church paper. He owns a large farm, is building a new and costly house, and when we met him was driving a span of blooded horses. There was a pinched and hard look about him that indicated poverty—of some sort. But it was not of the purse.

WRITING FOR THE PRESS

Christian Observer:

Another remark is, that when a man writes for the press, he should first find out whether he has anything to say—what it is that he wants to say—and then say it briefly and clearly. A theological student once took a sermon to Dr. Dabney for a friendly criticism. After listening to it, the doctor asked him, "Mr. ——, what is the point that you aim at in that sermon?" On receiving an answer, the doctor replied, "Now go all over it and see whether every head of your discourse aims directly at that point." The same advice is excellent for writers for the press.

GREATNESS.

Presbyterian Journal:

It was a remark of John Hunter, that "there never was a man who wanted to be a great man who ever was a great man. For great men have endeavored always to do some great action that seemed to tend to some great good, and the effect made them great. Wanting to be great is vanity without power."

Something parallel to this was Longfellow's saying: "That the talent of success is nothing more than doing what you can do well, and doing well whatever you do, without a thought of fame."

But the climax of the sentiment, after all, is found in the inspired precept, "Whatsoever you do, do all to the glory of God."

THE TELLTALE TRAIT.

Sunday School Times:

A personal trait does not need to be a great or a prominent one in order to be a telltale revelation of character. It is said that a famous old artist once saw a statue of a faun standing in a public place. Desiring to give it an appearance of old age, he took his hammer, and with one light blow struck a single tooth from the jaw. That was enough; the marble no longer portrayed a young creature, and the perfectness of the other teeth ceased to have any importance. So, in personal character, it may be a very little thing which tells to the most careless observer the whole story of the badness or the goodness of that life.

WORK FOR OTHERS.

United Presbyterian:

It very often happens that Christians try to secure spiritual growth by simply attending to themselves. They work away at some kind of self-discipline, shut themselves of from the world, devote themselves to what they call "revivals," all their efforts being centred on themselves, but the more they try the more they fail to get what they want. If they would but let themselves alone, and direct their energies to doing good work to somebody else, they would immediately make a start in healthy progress. Nobody will best grow under the simple regime of self-culture. It is when we forget ourselves, and looking off to the Saviour, try to help the sinning, suffering, struggling, fallen—then it is we will "bud forth pleasantly" in a promising life.

TRY IT.

Congregationalist:

He who really believes Infinite Love numbers the very hairs of his head, and orders all his steps with wisest regard to his best welfare, and who prays and works in the spirit of that faith, must find himself growing more and more into the state of mind and heart which Peter speaks of, as "Casting all your care on Him, for He careth for you." Try it, anxious and troubled soul.

WHAT WILL YOU DO?

Presbyterian:

Mr. Spurgeon is said to thus address every person seeking membership in his church: "Well, if you are received, what individual work are you going to take up and carry on for the Lord?" As a result he now has enrolled in his parish register 5,756 communicants, who represent just so many willing workers under his leadership. He saves his own strength by doing nothing that his parishioners can do equally well.

HOW TO TREAT THE PASTOR.

Canada Presbyterian:

Ministers are not perfect. Neither are wives, or husbands, or parents, or even children. They are not improved by detraction. He who will parade the faults of the pastor either has a false conception of the relation, or he is mean enough to do the same for a member of his own family. If you cannot conscientiously classify your pastor, as you ought, as among your dearest personal friends, to stab whose reputation would be to wound yourself, then class him among your enemies and fulfill the Lord's command, pray for him. Any good minister would prefer to have an enemy who should pray for him importunately than a so-called friend and brother who should slander him. Help, brethren of the churches. Do not hinder. Our work, our aim is one. Our spirit, our hearts should be one, also.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

SOUTHERN.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Savannah Presbytery dismissed Rev. H. F. Hoyt to the Presbytery of Macon. Mr. Cyrus Shelton was taken under the care of the Presbytery as a candidate for the ministry.

At the stated celebration of the Lord's Supper, at Pine Street church, last Sunday, Dr. Rutherford announced that seven persons had been received by the session, three of them on examination.—St. Louis Presbyterian.

Licentiate S. F. Taylor has received a unanimous call to the churches of Beulah and Hebron, in Kentucky.

Miss Belle Leyburn, who has been laboring as a missionary in Greece for several years, returned to this country a few days ago, and will make her home for the present with her sister, Mrs. Thomas E. Converse, in this city.—Christian Observer.

Three additions were made on the 2d inst. to the church at Owensboro, Ky., in charge of Rev. J. C. Molloy.

The labors of Rev. W. T. McElroy have been greatly encouraged at Crittenden. He has just closed a meeting of about ten days at Crittenden, in which thirteen persons were added to our Church—twelve on profession and one by letter. —Christian Observer.

A correspondent, writing from McAfee, Ky., November 5th, reports a very interesting meeting in progress at New Providence church, in which the Rev. Russell Cecil, the pastor, was assisted by Rev. Mr. Chisholm. At that date there had been twelve or thirteen additions to the church, and the interest was still increasing. —Christian Observer.

Rev. W. G. White, assisted by the Sunday School missionary, J. H. Hopper, on the 7th inst., closed a meeting of a few days' continuance, resulting in six additions to the church.—Christian Observer.

Twenty-two persons have lately been added to the Cottage Church at Nashville, Tenn. Services were conducted by Rev. Dr. T. A. Hoyt. Rev. H. S. Yerger has been invited to supply this church half his time, the remainder being given to Edgefield Second church.

Rev. A. R. Banks writes to the Christian Observer of the Cottage Grove church, in Louisiana: Two intelligent young ladies were received into the church on profession, and there were some eight or ten inquirers.

Changes in post-office addresses: Rev. W. H. Woods, from Middletown to Marlboro, Frederick county, Va.; Rev. A. Enloe, from Franklin to West Harpeth, Williamston county, Tenn.

Recently the new Presbyterian church at Mitchell's Station, Culpeper county, Va., was dedicated. Rev. Dr. M. D. Hoge preached the sermon. Rev. J. P. Strider has been forced to give up this charge on account of failing health, and has left for Florida.

Last Saturday the Rev. John Gordon Law was installed pastor of the church at Darlington C. H., S. C.—Southern Presbyterian.

Fifteen persons have been received into the church at Blacksburg, Va., within a few weeks past.

On last Sabbath Rev. J. H. Nall, D. D., was installed pastor of the Prytania Street church. Next Sabbath Rev. A. N. Wyckoff is to be installed pastor of the Canal Street church.—Southwestern Presbyterian.

Rev. R. N. Smith, pastor of the church at Rusk, Texas, writes to the Texas Presbyterian that on the 2d inst. seven persons were received into that church on profession of faith. He also informs that paper that two persons were admitted to the Jacksonville church.

Rev. R. S. Burwell writes to the Texas Presbyterian, Nov. 3d, with regard to the church at Denton, Texas: "Rev. J. S. Moore, D. D., of Sherman, came over and began services Friday night before the fourth Sunday of October. Results show that his earnest and instructive sermons did good, and all, not only Presbyterians but others who heard him, thoroughly enjoyed them. There were seven additions to the church, all on profession of faith, one husband and one wife, thus sending joy into two households, three young men and two girls. The whole church was greatly refreshed and encouraged, and Presbyterianism strengthened." He adds: "I sent you a postal card in August telling you of a meeting at West Fork church, in Tarrant county, thirty-five miles from here. No notice of it has appeared and I suppose you did not get the card. I had no help, though I tried hard to get some. Meeting continued five days. Three additions, one by letter and two on profession. Since then we have received one more member."

NORTHERN.

PRESBYTERIAN.

The Presbytery of Colorado has entered actively on mission work among the Mexicans, of whom there are 20,000 in the State. At their late meeting they licensed a Mexican ruling elder to preach to his countrymen.

Miss Fannie Cundell, of St. Louis, daughter of Rev. J. N. Cundell, is under appointment as missionary to Syria of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions. She will meet Dr. Jessup in London and go with him to her station at Tripoli.

The late meeting of the Colorado Presbytery licensed Jose Pabio Ortega, a member of the Legislature of New Mexico and a wealthy man, to preach the gospel.

The only Presbyterian church in Arizona is at Tucson.

The Herald and Presbyter says: The largest salary does not always make the loudest call. It is noted that Rev. Dr. Tucker, of New York, who leaves the Madison Square Presbyterian church for a Professorship in Andover Seminary, leaves also a salary of six thousand dollars, with the various perquisites of a wealthy city church, and accepts one of three thousand and no perquisites at all.

BAPTIST.

The new Second Baptist church of St. Louis, Mo., said to be the finest church building of that denomination in the world, and costing two hundred thousand dollars, was dedicated last week.

At Elizabeth, N. J., the First Baptist church has lost its house of worship, following the fate of the Broad Street church. It is now occupying the house on sufferance; but it is the property of the mortgagee.

METHODIST.

During the past year the receipts of the General Missionary Committee of the M. E. Church were $551,859 30, and the disbursements were $572,266 90, exhibiting a deficiency of $20,407 60. Though the total debt has been reduced $199,318 40 in the last three years, there is still a balance of $63,037 15 due. Contributions from the Western conferences have increased $15,180 70, while those from the Eastern conferences have decreased $14,686 50.

Grace Methodist church in Washington, Del., has just paid a debt of $67,000. The largest subscription was $12,500, the smallest one dollar. There were nineteen members who subscribed $1,000 each.

CONGREGATIONALIST.

The United Congregational church, Newport, Rev. Henry J. Van Dyke, Jr., pastor, is making quite extensive repairs upon the interior of its house of worship. The expense, which will amount to several hundred thousand dollars, is met by private subscriptions.

The Second Congregational church in Holyoke, Mass., Rev. J. L. R. Trask, pastor, received 30 persons to membership on Sabbath, November 9, 20 on confession. This makes 91 additions for the year. A mission chapel has been built at a cost of $1,000, and a Sunday school of 85 members gathered in.

PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL.

The late Bishop Whittingham of Maryland, in his will, devised his valuable library, consisting of about 15,000 volumes, to the Diocese of Maryland. The cost of the collection (which constituted nearly all of his worldly possessions) is estimated to have been from $15,000 to $20,000.

SECULAR MISCELLANY.

Unfavorable weather for cotton in October was reported for Georgia and Alabama. In all the other States it was favorable. The returns indicate a falling off of 15 pounds of lint per acre, which would make a deficit in this years crop of 290,000 bales of 450 pounds each. All of the South Atlantic States show the same decline. Texas falls off 35 per cent. The Mississippi States show decided gains.

The engrossed draft of the constitution of Kentucky, which it was feared was lost, has been found, and is safe among the archives.

The advance in wheat is giving the western millers trouble. In Cincinnati and St. Louis there is a movement looking to the closing of mills till wheat declines.

A Berlin dispatch says that the diphtheria is gaining more and more ground in Rome. The disease has attained such frightful proportions in some regions that the mortality exceeds the births.

The Greensboro Patriot is greatly improved under its new management.

The Concord Press comes semi-weekly. We never could understand how our good brother McLauchlin could get up and keep up so large a paper, and thrive upon the job; but he seems to do so.

Maj. Wright Huske, of Fayetteville, gathered nearly 470 bushels of corn from eight acres of land.

The Greensboro Patriot says that Dr. R. K. Gregory and I. F. Davis have made an improvement in the steam engine, which practical engineers pronounce the best improvement that has been made in twenty-five years.

The New York Flower Mission received 144,000 bouquets during the season, and distributed them among the hospitals, prisons, asylums and tenements of the city. The rooms at No. 239 Fourth avenue are now closed, but will be open about December 1st to receive evergreens and other objects suitable for use in trimming asylums and hospitals during the Christmas season.—Christian Intelligencer.

A Californian sends flowers across the continent by taking a large potato, cutting it in two, scooping out most of the pulp, putting in a flower and joining the potato again. The moisture of the potato keeps the flower fresh during the journey.

Maximilian's widow, so long known to the sympathetic world as "Poor Carlotta," gives promise of a speedy recovery from the mental disorder from which she has suffered so acutely since the tragic death of her unfortunate husband. Her memory has returned, and she converses freely and lucidly of her painful experience in Mexico. It is her intention to write a history of the attempt to found an American empire, and it is expected that the work will be graphic and of the deepest interest.—Interior.

To the long list of antiquities tombs, Mosaic pavements, coins, etc., found of late on the Mount of Olives is now to be added the latest—a rock cut tunnel, about sixty-five feet in length, now dry, but in perfect state, leading into the mountain to a cistern of large size. It occurs in the possessions of the Carmelite Monastery. These indications, to which there seems to be no end, show very clearly that during the days of Christian occupation the entire Mount was built upon with dwellings or structures of public utility and of much art, as well as cost.—Independent.

Harvard College is to be congratulated on the receipt of the largest bequest in its history, one which will amount, all told, to something like half a million of dollars. The generous testator is the late Walter Hastings, of Boston; who gives substantially from $200,000 to $250,000 for the erection of a new college hall in memory of his father, grand-father, and great grand-father, all of whom were Harvard graduates, and the remainder of his estate, after certain life trusts shall have been discharged, for a Walter Hastings fund, the income of which is to be expended at the discretion of the President and Fellows.—Christian Union.

IMPORTANT TO FARMERS.

Dr. A. R. Ledoux, in charge of the Experiment Station, sends us the following circular relative to chemicals for agricultural purposes. It is important to dealers and farmers. Introducing the circular Dr. Ledoux says:

"Your farmer readers will notice that all the materials which they use in composting can be purchased, under certain conditions, anywhere. Acid phosphate and dissolved bone must be purchased from some of the forty-five manufacturers who have paid the tax and have the right to sell their phosphates and dissolved bones in North Carolina. Guided by this circular your readers will have no difficulty in procuring goods from parties who have the right to sell, and, if cheated in their purchases, can obtain the assistance of the Experiment Station to secure redress."

Action of the Board of Agriculture.—At a meeting of the Board of Agriculture, October 15, 1879, it was resolved that the following articles should be admitted free of tax, with such additions as may afterwards be made by the Executive Committee, upon consultation with the Chemist: Ground bone, bone ash, ground bone black, ground phosphate rock, or other mineral phosphate, nitrogenous organic matter commercially free from phosphoric acid and potash, nitrate of soda, nitrate of potash (or saltpetre), sulphate of ammonia, muriate of ammonia, kainit, sulphate of magnesia, sulphate of potash, lime, plaster, ground cracklings, ground tankage, salt and oil of vitriol.

Upon the following articles the license tax will be exacted: Any of the above articles, or others, sold for fertilizers or fertilizing material under any trade mark or proprietary brand, dissolved bone, dissolved bone black, dissolved mineral phosphates (all acid phosphates or superphosphates) and any two or more of the articles mentioned in the first list, if combined, either chemically or mechanically.

Major Lynch's School, at High Point, we are pleased to learn, has opened very flatteringly. Sixty scholars is the limit Major Lynch proposes to receive. The number of pupils is now about forty.

Messrs. Yeargan, Petty & Co., of Raleigh, N. C., are large Jobbers of Dry Goods, Notions, Boots and Shoes. They feel confident that they can sell these goods to MERCHANTS on better terms, and more satisfactorily, than the Merchants can obtain them further North.

Death of Mrs. Northrop.—On the morning of the 18th inst., shortly after midnight, died, Mary, wife of Mr. William Harriss Northrop, of this city. She was in her 36th year.

Nature had been true, in depicting in the face and form of the deceased, the inimitable grace and loveliness of her inner spirit. To every life its sphere of duty. 'Twas hers to move calmly among a circle of loving relatives and friends and gild the path to Heaven. A disposition so singularly lovely, as seeming almost to have escaped the Fall, was sanctified by that humble repose on Christ which marked her for the crown.

God's will! We know not now, but we shall know hereafter.

For real good beef, you may go to Mott & Campen. We know about it:—and for Insurance, commend us to DeRosset & Northrop. The very best companies are represented, and the Agent will serve you conscientiously, readily, and in every respect satisfactorily.

Rev. R. L. Dabney, LL.D., Ham. Sid. Col. Va. Messrs Polk, Miller & Co:
Vest Pocket Cure is highly esteemed here by the regular Medical Faculty and the people. It is excellent for Indigestion and Flatulent Colic sedative, soporific, tonic, slightly aperient, without nausea.

No Safer Remedy can be had for Coughs and Colds or any trouble of the throat, than "Brown's Bronchial Troches." Imitations are offered for sale, many of which are injurious. The genuine Bronchial Troches are sold only in boxes.

MARRIED.

☞No notice of a marriage or death will be inserted unless accompanied by a responsible name, which is wanted not for publication but as a guaranty of good faith.

October 29th by the Rev. D. E. Jordan, at the residence of the bride's father, in Oxford, N. C., Mr. N. B. CANADY and Miss MARY C. YOUNG, daughter of Dr. P. W. Young, all of Oxford.

Also by the same at the Presbyterian church in Henderson, Nov. 12th, Mr. R. JEMSON JONES to Miss MOLLIE D., daughter of Mr. W. L. Meadows, of Wilmington, N. C.

By Rev. H. McLean, November 6th, 1879, in Blue Spring's township, Robeson county, Mr. EDWARD A. McNEILL and Miss SALLIE M., daughter of John C. Campbell.

In Alamance county, N. C., November 11th, 1879, by Rev. C. N. Morrow, Mr. WILLIAM A. WOODS to Miss NANNIE C. JOHNSTON, all of Alamance, N. C.

In Alamance county, N. C., November 13th, 1879, by Rev. C. N. Morrow, Mr. GABRIEL L. WALKER of Caswell, N. C., to Miss IDA T. BASON, of Alamance, N. C.

At Thyatira, Nov. 12, 1879, by Rev. Jas. A. Ramsay, Mr. J. SAM'L McCUBBINS and Mrs. LEONORA N. LUCKEY.

On the same day and by the same, Mr. ROBERT C. KNOX and Miss ANNIE M. KRIDER, daughter of the late Rev. B. S. Krider.

DIED.

☞Obituary notices must be paid for in advance. The first ten lines are inserted free. The excess over ten lines is charged for at the rate of ten cents per line. Correspondents can ascertain what an obituary will cost by counting eight words to a line, and multiplying each line by ten cents.

At Burgaw, 8th November, 1879, Mrs. NORA H. LINDSAY, in the 29th year of her age.

Near Denton, Texas, Nov. 11th, 1879, JOHN RANKIN PAISLEY, formerly of Guilford county, N. C., aged 76 years. He has entered into rest.

In Bladen county, on 29th Oct. last in the 80th year of his age, Mr. DURUM LEWIS.

Confined to his room for four years, the most of the time in bed without a murmur he awaited the will of the Master and passed away resting for salvation upon the merits of a crucified Redeemer.

On 29th Oct. in the 27th year of his age JOHN C. WILLIS.

The afflicted parents of this noble and promising young man mourn not as those who have no hope. Five years ago along with thirty-two others he joined the church of Beth Car and his life afterwards was that of the consistent Christian. Beloved by all who knew him he will be sadly missed.

In Bladen county on Nov. 3d, Mrs. HARRIET A. MURPHY, wife of Mr. Daniel Murphy, in the 35th year of her age, leaving behind a husband and six little children, one of them one day old. Mrs. M., was a member of Brown Marsh church and we trust is now at rest. May God bless those whom in His wisdom He has so sorely bereaved.

Near Laurinburg, in Richmond county, at the residence of Wm. Buchanan, on Sabbath morning, Oct. 12th, Miss MARY BLUE, aged 63 years.

She had been under the band of affliction for several months and part of the time a great sufferer. But she bore her afflictions with remarkable patience, never was a murmuring word heard from her lips. In her sickness she recognized the hand of a kind and merciful Parent and with true Christian submission could say "It is the Lord; let him do what seemeth to him good." For many years she was a consistent member of the Presbyterian Church. In mourning her departure we mourn not as those without hope. "Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints."

Consumption Cured.

An old physician, retired from practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure for Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma, and Throat and Lung Affections, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative power in thousands of cases, has felt it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and a desire to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge to all who desire it, this recipe, in German, French, or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail by addressing with stamp, naming this paper, W. W. Sherar, 149 Powers' Block, Rochester, New York.

CURED OF DRINKING.

"A young friend of mine was cured of an insatiable thirst for liquor that had so prostrated his system that he was unable to do any business. He was entirely cured by the use of Hop Bitters. It allayed all that burning thirst; took away the appetite for liquor; made his nerves steady, and he has remained a sober and steady man for more than two years, and has no desire to return to his cups, and I know of a number of others that have been cured of drinking by it."—From a leading R. Tarrant's Seltzer Aperient.

May properly be called the "Hercules" of medicine, for it cleanses Nature's augean stables, and allows the recuperative powers of the system to do the work of restoration to health. No medicine cures; Nature alone cures. The aperient opens the proper avenues, the functions are permitted to resume their work, and the patient gets well.

TALBOTT'S PATENT SPARK ARRESTER
The Invention of the Age.

It does not destroy the draft.
It does not interfere with cleaning the tubes.
It will not choke up, and requires no cleaning.
It requires no direct dampers to be opened when raising steam (dampers being objectionable, as they may be left open and allow sparks to escape)
It requires no water to extinguish sparks, which, by condensation, destroys the draft. Besides, when water is used, if neglected, the efficiency is destroyed by evaporation of the water, and the boiler is kept in a filthy condition.
It is simple and durable and can be relied upon.
It can be attached to any boiler.
No planter should be without one of them. Insurance companies will insure gins and barns where the Talbott Engines and Spark-Arresters are used at same rate as charged for water or horse-power.

A Sweeping Reduction!

The reduction here announced in the price of The Sunday School Times puts that paper within the reach of every Sunday-school in the land. It now becomes, unquestionably, the cheapest weekly paper of its size and character in the United States. It gives 832 large pages (11x16 inches) of reading matter a year, or over eight pages for a cent at its lowest club rate. It costs less than two cents a week for each member of a club of twenty or more persons. Schools that have been taking other publications because the club rates of The Sunday School Times were higher than they could afford, will not be slow to appreciate these new prices. The lowest rate heretofore for a club of less than thirty copies has been $1.90 for each paper. Now the price for twenty copies, or over, is $1.00 for each paper. The reduction is a bold one, and even the present large circulation does not warrant it, but the change is desirable for the due extension of its field, and the necessary increased circulation is sure to come. Lower prices do not mean a poorer paper, or less of it,—on the contrary, it is purposed to make the paper better than ever before in all of its departments.

Here are the New Rates.—From one to four copies, $2 each. From five to nine copies, in a package to one address, $1.50 each. From ten to nineteen copies, in a package to one address, $1.25 each. Twenty copies or more in a package to one address, $1.00 each. These prices include postage, which is prepaid by the publisher. Subscriptions will be taken for any portion of a year at yearly rates. While the papers for a club must be sent in a package to one address, the publisher desires to have for reference the names of all the subscribers. He, therefore, requires that each club subscription be accompanied with a list of the names and addresses of the persons who are to use the paper.

Superintendents will remember that they can try the paper in their schools for a portion of a year at the yearly rate. Twenty teachers can be supplied for three months for five dollars. Why not begin now?

Any reader of this advertisement, who has never been a subscriber to The Sunday School Times, can receive it on trial every week for three months for twenty-five cents. Send also for a free specimen of The Scholars' Quarterly, a forty-four-page scholars' lesson help, containing a colored map, beautiful illustrative pictures, and a great variety of valuable lesson matter. Address,

FOR THE FAMILY.

Song of the Hills.

BY MRS. R. H. FLEMING.

I gazed where gray rocks lifted
Their hoary heads on high,
And stood like Titan bulwarks
Outlined against the sky.
And from the dim recesses
A glorious anthem rolled—
A note of noble triumph
Swept o'er those boulders old.
"In His hand are the deep places of the earth: The strength of the hills is His."

I stood where the whispering forests
Waved on the mountain's breast,
And the morning clouds hung lightly
Above the lofty crest.
Then up to azure heaven
The song rose high and higher,
As a mighty harp pulsated,
And led an unseen choir.
"In His hand are the deep places of the earth: The strength of the hills is His."

My footsteps onward wended
Down to the Summer plain,
Where the breezy zephyrs fluttered
Above a verdant main.
But still from glen and meadow
Uprose the joyous lay,
And wind and sunshine caught the strain
And bore it on their way.
"In His hand are the deep places of the earth: The strength of the hills is His."

The Nobleman's Offer.

A forcible illustration of the sin and folly of those who doubt the Lord's promises of salvation, and delay to accept his proffered grace, is found in the following account of the offer made by a British nobleman to his tenants. The substance of the story we have often heard, and believe it to be entirely true. We give it as reported in the Interior, from the lips of George J. Mingens, Superintendent of the New York City Mission.

Lord Congleton, one of the band of earnest Christian workers, among whom Lord Shaftsbury is perhaps the most widely known—men who would be noble without hereditary titles, and who share that exceptional grace to which not many mighty or noble are called—had thrown himself heartily into evangelical work both among the London poor and upon his own estates. Not being gifted with all that persuasiveness of speech which some possessed, he found that few believed his report, and grieved that the message of God's love which he bore was rejected and neglected by so many. Pondering the matter in his mind, he sought to teach his tenants a lesson of faith which they could not well forget, and which might incline them to believe the testimony concerning Christ and his great salvation.

The session of Parliament was over, and he started for his country seat. The morning after his arrival he had the following notice posted in various conspicuous places about the village that lay upon his estate, and on the great gate of his private grounds:

"NOTICE.

"Lord Congleton will be present, with his Steward, at his office in the village, between the hours of 9 a. m. and 12 noon, —— day of ——, and will then and there pay freely all accounts and debts, to whomsoever owing, of any of his tenants who cannot discharge their obligations. To avail themselves of this offer, the applicants must present their account in the form of separate bills, containing the exact statement of the amount and nature of the debts owing to each creditor. They must give also a statement of their own means and whatsoever property they may have. CONGLETON."

Soon around each placard a crowd began to gather. Curiosity, astonishment, possessed the villagers. "What does it mean?" And crowds gathered around the office. To one and all the steward gave only one answer: "That is Lord Congleton's signature: the notice speaks for itself." Further explanation of his master's motives he refused; nor would he answer any questions. "He was simply ordered to fix up those placards. That was all he know."

The day drew on, with an increasing excitement on the part of the poor. Some looked at the latter clause. It seemed to intimate they must surrender all they had to claim the benefit. They were not insolvent, and so they concluded not to apply. Others had accounts of a nature they did not like to expose to his lordship. Others had little faith in the whole matter. 'Twas some new, unscountable whim of Lord Congleton's. "But there's his own signature: he'll never dishonor that," said a neighbor. And so discussion ran high.

Many gathered up their accounts, and made out the required statements, resolving to see how others fared, and if they succeeded, to present their list of hopeless debts. Some planned how to keep back part of their assets, and some again, deterred by arguments or ridicule, gave up all thought of the matter.

The day came, and the crowd of tenants and lookers-on were gathered near the office. All efforts to gather any further information were fruitless. A little before the hour Lord Congleton's carriage drove up, and he stepped hastily into the office, and the door was closed and locked after him. Precisely at nine a step came from the inner room, and they heard the bolt thrown back.

Men looked at each other. None were willing to go first, fearing either the confession of poverty or the ridicule that would meet an unsuccessful application. "You go and try, Jones," said a man to his neighbor. "I'm not so poor as you think for," was the reply, albeit each had shown friends their lists, and consulted with them about the debts they meant to present. So the minutes wore by, while men looked upon each other and waited.

It was near ten o'clock when an old couple, who for two or three years had been inmates of the poorhouse, entered the group before the office. "Is it true," they said, "Lord Congleton has offered to pay all our debts?" "Don't know: he has paid none yet." "But has any one been in?" "Not yet." Just then the notice hanging outside the office door caught the old man's eye. It was faded by sun and rain. "Why, wife," said he, "this has been here for days, and I know his lordship's signature. Thank God! we can die at least free of debt," and they started for the door. "Aye, aye; you go first, old man, and tell us how you fare." "I don't think you are out of the poorhouse yet." "Guess he'll be fooled." So their neighbors' comments fall about their ears as they entered.

Within the inner office they found Lord Congleton and his steward. The old man laid his statement and bills upon the table, saying: "These are my debts, my lord. I have nothing, but live in the poorhouse. This, however, matters little if I die debt free."

"Why should I pay your debts?" asked the nobleman. "I cannot tell why except that you say you will. I know your signature, and believe your promise." 'That is enough," said Lord Congleton.

The steward then made up the account, and drew a check, which he handed to his master. He looked at it, compared it with the statement and passed it with his signature to the old man. He earnestly thanked his benefactor, and then started to the door, saying:

"I must tell my neighbors." "No, you must not," said Lord Congleton, "they must trust my word."

Then the old couple were shown into another room to wait till twelve, and in the meantime the steward told his master their history. Coming down from comparative comfort, their poverty had been misfortune, but not fault. Lord Congleton was interested in them, and ordered the lease of a little place to be made out in their name, which he added to the check.

Outside the time wore away, and as the old people did not come forth all settled down to the opinion there was nothing in it. Twelve drew near. Men looked at each other but did not go. Slowly the hour rang out, and with the last stroke the door opened and the old man came out. "Have you got your money?" With that he showed his check. "Good as a note of the Bank of England!" There was a rush around Lord Congleton as he entered his carriage, and men shook at him their statements "My lord, will you pay my debts?" "Lord Congleton, there's my account."

"Friends, it is past twelve o'clock," said he, as he drove away.—Presbyterian Journal.

The Echo.

A little boy once went home to his mother, and said, "Mother, sister and I went out into the garden, and we were calling about, and there was some boy mocking us." How do you mean, Johnny?" said his mother. "Why," said the child, "I was calling out 'Ho!' and this boy said 'Ho!' So I said to him, 'Who are you?' and he answered, 'Who are you?' I said, 'What is your name?' He said, 'What is your name?' And I said to him, 'Why don't you show yourself?' He said 'Show yourself.' And I jumped over the ditch, and I went into the wood, and I could not find him, and I came back, and said, 'If you don't come out I will punch your head,' and he said, 'I will punch your head.'"

So his mother said, "Ah, Johnny, if you had said, 'I love you,' he would have said 'I love you.' If you had said, 'Your voice is sweet,' he would have said, 'Your voice is sweet.' Whatever you said to him he would have said back to you." And the mother said, "Now, Johnny, when you grow and get to be a man, whatever you will say to others they will, by and by, say back to you," and his mother took him to that old text in the Scripture, "With what measure ye mete it shall be measured to you again.—The Presbyterian.

MISCELLANEOUS.

In the Mines of Siberia.

Of the treatment of political exiles in Siberia, as it has been carried on for a long time past, I have before me a thrilling description from the pen of Mr. Robert Lemke, a German writer, who has visited the various penal establishments of Russia, with an official legitimation. He had been to Tobolsk, after which he had to make a long, weary journey in a wretched car, until a high mountain arose before him. In its torn and craggy flank the mountain showed a colossal opening similar to the mouth of a burnt out crater. Fetid vapors, which almost took away his breath, ascended from it.

Pressing the handkerchief upon his lips, Mr. Lemke entered the opening of the rock, when he found a large watch-house, with a picket of Cossacks. Having shown his papers of legitimation, he was conducted by a guide through a long, very dark and narrow corridor, which, judging from its sloping descent, led down into some unknown depth. In spite of his good fur the visitor felt extremely cold. After a walk of some ten minutes through the dense obscurity, the ground becoming more and more soft, a vague shimmer of light became observable. "We are in the mine," said the guide, pointing with a significant gesture to the high iron cross-bars which closed the cavern before them.

The massive bars were covered with a thick rust. A watchman appeared, who unlocked the heavy iron gate. Entering a room of considerable extent, but which was scarcely a man's height, and was dimly lit by an oil lamp, the visitor asked, "Where are we?" In the sleeping room of the condemned! Formerly it was a productive gallery of the mine; now it serves as a shelter.

The visitor shuddered. This subterranean sepulchre, lit by neither sun nor moon, was called a sleeping room. Alcove-like cells were hewn into the rock; here, on a couch of damp, half-rotten straw, covered with a sackcloth, the unfortunate sufferers were to repose from the day's work. Over each cell a cramp-iron was fixed, wherewith to lock up the prisoners like ferocious dogs. No door, no window anywhere.

Conducted through another passage, where a few lanterns were placed, and whose end was also barred by an iron gate, Mr. Lemke came to a large vault, partly lit. This was the mine. A deafening noise of pickaxes and hammers. There he saw some hundreds of wretched figures, with shaggy beards, sickly faces, reddened eyelids; clad in tatters, some of them barefoot, others in sandals, fettered with heavy foot-chains. No song, no whistling. Now and then they shyly looked at the visitor and his companion. The water dripped from the stones; the tatters of the convicts were thoroughly wet. One of them, a tall man of suffering mien, labored hard with gasping breath, but the strokes of his pickaxe were not heavy and firm enough to loosen the rock.

"Why are you here?" Mr. Lemke asked.

The convict looked confused, with an air almost of consternation, and silently continued his work.

"It is forbidden to the prisoners," said the inspector, "to speak of the cause of their banishment."

Entombed alive; forbidden to say why!

"But who is the convict?" Mr. Lemke asked the guide with low voice.

"It is number 114," the guide replied, laconically.

"This I see," answered the visitor; "but what are the man's antecedent? To what family does he belong?"

"He is a count," replied the guide, "a well known conspirator. More, I regret to say, I cannot tell you about number 114."

The visitor felt as if he were stifled in the grave-like atmosphere—as if his chest were pressed in by a demoniacal nightmare. He hastily asked his guide to return with him to the upper world. Meeting there the commander of the military establishment he was obligingly asked by that officer—

"Well, what impression did our penal establishment make upon you?"

Mr. Lemke stiffly bowing in silence, the officer seemed to take this as a kind of satisfied assent, and went on—

"Very industrious people, the men below; are they not?"

"But with what feelings," Mr. Lemke answered, "must these unfortunates look forward to the day of rest after the week's toil!"

"Rest!" said the officer, "convicts must always labor. There is no rest for them. They are condemned to perpetual forced labor, and he who once enters the mine never leaves it."

"But this is barbarous!"

The officer shrugged his shoulders, and said, "The exiled work daily for twelve hours, on Sundays too. They must never pause. But no—I am mistaken. Twice a year, though, rest is permitted to them—at Easter-time, and on the birthday of his majesty, the emperor."—The Contemporary Review.

Rodrigo Borgia, Pope Alexander VI.

The life, the actions, and the character of this Pope will forever remain a moral problem. It must be remembered that he was Pope. He was not merely an almost incredibly wicked man, but he claimed to be the Vicar of God. Apart even from the darkest crime which stains his infamous memory, his life was a long breach of the commandments which say thou shalt not steal, thou shalt do no murder, thou shalt not commit adultery, thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbor. Alexander VI. is, perhaps, the greatest and the foulest criminal in history; and he is, furthermore, an occupant of the chair of St. Peter, the infallible pontiff of a Church which claims to be connected with Christianity. Alexander did not hate or contemn the world; he was no Titanic sceptic or atheist, whose profound unbelief in divinity, and raging scorn of humanity, led him to despise heaven and to defy hell. No, he believed—in his way; but he could turn from incest, from adultery, from murder, to worship the Virgin, to perform mass, to fulfil any of the highest and most mystical functions of sacerdotal sacredness. He touches humanity chiefly in his love for his children, but he is otherwise as infra-human as he is undivine. It would almost seem as if some demon had, in mockery of men, created a being who should thrive through unsurpassed wickedness, and who—as the profoundest effort of most devilish satire—should be placed on high in the then chief office of Christendom, and be worshipped by millions as the infallible representative on earth of the all-wise, all-merciful, omniscient and eternal God.—Nineteenth Century.

Don't Give Up.

A gentleman traveling in the northern part of Ireland heard the voices of children, and stopped to listen. Finding the sound came from a small building used as a school house, he drew nearer; as the door was open, he went in and listened to the words the boys were spelling.

One little fellow stood apart, looking very sad. "Why does that boy stand there?" asked the gentleman.

"O, he is good for nothing," replied the teacher. "There's nothing in him. He is the most stupid boy in the school."

The gentleman was surprised at this answer. He saw that the teacher was so stern and rough that the younger and more timid were nearly crushed. After a few words to them, placing his hand on the head of the little fellow who stood apart, he said: "One of these days you may be a fine scholar. Don't give up; but try, my boy—try."

The boy's soul aroused. His sleeping mind awoke. A new purpose was formed. From that hour he became a fine scholar. It was Dr. Adam Clarke. The secret of his success is worth knowing: "Don't give up; but try, my boy—try."

Early History of the Steel Pen.

The early history of the steel pen is curiously obscure. The most diligent search fails to discover the first maker or the earliest date of this implement. There were steel, or rather iron pens made, we believe, in Holland as early as the middle of the seventeenth century. Toward the close of the last century Mr. Harrison, an ingenious Birmingham mechanic, made steel pens for Dr. Priestly. One of them is nothing more than a tube turned out of a flat strip of metal, with the sides and points filed away in the shape of a pen. The first actual supply of such pens, it is believed (the authority for the statement is no more than local tradition), was made by a Sheffield workman, whose name is forgotten. From time to time, as far back as 1809, steel pens, hand shaped, turned and filed, were made as curiosities or luxuries for presents; but it was not until about 1824 that such instruments were produced in considerable quantities, as regular articles of manufacture. Mr. James Perry was the first manufacturer, but the process was tedious and costly. The metal was steel rolled out of wire, and for this Mr. Perry paid as much as seven shillings a pound. To the first person he employed he gave five shillings for making each pen; and even when the trade had become regular he gave for some years as much as thirty-six shillings a gross to his workmen. Now, thanks to machinery and modern improvements, pens—not very good ones, perhaps, but good enough to write with—can be made and sold at a profit for three cents per gross!—N. Y. Graphic.

A New Idea About Corn.

An exchange tells of a man who plants, two or three weeks after the crop is planted, a new hill of corn every fifteenth row, each way. And this is the reason: If the weather becomes dry after the filling time, the silk and tassels both become dry and dead. In this condition, if it should become seasonable, the silk revives and renews its growth, but the tassels do not recover. Then, for want of pollen, the new silk is unable to fill the office for which it was designed. The pollen from the replanted corn is then ready to supply silk, and the filling is completed. He says that nearly all the abortive ears, so common in all corn crops, are caused by the want of pollen, and he has known ears to double their size in this filling.

"Good Enough for Home."

"Why do you put on that forlorn old dress?" asked Emily Manners of her cousin Lydia, one morning after she had spent the night at Lydia's house.

The dress in question was a spotted, faded, old summer silk, which only looked the more forlorn for its once fashionable trimmings, now crumpled and frayed.

"O, anything is good enough for home!" said Lydia, hastily pinning on a soiled collar; and twisting up her hair in a ragged knot, she went down to breakfast.

"Your hair is coming down," said Emily.

"O, never mind; it's good enough for home," said Lydia, carelessly. Lydia had been visiting at Emily's home, and had always appeared in the prettiest of morning dresses, and with neat hair, and dainty collars and cuffs; but now that she was back again among her brothers and sisters, and with her parents, she seemed to think anything would answer, and went about untidy, and in soiled finery. At her uncle's she had been pleasant and polite, and had won golden opinions from all; but with her own family her manners were as careless as her dress; she seemed to think that courtesy and kindness were too expensive for home wear, and that anything was good enough for home.

There are too many people who, like Lydia, seem to think that anything will do for home; whereas, effort to keep one's self neat, and to treat father, mother, sister, brother, and servant kindly and courteously, is as certainly a duty as to keep from falsehood and stealing.—Early Dew.

BE YE LIKE FOOLISH.

"For ten years my wife was confined to her bed with such a complication of ailments that no doctor could tell what was the matter or cure her, and I used up a small fortune in humbug stuff. Six months ago I saw a U. S. flag with Hop Bitters on it, and I thought I would be a fool once more. I tried it, but my folly proved to be wisdom. Two bottles cured her, and she is now as well and strong as any man's wife, and it only cost me two dollars. Be ye like foolish."—R. W., Detroit, Mich.

THE GENUINE

DR. C. McLANE'S

Celebrated American

WORM SPECIFIC

OR

VERMIFUGE.

SYMPTOMS OF WORMS.

THE countenance is pale and leaden-colored, with occasional flushes, or a circumscribed spot on one or both cheeks; the eyes become dull; the pupils dilate; an azure semicircle runs along the lower eye-lid; the nose is irritated, swells, and sometimes bleeds; a swelling of the upper lip; occasional headache, with humming or throbbing of the ears; an unusual secretion of saliva; slimy or furred tongue; breath very foul, particularly in the morning; appetite variable, sometimes voracious, with a knawing sensation of the stomach, at others, entirely gone; fleeting pains in the stomach; occasional nausea and vomiting; violent pains throughout the abdomen; bowels irregular, at times costive; stools slimy; not unfrequently tinged with blood; belly swollen and hard; urine turbid; respiration occasionally difficult, and accompanied by hiccough; cough sometimes dry and convulsive; uneasy and disturbed sleep, with grinding of the teeth; temper variable, but generally irritable, &c.

Whenever the above symptoms are found to exist,

DR. C. McLANE'S VERMIFUGE will certainly effect a cure.

IT DOES NOT CONTAIN MERCURY

in any form; it is an innocent preparation, not capable of doing the slightest injury to the most tender infant.

The genuine DR. McLANE'S VERMIFUGE bears the signatures of C. McLANE and FLEMING BROS. on the wrapper.

—:o:—

DR. C. McLANE'S

LIVER PILLS

are not recommended as a remedy "for all the ills that flesh is heir to," but in affections of the liver, and in all Bilious Complaints, Dyspepsia and Sick Headache, or diseases of that character, they stand without a rival.

AGUE AND FEVER.

No better cathartic can be used preparatory to, or after taking Quinine.

As a simple purgative they are unequaled.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

The genuine are never sugar coated.

Each box has a red wax seal on the lid with the impression DR. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS.

Each wrapper bears the signatures of C. McLANE and FLEMING BROS.

Insist upon having the genuine DR. C. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS, prepared by Fleming Bros., of Pittsburgh, Pa., the market being full of imitations of the name McLane, spelled differently but same pronunciation.

PREVENT YELLOW FEVER!

It has been well proved that prevention is better than cure. A very simple and effective preventative for Yellow Fever and other fevers has been found in BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTERS. They were used during last season in New Orleans very successfully. The common method of using them was to apply them over the stomach, changing them every week. They are one OF THE MOST ACTIVE ANTISEPTICS and seem to destroy the poison. One reason why they are of special value is that they stimulate the digestion, and thus enable the system to overcome the influence of the malarial poison. They are a cheap and almost certain preventative. Ask your physician about them. Benson's Capcine Plasters are a sure preventative and cure for chills and fever if worn as above. Price 25 cents.

ANCIENT WOMEN.

A writer in the last number of the Princeton Review, speaking of the Roman poet Virgil, says: "The country housewife going about her work more pleases him than the grandest of patrician matrons. You remember his picture in the eighth book of the Æneid of the thrifty dame at the middle of the night, first when a woman compelled to support life by spinning wakes to light the fire that slumbered in the embers, adding night to her day's work, and keeps her handmaids laboring long by the blaze, all that she may be able to preserve her wedded life in purity, and bring up her infant sons."

We are here reminded of the capable woman in the time when the words of King Lemuel (Prov. xxxi: 10) were penned, "The heart of her husband doth safely trust in her." "She seeketh wool and flax and worketh willingly with her hands." "She riseth while it is yet night, and giveth meat to her household, and a portion to her maidens," evidently that they may help in her work. "She layeth her hands to the spindle, and her hands hold the distaff." "Her candle goeth not out by night."

The description throughout the chapter is too long to quote in full, but it is far superior to that of the Latin poet, so long afterward. Similar customs existed in distant ages and in different countries. At the time of Tarquin the Proud, according to Livy, Lucretia, the wife of Collatinus, was found late at night sitting in the middle part of the house, among her wakeful handmaids, spinning wool. She does not appear to have retired to rest and risen again, like the dames of Virgil and Solomon. In ancient times the quantities of a good wife were poetry, beauty, fidelity, chastity and skill in spinning and weaving, and some say that "wife" comes from weave.

ALAMANCE CHURCH.

The fall session of Orange Presbytery was held in the historic congregation, which has recently built a new house of worship. On Saturday forenoon the Presbytery adjourned to hear the Historical Address by the Rev. C. H. Wiley; the address being really introductory to the dedicatory services of the afternoon.

The day was threatening and rain fell at intervals during both the morning and afternoon. Notwithstanding this however, the people came from the north and the south, from the east and west and sat down (as many as could find seats) in the church; the overflow filled the aisles and vestibule and thronged the windows.

The speaker was emphatically the right man in the right place. Every one who knows him, knows how warm his heart is towards North Carolina and how richly his mind is stored with the incidents of her history. But the warmest spot in that heart is given to the immediate place of his birth; in the innermost sanctuary Alamance is enshrined. Her very hills and trees and streams are hallowed and his memories are closely akin to reverence.

He spoke con amore; there was evident throughout the whole of the address the enthusiasm that is born of love and pride. The address was two hours and fifteen minutes in length (some said two hours and a half) and the highest compliment that could be paid it was the close and unwearied attention which it received from beginning to end. Your correspondent could have listened longer without fatigue or decrease of interest, and as he was in no way connected with the persons and places and incidents described, it may be imagined how intensely interesting it must have been to those who were. The speaker spoke ex abundante hence the following notes can be but fragmentary and brief when compared with the address; and are doubtless inaccurate in some particulars.

The church and ground were given by a gentleman whose name even, had passed from the neighborhood, but his descendant in the fourth generation was the speaker on the occasion. A young man assisted in the services who bore the same name as that of the very first person buried in the old graveyard (Mebane). There was a regular system of government in North Carolina when that section (Alamance) was a wilderness. Eastern and southern North Carolina was first settled. Yet the government, though far in the east, was sufficiently strong to keep that section in peace and quietness. Its influence and power were felt over what is now known as North Carolina though it was located near the sea coast. There are no records earlier than 1750. Tradition however, as reliable almost as history, fixes the settlement of the section of country around Alamance church in 1750; the time of the beginning of that great movement in the world, known as the Scotch Irish emigration.

God in his providence reserved a virgin soil of the very best, the Piedmont section, for this emigration. The movement forked, part going to Tennessee, part to South Carolina, and a part to North Carolina.

A company in Pennsylvania known as the Nottingham Company settled in that immediate section and in Rockingham county about 1750. Schools and seminaries were planted by the emigrants which have wielded great power. In five years after they entered the country the settlements were fixed. The colony was successful. The country at their entrance upon it was wild and entirely unsettled, yet there are no traditions of failure destitution or suffering, but of success and prosperity. The old deeds made to them by the Earl of Granville show that they selected the best lands. They had no market town; the people manufactured everything they needed except their groceries. Other goods were about the same price then as now but these articles were fifty per cent. higher. Molasses was higher in proportion than anything else. They manufactured their own linen had fuller's shops and hat shops all over the country; there is some linen in the congregation now one hundred years old. Every considerable farmer manufactured his own leather and nearly all the young people learned to make their own shoes. Shad came up the Buffalo creek as far as the bridge immediately north of what is now the town of Greensboro. The forests were magnificent and abounded in game, bees, honey, &c., and were vocal with the songs of birds. The United Synod of New York and Philadelphia, was then the highest Church court in the land. Hanover Presbytery on the Potomac River was the nearest Church court at this time. The Synod above mentioned sent missionaries to the scattered settlements in the Carolinas. Alamance was settled by a party in religion called the Whitfieldians or new lights (as distingnished from the old lights or old side party. They were revivalists and the congregation has been ever since a revival congregation, having regular stated protracted services. It is certain that they had an organized congregation and a house of worship before they had any expectation of a stated ministry. It is probable that their first church building was erected before an ordained minister had ever visited the section. Somewhere about the year 1760 they determined to build their first church and met in the woods for that purpose; as a beginning of the work they all knelt in the forest and were led in prayer by Andrew Finley and immediately afterward the sound of the axe was heard and a log church was built. It is probable that Andrew Finley held regular services in this church before the congregation was properly organized. It exorcised a good influence—there were no paupers, no criminals, no border ruffians, no spiritual destitution, no ignorance; the moral character of the people was excellent, and their intelligence compared favorably with their descendants of the present day. Among the old deeds and papers of that day there are none signed with a cross mark (✕). In nearly every family were to be found such books as Boston's Fourfold State, the works of Baxter, Doddridge, Fox's Book of Martyr's, Bibles, Larger and Shorter Catechisms. This church belonged to Hanover Presbytery. Its first regular minister was its first pastor Rev. David Caldwell; he probably ministered to the people before he became their pastor. He was installed in 1768. At his installation a petition was sent up to organize a Presbytery and Orange Presbytery was organized at Haw Fields' church in 1770. The original membership of the church cannot now be ascertained. The congregation extended over an area where there are now eight Presbyterian churches not including other denominations. The name Alamance is doubtless derived from Allemande (meaning German). This portion of the settlement bordered on a Dutch settlement which was called Allemande to distingnish it from the Scotch Irish and Allemande became corrupted into Alamance. The church was organized with seventy members. Alamance and Buffalo together had one hundred and fifty communicants, and were one pastorate. They were a church going people and their regular congregation on Sabbath was equal to the large assemblage which greeted the speaker on that Saturday. There were three early historic revivals in the church. The whole section used to unite in camp-meetings which were held at a central point in the congregation, about the location of the present poor house of Guilford county. Orange Presbytery at that time embraced North Carolina and parts of east Tennessee and South Carolina. Ministers from what is now Fayetteville Presbytery used to come to Alamance to preach. A Female Society was organized in the church in 1823. Nearly all the ladies in the congregation were members. Some of them came ten miles on horseback with children in their arms to attend the meetings of this Society. They made money with their own hands, had no church-fairs then. They helped to support young men at the Seminary and assisted them in their primary education also. They educated an Indian for the missionary work, they took the old Missionary Herald. This Society raised $500 for this work. This Society still lives in the daughters and grand-daughters of these pious women.

The Sabbath school was organized in 1855 and was great in its day. John Finley was its first superintendent. He used to go around the whole school asking each of his scholars to meet him in heaven. On the days on which there was no preaching the session of the school lasted from 10 A. M., to 4 P. M., with an intermission for lunch.

A secular school was taught in the session house, afterwards at a place three miles distant from the church. This school was regularly kept up and many distinguished men gained the rudiments of their education in it. There have been four churches erected.

1st. The log church already mentioned.

2d. Frame house in 1800—seats for six hundred and sixty (or one thousand on a squeeze). Seats in this house reserved for colored people and well filled too; they added great volume to the singing. The colored people had great attention paid to their instruction and were generally taught to read.

The 3d church, a brick house, erected in 1844.

The 4th (the present house of worship) 1875. A neat brick building, audience room 40x50 feet, recess of the pulpit and vestibule making its total length 65 feet.

The following ministers have supplied their pulpit: Dr. Caldwell, 1768–1821; Dr. Carruthers, 1821–1861 (Dr. C. came first as an assistant to Dr. Caldwell); Rev. P. H. Dalton preached from time to time for the congregation after Dr. Carruthers' resignation in 1861; Rev. Willis L. Miller, 1863–1865.

Latter part of 1865 Rev. W. B. Tidhall became stated supply and was installed pastor in 1867. In 1826 Alamance and Buffalo separated and became two pastorates instead of one as formerly. The colony is one hundred and twenty-five years old; the church is one hundred and twenty years old; the pastorate one hundred and fifteen years old. During the first ninety-three years of the pastorate there were only two pastors. During the one hundred and fifteen years there have been only four. Since its existence the church has passed through three civil wars and has been the seat of contending armies. During the revolutionary war Lord Cornwallis encamped in the congregation upon the premises of Ralph Gorrell. At the battle of Guilford Court House a company from this congregation was engaged under the command of Capt. Forbes killed in that battle, and whose monument now stands in the graveyard.

There have been four different governments over this people.

The Presbytery of Orange used to meet in this church every two years: Sept. 26, 1798; Sept 24, 1800; Sept 28, 1802; Sept. 26, 1804; Sept. 24, 1806; Sept. 28, 1808; Sept. 26, 1811. On October 7, 1813 the Synod of North Carolina was organized in Alamance church, and Dr. R. H. Chapman was elected Moderator. From this congregation have come at least twenty ministers of the gospel. Among whom are the following: W. B. Paisley, Saml. Paisley, Jno. Matthews and three sons, W. Caldwell Matthews, Jno. D. Matthews, D. D., Ky., Robert C. Matthews, D. D., Ill, (Rev. Jno. Matthews was the originator of the Seminary now merged into the Chicago Theological Seminary). James Kerr, Jno Paisley, Jno. McLean, Addi E. Thom, David K. Thom, David G. Doak, Jno. H. Cohle, Jno. Woodburn, C. H. Wiley, L. A. T. Joh, D. C. Rankin, E. M. Pritchett, Saml. McAdoo, (licentiate of Orange, afterwards joined Cumberland church). J. H. McNeilly, is of Alamance stock. Robert Donnell, eminent in Cumberland Presbyterian church. Geo. Donnell also in Cumberland church. Ministers from this congregation are in Kentucky, Tennessee, Indiana, Illinois, Alabama, Mississippi and Texas.

For about 70 years this congregation was represented one-fifth of the time in the Legislature. It has produced a State judge and his son a United States judge; a member of Congress and his son a state judge. It sent a representative to the Confederate Congress. It has sent out eminent teachers and professors. The last church court held in this church, until the present meeting of Presbytery, was the Synod in 1813, its first meeting. During the address Mr. Wiley gave a sketch of Dr. Caruthers which is omitted in these notes. This is but the dry skeleton of a very interesting and instructive and in some places eloquent address.

HASTY ADMISSIONS TO THE CHURCH.

"A church was formed by Rev. Gilbert Tenant out of those who were the followers and converts of Mr. Whitfield. No less than 140 were received at first, after a strict examination. The admission of a large number more was delayed only because their exercises and spiritual states had not attained such maturity as to afford satisfaction to themselves or to the officers of the church." (Life of Whitfield, p. 47 Notes: Philadelphia, 1780.)

This course does not suit modern times. when new members are received into our churches as soon as they profess conversion, and before every one is fully assured of its reality.

A QUIET MIND.

Of all blessings to be desired, a quiet mind seems most worthy the Christian's seeking. "Calm me, my God, and keep me calm," must often be our prayer, as we encounter the changes of life.

Most of us have found out how much easier it is to bear up bravely under a great misfortune than to act with patience, good temper and courage when little things go wrong. How many times a day are we tried and harassed in the family! One person is apt to be irritated at trifles, and to speak petulantly and hastily when provoked. Nothing spreads more quickly than such an infirmity. It is as subtle as malaria, and as hard to overcome. If father or mother have the habit of speaking in a harsh, rasping voice, or of magnifying little faults into great crimes, the children will soon learn the trick of scowling browns and cross words. We never hear a little girl scolding her doll, in uplifted tones, nor see her striking and shaking it, without a suspicion that in that way she sees the home government administered. And when we observe gentleness, sweetness and unselfishness predominating in the conduct of children, the inference is natural that they live in sunny atmosphere, and have beautiful examples set before them daily.

How often we mothers have gone from our rooms, where we have had a tender season of communion with God, have read precious promises in His Book, and been strengthened against need, and then, secure, as we thought, against temptation, have had all the peace banished by some untoward occurrence! To enter the parlor and find that Jennie is playing tea with the china which is your pride, or that Tommy has made a horse of your frail Japanese chair; to have a favorite hook, which you loaned in the goodness of your heart, come home stained and torn; to go to the kitchen, and be confronted by the stupidity or obstinacy of an ignorant servant; these are common experiences, and how often our self-control flies before them! It is as humiliating as it is common to find that when we are on the level of our highest moods we are apt to be swept down to our lowest.

How can we exercise ourselves so as to have a quiet mind?

In two or three ways.

We cannot invariably control our thoughts and impulses, but our words and our tones are in our own power. We may resolve to preserve silence when we are exasperated, till we feel calm, and never to elevate our tones when annoyed. A low, clear voice is a great charm in a woman, and when it is a mother's is has an almost magical influence in the maintaining of harmony in the household.

If we would have a quiet mind, we must give fair play to this house in which our mind dwells. Often the temper is uncertain and fortitude breaks down because the body is worn out by illness and sleeplessness. Let us resolve to secure some needed repose, and some small space of solitude every day. There should be one room to which, morning or afternoon, we may retire, and be safe from intrusion, while we read, meditate, rest or pray.

Let us make daily and practical use of our Bibles. They are full of help, of instruction, and of comfort. We can open them nowhere without finding some thought of God, outshining like a star, and dispensing its brilliant light for our cheer and guidance. The way of perfect trust is the only peaceful way in this world, and they have most of its joy who dwell nearest the heavenly Father.—Lady cor. Christian at Work.

TEACH ME TO LIVE.

Teach me to live! 'tis easier far to die;
Gently and silently to pass away,
On earth's long night to close the heavy eye,
And waken in the realms of glorious day.

Teach me that harder lesson, how to live,
To serve Thee in the darkest path of life;
Arm me for conflict now; fresh vigor give,
And make me more than conqueror in the strife.

Teach me to live! my daily cross to bear,
Nor murmur though I bend beneath its load.
Only be with me; let me feel Thee near;
Thy smile spreads gladness on the darkest road.

Teach me to live, and find my life in Thee;
Looking from earth and earthly things away;
Let me not falter but untiringly
Press on, and gain new strength and power each day.

Teach me to live! with kindly words for all;
Wearing no cold, repulsive brow of gloom;
Waiting, with cheerful patience, till Thy call
Summons my spirit to her heavenly home.

YESTERDAY, TO-DAY AND FOREVER.

There is, so scientific people tell us, one point, even in a whirling wheel, which is at rest. One line of atoms at the axis, around which all the others revolve, is still. When we conceive of providence, intricate and confused as it is, well typed by the prophet as "a wheel in the middle of a wheel," we are always to remember that God Himself is sitting unmoved at the centre of the universe, the Father of lights, from whom cometh down every good and every perfect gift, and with whom there is no variableness, neither shadow of turning. And there is relief and comfort in this.

Shocked and shifted as we are in this life, our minds become impressed with a sense of insecurity. We are agitated with a thousand disquiets. No lot in the world is safe. Affairs fluctuate. Individual experience flits and plays with the phases of the moon. Institutions are not fixed. Even the perpetual hills do bow, and the eternal hills do change their bounds. Stability seems but an empty fiction or a dream. Versatilities mock our expectation; vicissitude is the rule of earthly existence.

Over all sits God calmly. His throne never sleeps. His patience never wearies. He wills and waits at His own pleasure. We look up and find Him watching; we know where to find Him always. And the beauty and glory and welcome of this thought is centred upon the one revelation that the God whom we see is the Saviour whom we love; "Jesus Christ, the same yesterday, and to-day, and forever."

The idea of our divine Lord as a person is to many minds exceedingly indefinite. He seems a mere historic character, born, living, dying, like any other being among the generations of men. We accept His deity as a mysterious doctrine of revelation, essential, of course, to His office and work; but our understanding of the ineffable meaning it bears is very vague and irrelevant. And that strange life, which began at the manger in Bethlehem, ran through some sorrowful years in Galilee, and then ended on the cross at Jerusalem, has no real significance as a mission of Immanuel, "God with us." We hardly know how to deal with it. Really the weakness of many believers is owing to their absolute inability to make this personal career of our Redeemer available in their experience.

Such confusion is perfectly natural. It is the necessary sequence of a miserable mistake. How childishly inadequate is the conception of an infinite Son of God, which limits Him consciously or unconsciously to an earthly history ending in a failure! Now the Scripture insists that Jesus' birth was not His beginning, nor His death His end. The thirty-three years of His human existence bear almost no measure or relation to the real duration of His life. He was living for an eternity previous to their commencing; He is living now in an eternity as unbroken and as boundless as ever. The incarnation was an incident in His career; it was only a part of His work of redemption, a necessary part, a noble part, but not the whole. His biography would have to be written with an alphabet, the Alpha of which, no human voice ever repeated, the Omega of which no mortal tongue would know how to speak.—Chas. S. Robinson, D. D., in S. S. Times.

ONE DROP AT A TIME.

Have you ever watched an icicle as it formed? You noticed how it froze, one drop at a time, until it was a foot long or more. If the water was clear, the icicle remained clear and sparkling brightly in the sun; but if the water was but slightly muddy the icicle looked foul, and its beauty was spoiled. Just so our characters are forming: one little thought or feeling at a time adds its influence. If each thought be pure and right the soul will be lovely and sparkle with happiness; but if impure and wrong, there will be wretchedness.

RELIGIOUS SALUTATIONS.

A large, if not the largest, class of salutations can be traced to intercession. The deeply religious character of the Orientals showed itself specially in their salutations. The Hebrew word barak, "to bless," had all the meaning of saluting, welcoming, and bidding adieu, the person spoken to being in each case commended to God. "Blessed be thou of the Lord;" "The Lord be with thee;" "and Jacob blessed Pharoah, and went out from before him;" are instances which illustrate the usage of the word. They are paralleled by the Arabian, "God grant thee His favours," "May God strengthen your morning," "May your morning be good;" by the Persian, "I make prayers for thy greatness;" and by the Ottoman, "Be under the guard of God." "My prayers are for thee," "Forget me not in thy prayers." And we cannot be surprised that this kind of salutation is found to exist, in some shape or other, among all national greetings. Our religion has come from the East, and some of their religious salutations still survive; as, for example, in the Esthonian "God guide you," the "Adieu" of the French, the "Go with God, Senor" of Spain, and our "God be with ye," corrupted "Good-bye." And here it may be remarked, in passing, that the obviously religious phrases have been preserved by nations in a sense less distinctly religious than the English, while they have been lost or changed among ourselves. Has the closer intimacy of the Continent with Roman Catholicism produced an effect upon outward expression, or is the change due to our greater reverence for sacred names—a reverence, often of course, merely Pharisaic, but which has led us, as it led the later Hebrews, to shrink from uttering the actual name of the Deity, and either to corrupt it as in "Good-bye," or eliminate it as in "Mercy me," "Save you, sir," while the French are much more lavish with their "Mon Dieu," and the Germans with their "Mein Gott!" If these suggestions will not hold, perhaps we may find a more rational solution in the universal tendency of the West, and especially of the English, towards brevity; which tendency would find illustration in our "Good day," in German "Guten Tag," in the Swedish "God dag," and in the French "Bonjour." The religious character of the Easterns is obvious, or obtrusive, likewise in their answer. To the question, "How is your health?" an Arab would reply, "Praise be to God," the tone alone showing whether he was well or ill. "Is it well with thee?" would draw forth the response, "God bless thee and preserve thee." These were the stock answers which it was and is still considered rude to vary—an instance, by the way, of punctilio and conservatism truly characteristic of Oriental ceremoniousness and stagnation. This style of answer reminds us of the Deo Gratias, a salutation of the early Christians, who, carrying out the apostolic injunction, "In all things give thanks," laid themselves open to the ridicule of the heretics, who said it was only an answer. "Thank God, how are you?" is one of the salutations in Arabia at the present time. In Andreas Hofer's district of the Tyrol the people still salute with "Praised be Jesus Christ." Among the poorer classes in Poland the visitor often says, "The Lord be praised," to which reply is, "World without end. Amen."—Cornhill Magazine.

THE EDICT OF NANTES.

When Louis XIV. revoked the Edict of Nantes, he expelled from France nearly all his subjects, except the Atheists, who would not conform to the Roman Catholic religion. He drove out the manufacturers, who were for the most part Protestants, and thus destroyed the manufacturing supremacy of France. He expelled Protestants of every class—advocates, judges, doctors, artists, scientists, teachers, and professors. And, last of all, he expelled the Protestant soldiers and sailors. According to Vauban, 12,000 tried soldiers, 9,000 sailors, and 600 officers left France, and entered into foreign service. Some went to England, some to Holland, and some to Prussia. Those who took refuge in Holland entered the service of William, Prince of Orange. Most of them accompanied him to Torbay in 1688. They fought against the armies of Louis XIV. at the Boyne, at Athlone, and at Aughrim, and finally drove the French out of Ireland. The sailors also did good service under the flags of England and Holland. They distinguished themselves at the sea-fight off La Hogue, where the English and Dutch fleets annihilated the expedition prepared by Louis XIV. for his descent upon England. The expatriated French soldiers occasionally revisited the country of their birth, not as friends, but as enemies. They encountered the armies of Louis XIV. in all the battles of the Low Counties. They fought at Ramilies, Blenheim, and Malplaquet. A Huguenot engineer directed the operations at the siege of Namur, which ended in the capture of the fortress. Another Huguenot engineer conducted the operations at Lisle, which was also taken by the allied forces. While there, a flying party, consisting chiefly of French Huguenots, penetrated as far as the neighborhood of Paris, when they nearly succeeded in carrying off the Dauphin. The Huguenot officers who took refuge in Prussia entered the service of Frederick William, Elector of Brandenburg. Some were raised to the highest offices in his army. Marshal Schomberg was one of the number. But when he found that William of Orange was assembling a large force in Holland for the purpose of making a descent upon England, he requested leave to join him; and his friend, Prince Frederick William, though with great regret, at length granted him permission to leave the Prussian service. The descendants of the Huguenot officers who took refuge in Germany revisited France on more than one occasion. They overran the eastern and northern parts of the French Empire in 1814 and 1815; and, last of all, they crushed the descendants of their former persecutors at Sedan, in 1870. Not long since, Jules Simon, when Premier of France, reminded his countrymen of what they had lost by the tyrannical edict of Louis XIV. He recalled the fact that not less than eighty distinguished officers of the German staff were representatives of Protestant families who were expelled from France by the revocation of the Edict of Nantes!—Good Words.

GIRLS IN SOCIETY.

It is rather curious that these young ladies, so ready to appropriate attentions and invite affection, are seldom attractive to the persons they so desire to please. It is man's prerogative to woo, woman's to be won; and she should not be won too easily or too soon. It is a very precious gift that a young girl makes when she surrenders herself wholly, for all her life, to him who has asked her to be his, and she should be very sure of her love; very sure it is not her vanity that is pleased, rather than her heart; very sure that her affianced husband is an honorable, God-fearing, kind and upright gentleman. The marriages which come from too brief an acquaintance, from a watering-place intimacy, or a few transient meetings at gay parties, often end in bitter disappointments.

While you are dignified and above even the most refined flirtation, it is not necessary that you should be needlessly prim and austere. Enjoy conversation and music and excursions with your friends, simply as friends, and in the thorough trust of friendliness, and take the sweetness of innocent hours with those young like yourselves. But, in all things wherein you have a doubt, in all questions of propriety, take counsel of your mothers. Young girls are safe if they give their mothers their entire confidence, without reserve and without fear. No one else can so fittingly judge what you ought and what you ought not to do. And though in future a lover may adore you, and a husband guard you with tender fondness, you will never, in life, meet with a love purer, stronger, and more supremely unselfish than the love of your darling mother. Let every girl be assured of this.—Christian at Work.

FIGHT A GOOD FIGHT.

A stingy Christian was listening to a charity sermon. He was nearly deaf, and was accustomed to sit facing the congregation, right under the pulpit, with his ear-trumpet directed upward toward the preacher. The sermon moved him considerably. At one time he said to himself, "I'll give $10;" again he said, "I'll give $15." At the close of the appeal he was very much moved, and thought he would give $50. Now, the boxes were passed. As they move along his charity began to ooze out. He came down from fifty to twenty, to ten, to five, to zero. He concluded that he would not give anything. "Yet," said he, "this won't do—I am in a bad fix. This covetousness will be my ruin." The boxes were getting nearer and nearer. The crisis was upon him. What should he do? The box was now under his chin—all the congregation were looking. He had been holding his pocket-book in his hand during this soliloquy, which was half audible, though in his deafness he did not know that he was heard. In the agony of the final moment he took his pocket-book and laid it in the box, saying to himself as he did it, "Now sqnirm, old natur'!"

Here is a key to the problem of covetousness. Old natur' must go under. It will take great giving to put stinginess down. A few experiments of putting in the whole pocket-book may, by-and-by, get the heart into the charity-box, and then the cure is reached. All honor to the deaf old gentleman. He did a magnificent thing for himself, and gave an example worth imitating, besides pointing a paragraph for the students of human nature.—Good Words.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

FOREIGN.

Gleaned from exchanges:

A church in the Sandwich Islands numbers 4,500 members and is the largest in the world except Rev. C. H. Spurgeon's.

Rev. David Macrae was inducted as pastor of an Independent Congregation at Dundee, Scotland, on the 31st ult.

Three Roman Catholic missionaries have left the Roman Catholic college, near London, for Afghanistan.

The Chief Rabbi of the English Jews, Dr. Adler, has resigned after thirty-five years of ministration. The executive of the council have proposed the election of Dr. Adler's son, Dr. Hermann Adler, as his colleague and successor.

Cardinal Manning will proceed to Rome early next month to plead his scheme, "which, by admitting certain changes in the external organization of the Catholic Church in England, will facilitate the return to the true faith of one important group of English Protestants."

Rev. Theodore Meyer recently stated at the anniversary meeting of the Jewish Mission of the Presbyterian Church of England, that during the year all the operations of the Mission had been carried on uninterruptedly and not without encouragement; and that during the eight years he had now been laboring in London he had been privileged to admit by baptism into the visible Church of Christ more than forty Jews; that a few of these indeed gave him great sorrow by their inconsistant walk, but that by far the greater number walked worthily of their high vocation, some even being burning and shining lights, engaged in proclaiming that Gospel which they had experienced to be the power and wisdom of God unto salvation.

The Bishop (Ceylon) continues to harass the Church missionaries in the useful work. Now he has gone to Badulla, where the Rev. Mr. Schaffter, one of the clergymen who was refused a license, had dared to hold simple Gospel services in an unconsecrated building, at the earnest request of many of the inhabitants. The Bishop severely attacked the members of the congregation at the church there, and said they had sinned in attending the services of 'that person," the tronhler of the Church, and that he must excommunicate all who attend after that warning. The inhabitants are very indignant, and are about to hold a public meeting to consider the matter. The Bishop, in a long oration, publicly denounced the services held by the Rev. Mr. Schaffter, and threatened excommunication and loss of all the privileges of the Church to those who should further attend them. Do we live in the middle ages?—Ceylon Observer.

The Examiner says: "The religious world of Russia is in a flutter of excitement. Prospects have been created of a future rapprochement of the Anglican and Russo-Greek Churches, and sanguine prelates are discussing the length of the interval that separates them from the period when English clergymen will come to them to adopt their sparkling ritual. The originator of these great expectations is 'Charles Sandford,' Bishop of Gibraltar, who has been paying a visit to the Southern parts of Russia. In the course of his journeyings he arrived at Odessa, and called upon General Geintz, the Governor, by whom he was invited to dinner. After the meal was over, the host, to interest his guest, had a solemn service specially performed in the Gubernatorial Chapel, and we imagine that it must have been of a generally representative character, as it occupied more than three hours, the Bishop the whole time manifesting the greatest interest in the spectacle. The next day 'Charles Sandford'—we continue the narrative in the form it appears in the special telegram in the Golos—had a lengthy interview with the Archpresbyter Platon, and, in taking, his departure, said, 'I hope that some of the ceremonies of the Russo-Greek Church may some day be accepted by our own, when we are more closely acquainted with one another." Whether the Bishop of Gibraltar simply meant this as a compliment to please Archpresbyter Platon, who has the reputation of being a good, amiable man, or whether the brilliancy of the Russo Greek service inspired him with Ritualistic longings, we are at present unable to say; but his words have been deemed of such importance that they have been printed in every Russian newspaper, and General Geintz's chaplain is generally believed to have half converted to orthodoxy the sympathetic English prelate."

A London Review correspondent writes: "Sweden has of late years made great progress in various directions, as, for instance, in the diminution of intemperance, the improvement of the penal system, and other movements, largely aided by the earnest personal influence of the illustrious Oscar I. and his son Oscar II. There has been concurrently a widespread revival of religion, manifesting itself in active lay preaching, Sabbath school extension, and deepened convictions as to the pacific nature of true Christianity. The Swedish clergy, who are required by law to be graduates of one of the two Universities of Upsal or Lund, and who are a very intelligent and useful body of men, have not manifested that breadth of liberality towards some of these new activities which a really wise policy might have suggested. And even the civil authorities have at times exercised much harshness towards some of the conscientious scruples of the converts to deeper convictions of religious truth, including many persons who still adhere to the national (Lutheran) Church, as well as the increasing number of Baptists, some of which latter body in Sweden rather approximate in their views to those of the Society of Friends. Recently a farmer in South Sweden was imprisoned for refusing to swear before a court of justice. Another farmer in the same district is being proceeded against for refusing to have his child baptized by the clergy. A young man from Skania was lately imprisoned for thirty days in a dark cell, and was almost blind on his release, because he conscientiously objected to military service. In various localities the Sabbath school labors of the 'revivalists' are being actively opposed by the clergy, who nevertheless often inform foreigners (as at the recent congress of the Evangelical Alliance at Basle) that 'perfect religious liberty prevails in Sweden." Whilst this undue harshness is tending to cherish the very opinions and convictions which it is designed to enppress, it is imposing disabilities and trouble upon many of the most loyal and useful people—men similar to those Baptists and 'Friends' who in this country and in the United States and elsewhere receive from the governments honorable consideration and the fullest protection for their liberty of conscience. Catholic Spain, Italy and Austria are in some respects more tolerant of religious differences than Lutheran Sweden."

WILMINGTON, N. C.:

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 26, 1879.

The Synod of North Carolina, at its late meeting, passed the following resolution:

"The Synod commends the N. C. PRESBYTERIAN as a paper worthy of the confidence and liberal patronage of our people, and hereby encourages its ministers and elders to aid in extending its circulation, until every family is supplied with a copy."

RUSSIA.

It must be exceedingly difficult to govern Russia, as the following statistics show: The population in 1875 was over eighty-five millions, and the Russian sway extended over an area of eighty-three hundred and fifty-one thousand square miles. An area over one hundred and eighty times that of North Carolina, and a population about eighty times as great. One hundred different tribes or nations, speaking forty different langnages, are under Russian rule; it follows that the varieties of disposition and the mental characteristics are almost endless, and that every shade and degree of civilization and enlightenment exist. The Greck Church represents the national religion, and its adherents are estimated at not less than 58,000,000; but there are also Armenians, about 600,000; Roman Catholics 7,250,000; Mohammedans 7,225,000; Jews 2,650,000; Buddhists and other pagans 550,000.

Under a liberal and enlightened government like that of Great Britain, in which vital Christianity, though not a prime factor, is an influential and conservative element, peaceful and effective administration of the laws is the natural ontworking and result, and the revolntionary spirit, wherever arising, is easily quelled. But in the existing state of Russian society and the diverse conditions which have been enumerated, without the ameliorating and shaping influences of religion, there is but one resource to preserve order—onlaying of the strong hand of despotic power.

Revolutions are not sudden and spasmodic outbnrsts of passion. They result from real or fancied wrongs, treasured in memory, brooded over, discussed as far as may be, and transmitted as a legacy of hate from sire to son, perhaps for generations. For years, perhaps for ages, under the pall of ignorance, the mailed hand of despotism may keep the people enslaved, but there comes a time when with changed conditions the passions surge over, carrying destruction to rulers and to ruled alike.

The people of France bore passively the grinding tyranny, gilded though it often was, of the long line of wicked rulers that preceded Lonis XVI., for with all their weaknesses and vice these rulers retained their iron grasp upon the liberties of the people. Upon the head of Louis XVI. fell the bolt of longpent wrath; upon his head it fell because of his virtues, which to people long unused to such, was weakness. The monarch who loved his people expiated the crimes of those who hated them. The history of Russia is a history of revolntions. Sometimes successful, the people have hurled dynasties to ruin and placed new despots on the throne, but mainly Russian monarchs have been men of iron will, who knew the worth of power and weilded it relentlessly. Before such men resistance resulted always in unsparing massacre and fresh inflictions of tyranny. In one city the bloody Ivan put 60,000 persons to death with torture, because they manifested the instincts of freedom. Peter the Great did much for his country, but no man's life was aught before him. Nicholas I. the father of the present Czar ascended the throne to encounter a wide-spread conspiracy, but relentless energy and unsparing vengeance secured to him a long and prosperous reign.

Russia of to-day has less to fear from the political complications which surround and threaten her, than from the revolntionary projects of Nihilism. Alexander I., the present Czar, has not deserved ill of his subjects. Despite the rigor of his dealings with conspirators against his throne, he is a liberal and a benevolent prince. One of the first acts of his reign was the emancipation of the serfs, by which over twenty millions of people, who were always transferred with the soil they tilled from owner to owner, were declared free, and virtually were made freehold farmers. No ruler more humane, no greater lover of his country and his people has ever governed Russia.

The conspiracy which has assumed proportions so formidable, unlike revolutions in general, is not the ontgrowth of tyrannous misrule, but the inevitable consequence of infidel teachings unopposed by the truth of God. During the reign preceding the present, and for a score of years before it, the severest restrictions were placed upon such literature as seemed to encourage or incite republican ideas, and with such literature infidel and atheistic philosophy was associated. Since the accession of Alexander, and under the institution of his more gentle rule, the teachings of the materialistic philosophy have extended until the schools throughout the empire are infected, and even the precincts of the palace itself have been invaded. The false philosophy has been carried beyond the bounds of the boasted reason which it worshipped, and Nihilism emerges as belief in nothing.

Nihilism does not propose reform of existing laws and institutions. Its aim is uncompromisingly, entirely, destructive. All property of Church and State would disappear in its success, and the very foundations of society be destroyed. Nihilism is nothingness, and its advocates the very direst foes to all religions and social order.

Alexander, it may be all too late, is compelled to the rigorous course he pursues. It should have been the mission of Christianity to oppose these doctrines of a false philosophy; to have enlightened the minds and to have imbued the souls of the people with the divine truth which would prove an antidote to the poison so freely administered. But religion in Russia is mainly represented by the Greek Church, an elaborate ecclesiastical structure, rejoicing in magnificent forms and bewitching trappings, but cold and dead as stone—alike indifferent and powerless—a gilded sepulchre, nothing more.

To Nihilism the teachings of Huxley, Darwin, Virchow and all such writers naturally lead. The infatuation of these miserable fanatics stands out as a verification of that revelation they reject, for if men will not receive the love of the truth that they may be saved, God sends them a strong delusion that they shall believe a lie!

THE COLORED PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

One item of peculiar interest is mentioned in the Statistical Reports of the Presbyteries to the Synod of North Carolina, at its late session in Statesville. It is this: "One church of colored people, organized in Newbern under the name of Ebenezer, has been received under the care of Orange Presbytery, according to the plan recommended by the General Assembly." While there is work being done by our ministers among the colored population, this is the only organized church among them, of which we know, in our connection in this State. None are reported in the Minutes of the Assembly for 1879, and no others in the Statistical Report of the Synod. We gladly hail this beginning of a most important work. Some time ago we gave an account of the organization of Ebenezer Presbyterian church. The work has been going on in Newbern under a colored licentiate, Mr. A. A. Scott, and the general oversight of Rev. L. C. Vass, pastor of the First Presbyterian church there. At present the great drawback to their success is the want of a neat church building for their services. These are now conducted in a public school house. Many of the colored people are watching with interest this enterprise, yet hesitate to join it as they wish, because it has not the outward show of ability to stand. Every one understands this. The members are firm and zealous and are striving among themselves to raise money towards getting a building lot and church. But they are all poor, and cannot accomplish this work themselves. They have sent a circular letter to our churches and some individuals, asking modestly but earnestly for the gift of ONE DOLLAR, if no more can be sent. We hope no church or person receiving this circular will fail to respond. Do not lay it aside. The cause is noble. Establish this church at once, and its success will tell on the general work among the colored race, and will be to the glory of our Redeemer. We will cheerfully forward any sums sent to us for this good cause, or they may be sent directly to Rev. L. C. Vass, Newbern, N. C. If each of the 115 ministers and 226 churches in our Synod would, for Christ's sake, immediately act in this matter, and send a generous gift to these colored Presbyterian brethren, they might have a modest church as a Christmas gift from the Synod. Shall they have this joy?

DEATH OF REV. W. B. CRAWFORD.

The following from Rev. A. L. Crawford will touch the hearts of all who read it. Let us be silent here.

MOCKSVILLE, N. C., Nov. 21.

Mr. Editor:—DEAR SIR:—It is with a sad and heavy heart that I write you of the death of my son, Rev. W. B. Crawford, pastor of the church at Washington, Arkansas. He died on the 15th inst., at his residence in Washington, of typhoid malarial fever, after an illness of ten or eleven days. He had just seemingly entered upon his work when he was stricken down. He had entered his 29th year, and had been about four years in the ministry. How mysterious the Providence, that one so young, so full of life, hope and promise should so early be cut down. In his last letter to me, dated Nov. 1st, writing of his separation from home and kindred, he says: "A time is coming when we shall all be brought together never more to part." And then he added: "My work keeps me busy, but I am happy in it." How soon was his work finished! About four days after he was seized with his last sickness. He was a member of the last General Assembly that met in Louisville, but is now a member of "the General Assembly and Church of the First-Born in heaven."

I can write no more.

Yours, &c., A. L. CRAWFORD.

DEATH OF REV. P. W. WARRINER.

The Texas Presbyterian says: This father in Israel fell asleep in Jesus at his home in Tyler, November 3rd. Thus another of the old pioneers has entered into rest. Faithful, laborious, and earnest, while able to work, he has now joined the great company of the redeemed which no man can number. Thus the ranks of the standard-bearers who early unfurled the banner of Presbyterianism in this great commonwealth are being depleted gradually, and soon all will be gone. The Fathers are passing away! May their mantle fall upon the young Elishas who are to take their place and carry on the Lord's work in our Zion! Dr. Marshall, long his associate in labors for the Master, gives a brief sketch of his life and work in another column.

NEW ORLEANS SEAMEN'S BETHEL.

The following from the Southwestern Presbyterian is so out of the ordinary run of our religious intelligence that we give it a special place in our columns:

"MR EDITOR: Do not let me weary you and your readers, but I am glad, and I know that you will rejoice and all readers, to hear that the good work still continues at the Bethel.

"On last Wednesday, at prayer meeting, three Christian seamen connected themselves with the Bethel church while in this port and four on Sabbath before last, among them the captain, chief officer and surgeon of the steamship Tentonia, which is destined to be the great emigrant vessel that will visit New Orleans every four months. I presume there is no better managed vessel that visits this port than the Tentonia. Emigrants do not hear oaths from its officers.

"Thirty-seven seamen have recently connected themselves with the Bethel church while in the port of New Orleans. They were members at home of the Presbyterian, Baptist, Methodist, Episcopal and Lutheran churches.

"On last Sabbath night, November 9th, two sailors joined the Bethel church on profession of faith in Christ, and it was refreshing to listen to their statement on examination before the session; and here let me remark that the Sabbath school children and the sailors in their examinations for church membership, can tell, and do tell in a clearer way, what Christ has done for them than others that I have heard in statement to the session.

"Dr. Nall preached at the Bethel on Sunday before last a glorious Gospel sermon, and was with the session, and I said to him, 'Now examine these sailors thoroughly,' which he did, and he and all of us were delighted with the direct and striking answers. I tell you, Mr. Editor, there is no disguise about 'Jack;' if he is wicked he is apt to show it, and if he is pious and loves Christ he seems to love Him with all his soul, and is quite ready to give an answer for the hope that is in him.

"On Wednesday before last the chief officer and surgeon of a steamship took an active part in the prayer meeting services, and on last Wednesday the surgeon delivered a lecture on the claims of Christ to our love and loyalty.

"If there is any doubting Thomas about what the Lord is doing for seamen let him come and see at the Bethel on Wednesday and Sabbath nights. SEAMEN'S CHAPLAIN."

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

Mr. R. E. Eskildson, hospital steward at Fort Johnston, Smithville, N. C., writes, enclosing subscription, and adds:

"There are no Presbyterian churches, families, or preachers in this village, or in this county, so far as I know, and during the past two years of my service here I have only been visited once by a Presbyterian minister. Rev. Colin Shaw called once, for a few minutes, while here on an excursion last summer. Hence as the N. C. PRESBYTERIAN is the only earthly representative of our Church outside of my own family, in this county, I assure you we prize it too much to give up its welcome visits."

The facts above call for some comment: The only Presbyterian family in Brunswick county except the one above referred to lives a few miles from Wilmington and is connected with the membership and congregation of the Second Presbyterian church of this city. Presbyterian ministers sometimes visit Smithville during the summer season on pleasure trips, to remain a few hours there or in the vicinity, but such have not, we are satisfied, been aware of any representatives of Presbyterianism in Smithville. We assure all that the Presbyterianism of Smithville makes up in intensity for its lack of volume, and our Church ought to look after it. As for Brother Shaw, of course he found the Presbyterian family. You couldn't hide Presbyterianism where he wouldn't find it.

Our lady correspondent who dates from Langeyne, requests that her friends will address her at Pittsboro, N. C.

Dr. George W. Lawrence, of Hot Springs, Ark., says that raw oysters will certainly relieve, if they do not cure asthma, consumption and all pulmonary complaints. They should be taken internally. The first thought that strikes one is that the physician and the oyster beds are very far apart, but the Doctor may be right.

Don't let us forget the Orphans at Oxford while returning thanks for the undeserved mercies and blessings with which God has favored us.

There are 137 children in the Asylum. The whooping cough has broken out among them. They need good warm clothing and healthful food. Funds are exhausted. In the name of common humanity, if we do not recognize the higher claims of Christianity, let there be collections taken up on Thanksgiving Day, or other practical means devised, to aid these children. Mr. Mills, appealing for help, says:

"The friends of the orphans are invited to send us bed covering, flannel cloth, yarn socks and stockings, and any kind of warm clothing. We shall also need fat pork and beef, meal, flour, hominy and peas; strong food being essential to bodily vigor."

The late Baptist State Convention unanimously adopted the following resolution:

WHEREAS, We feel a deep interest in the work of the Oxford Orphan Asylum, and believe it is doing an inestimable amount of good; and whereas, we believe that the Baptist people of the State will feel it to be not only a duty, but a privilege, to contribute regularly to its support; therefore,

Resolved, That all our pastors are hereby earnestly requested to take up a collection at each of their churches, at least once a year, in behalf of this great and important object.

The Thanksgiving proclamation was read on last Sabbath from both of the Presbyterian churches of this city, and the cause of the Orphans is urged upon the liberality of the Presbyterians of Wilmington.

While we are disposed to lament the evil that is surging around us, let us also look at the manifestations of good. The defenders of the Sabbath are active. In New Jersey recently a conference was held in which the Law and Order Association of Newark, the Methodist Conference, the Baptist Convention of the State, the Presbyterian Synod, and the Temperance Alliance were represented. A unanimous agreement was entered into to labor earnestly and vigorously in opposition to those who are leagued in the interest of vice.

Again, it is altogether hopeful that such vigorous and effective measures are taken against lottery swindles. The Postmaster General, by his orders to postmasters throughout the country, is certainly doing service in the right. Even greater effort in this direction will doubtless be made. Great credit is due to Anthony Comstock, who has the high honor of being, by evil-doers of all kinds, the worst abused man in the United States. Mr. Comstock has had a number of policy dealers, in New York, arrested and there is a prospect of a suppression of the vice in that city, if the parties are not pardoned after conviction, or before. Now let us stop all lotteries of any kind at church fairs and festivals.

We are often indebted to the London Weekly Review for foreign religious news, and we believe that in this department it is reliable, but on the political questions of this country we must look elsewhere for our information. With regard to the presidential prospects for next year here is the Review's idea of the situation:

The Democrats have lost the valuable aid of Mr. Tilden, who has refused to allow himself to be again nominated; while if the Republicans put forward General Grant a large number of the party will abstain from voting. In the meanwhile an independent candidate has been invited to enter the field in the person of Mrs. C. Woodhull, the well-known advocate of peculiar doctrines regarding the sexes. This lady has not yet made known her decision. Should she consent, her followers and admirers, who are rather numerous in New York and other centres, will make a determined effort to return her, not altogether without a prospect of success in the present divided state of the parties.

To this the Central Presbyterian retorts:

That reminds us of our disappointment many years ago in another Virginia village, when the Conference met there. The boys had looked forward to the meeting with great interest; they had got it into their heads that the Methodist ministers were circus riders; but when they came riding into town, they saw from the character of their horses, that it would be a very poor circus.

The Presbyterian says:

Dr. Leonard Bacon, of New Haven, is fond of having a discussion in a monologue about Presbyterianism and Presbyterian ways. No one replying to him he has the field to himself, and roams about undisturbed. Just now he seems to be wondering what Presbyterians are to do for a new Catechism, and thinks it will be a difficult problem to adjust. The problem does not trouble us at all, we assure Dr. Bacon. We are publishing, buying and using more copies of the Westminster Catechism than at any period of the Church's history, and hear no voice lifted asking for a new one. "The old is better."

The Northern Presbyterian Church will have a Quarterly Review representing its doctrines distinctively. The name is to be the Presbyterian Review, and its managing editors, says the Presbyterian, are to be Rev. Drs. A. A. Hodge, of Princeton, and C. A. Brigge, of New York. Drs. Herrick Johnson, Samuel J. Wilson, F. L. Patton and others, are to be co-operating editors. Assurances of sympathy and of literary and pecuniary help have been given heartily and promptly by numerous pastors, professors and laymen. A financial basis has been provided to meet the exigencies of the experimental period, which ought to be a short one.

It is not surprising that the Northern Church should rise in indignation against the Princeton Review as at present conducted.

NEWS NOTES.

We specially invite news from all quarters for this column.

From a private source we learn that Rev. L. H. Baldwin, formerly of Virginia, but at present of the Presbytery of Newark, N. J., has had a cordial and unanimous call to the church at Tarboro, N. C. He will enter upon regular service of the congregation on the first of January.

We are glad to have Mr. Baldwin return to us. The Tarboro Southerner compliments Mr. Baldwin by saying that his delivery is graceful and forceful, and the sermon heard was effective. It adds: "We regard Mr. Baldwin as a powerful pulpit orator."

A friend writes from Austin, Texas: "In your issue of the 12th inst. you copy from the Texas Presbyterian a copy of the call to Dr. R. K. Smoot from the Houston church. As Dr. Smoot has not accepted and will not accept the call, I hope your will publish this as additional news."

At the late communion service of Richlands church, in Onslow county, N. C., five persons were received into membership on profession of faith. There were no special services or exercises, and Rev. Geo. W. MacMillan had no aid. Three of the persons admitted were baptized. This is pleasant and encouraging news. We learn that the occasion was a delightful one.

INSTALLATION.

Rev. John H. Coble was installed pastor of the Presbyterian church at Laurinburg, N. C., on Sunday, November 23rd.

The committee of Fayetteville Presbytery, charged with this duty, filled their various parts. Rev. Wm. S. Lacy presided, preached and proposed the constitutional questions. The discourse was founded on I. Cor. v: 20, and treated of the Minister as an Ambassador of Christ. Rev. Roger Martin delivered the charge to the pastor, and Rev. A. N. Ferguson the charge to the people. A large congregation waited with interest and solemn attention upon these exercises.

The relation thus constituted promises much usefulness. The pastor and people are not unacquainted with each other, for the church has been supplied by Mr. Coble for seven years. The building is attractive and convenient, beautifully situated, and has been recently painted and refitted within and without. The people are united and enthusiastic. They even threaten to entertain Synod some of these days! Laurinburgh is a village of some 800 or 1,000 inhabitants, and has three handsome church edifices—Methodist, Baptist and Presbyterian—besides two churches for colored people. The shops of the Carolina Central Railway are situated here, and there are evidences of thrift and energy. It is hoped that this pastoral relation thus happily consummated will be fruitful of great good.

ROWAN AND DAVIE CLUSTER.

MILL BRIDGE, N. C., Nov. 21, 1879.

DEAR BRO:—The "Rowan and Davie Cluster" held its last meeting at Back Creek church on Monday last, Nov. 17th. The Cluster was opened with a sermon by Rev. R. W. Boyd, I. Thess. 5:11 last clause. Bro. B., spake of the fact that we are here being fitted for the place which God designs us to occupy in that vast spiritual temple which is now in process of erection. That we are to "edify" or build up each other, by means of the influence of our example upon each other. After the sermon John K. Graham, Esq., was elected president, and the "Cluster" entered upon its regular business. After a short recess we reassembled to hear an essay by Prof. R. Stirling, on "The Sabbath School Teacher." From one of so much experience with Sabbath Schools, and who has so much love for the work, we naturally expected much; and we were not disappointed. The question "What is the duty of parents and Church officers to the Sabbath School?" was then discussed at some length. On account of threatening weather the Cluster did not continue through the next day, as usual; but adjourned to meet at Unity on Monday after the third Sabbath in February, 1880.

Yours, &c., J. A. B.

"SOMETIME."

MR. EDITOR:—I beg for an insertion in your columns of the following scrap of delightful poetry, the sentiment of which is at once so instructive and so comforting. It will interest many of your readers to know that it was a favorite piece with that very dear lady whose death has, within these few past days cast so deep and so wide a shade of sorrow over the community which her sweet life had so served to adorn: Mrs. MARY MCLAUGHLIN NORTHROP. I have reason to know that her afflicted husband, and others of her bereaved relatives, have had the burden of their grief lightened somewhat by the power of these thoughtful lines; and it may be that there are more of God's people who, now mourning overmuch on account of lost friends, may also find a drop or two of consolation herein.

I would not, if I could, prepare for publication an exhaustive memoir of her whose name I have just mentioned; for I very much doubt whether such a memorial would prove satisfactory to those stricken ones who loved her too well when living, to witness with pleasure, now that she is dead, even the most touching display of her virtues in cold type. Indeed no one, even of those who knew her best, could catch and fix in description the aroma of a character so rare and so exquisite. Enough to know that when on earth she so lived for God as to render it certain that she now lives with Him. J. R. W.

"Sometime, when all life's lessons have been learned,
And sun's and stars forevermore have set,
The things which our weak judgment here have spurned,
The things o'er which we grieved with lashes wet,
Will flash before us out of life's dark night,
As stars shine most in deeper tints of blue:
And we shall see how all God's plans were right,
And how what seemed reproof was love most true.

And we shall see how, while we frown and sigh,
God's plans go on as best for you and me;
How, when we called, He heeded not our cry,
Because his wisdom to the end could see,
And o'en as prudent parents disallow
Too much of sweet to craving babyhood,
So God, perhaps, is keeping from us now
Life's sweetest things because it seemeth good

And if, sometimes commingled with life's wine
We find the wormwood and rebel and shrink,
Be sure a wiser hand than yours or mine
Pours out this potion for our lips to drink.
And if some friend we love is lying low,
Where human kisses cannot reach her face,
Oh, do not blame the loving Father so,
But tear your sorrow with obedient grace!

And you shall shortly know that lengthened breath,
Is not the sweetest gift God sends his friends,
And that sometimes the sable pall of death
Conceals the fairest boon His love can send.
If we could push ajar the gates of life,
And stand within, and all God's workings see,
We could interpret all this doubt and strife,
And for each mystery could find a key.

But not to-day. Then be content, poor heart;
God's plans, like lilies pure and white, unfold;
We must not tear the close-shut leaves apart,
Time will reveal the calyxes of gold.
And if, through patient toil, we reach the land
Where tired feet, with sandals loose, may rest,
When we shall clearly know and understand,
I think that we will say that "God knew best."

LOOK AFTER THE TETHER.

A tether is a restraint for horses or cattle at pasture—a rope, halter or chain—to keep within certain bounds. In those counties of the State where fences are taken away, farmers are learning to use the tether: they tether their horses and cattle. As one rides along the public roads through these counties he will be reminded of the popular saying: "Gone to the length of his tether," or as Mr. Webster would say, "tedder." It takes some care to learn how to tether cattle and horses. They will tear loose and trespass beyond their limits if they are not watched.

Let us look through this tether at some of the ways by which a minister is held to his pastorate. Sometimes a severe strain is put on the tether that binds a minister to his people, and if it is not carefully fastened he will get away.

Some people pet their ministers, but a good and faithful man cannot be held by such a tether as that—it is too weak to hold him—perhaps it would hold a woman preacher. No manly man is satisfied with it, and cannot be controlled by any mere ex officio estimate of his character, deferential forms, society manners, dead-head privileges, and complimentary notices. These are ways by which a minister is tolerated, not tethered.

A good salary, promptly paid, is a good tether. But even this will not hold a strong, conscientious pastor, under the inspiration of his Master's approval.

It goes against the grain to call upon certain people, especially to minister to those who are always more ready to receive the attentions of other ministers than their own, to talk plainly and kindly with offended people, to deal promptly and faithfully with backsliders, and crotchety people, and others who want to be petted and sweetened and praised, and to do all this while the censorious and supercilious Canaanite is standing around watching every motion and every blunder. If a good salary is all that restrains a strong man, he will get away from such service as this; or, if he does not get away, it will be because he is not strong enough. A stronger man would.

A well watered, healthy place and a poor but cultivated people, is a good tether and hard to break. But an earnest, aggressive, thinking man will break even this, when a severe strain comes upon him. His blood healthy, fire in his eyes, smile on his face, his emotions awakened by contact and communion with congenial gentlemen in other parts, he can't stand still, he will look around him and tramp over his grounds; he will find it soft under his feet in some places, and the stimulants on which he once fed, lose their influence and a paralyzing weight presses him down, and with powerful energy he pulls at his tether, and if it is not very carefully examined by experienced and thoughtful people, the weak worn place in it will give way. A farmer has to study the habits of his stock; he does not know them at first; it takes time. So our Presbyterian system of permanent pastoral charges, rests on a solid principle. You can't tie a minister to a field in six months or a year. His tether must be fastened in the hearts of his people, or he will tear out and leave. Heart-power can't be secured in a day.

I know a minister who has been permitted to give the right hand of fellowship to a goodly number of young people during the few past years, and he has now the pleasure of seeing them bringing their individual offerings in their own hands. A silent, tender, thoughtful attention is given to his preaching, till there is some fellow feeling between that minister and those young people, which is the strongest tie that binds minister and people. If a people have fellow-feeling for their minister, so that he feels its restraint, he can't get away from them. It ties him to their family altars and firesides. R. Z. J.

A REMINDER.

TUSKALOOSA, Ala., Nov. 15, 1879.

The churches under the care of our General Assembly are respectfully reminded that the first Sabbath in December is the day appointed for collections for the support of the Institute for the Training of Colored Ministers, at this place.

The school is in successful operation under the able instructions of Rev. D. C. Rankin. Eight students have been in regular attendance during the present session, and have made satisfactory progress. Others are expected. We ask for liberal contributions from all our churches, and from all individuals, favorable to this important enterprise, so that we may extend its advantages to larger numbers.

Money to be forwarded to Dr. J. T. Searcy, Treasurer.

By order of the Executive Committee.

C. A. STILLMAN,
Corresponding Secretary.

We have received from Martin V. Calvin, General Southern Agent, Augusta, Ga., the following Educational Works, published by Lippincott & Co.:

1. Sanford's Primary, Intermediate, Common School, and Higher Analytic Arithmetics, by Shelton P. Sanford, A. M., Professor of Mathematics in Mercer University, Georgia.

Nothing better than this series of four Arithmetics can be desired for our schools. A most careful examination shows their excellence in clear definitions, ample exercises, and exact analysis. In their full and elucidating application of the analytic system to arithmetic, they surpass any series we have examined.

2. Worcester's School Series of Dictionaries, embracing primary, 60 cents; school elementary, $1; and comprehensive, $1 75.

The first and last are largely illustrated, and all have large appendices, containing a mass of important information. The series is very complete. Especially valuable is the comprehensive dictionary, exhibiting authorities for pronunciation and extended notices of synonyms; preliminary discussions of sounds, and the English language, and elaborate tables giving the pronunciation of classic, scriptural and geographical names, words and phrases from foreign languages; ancient mythology, &c. Very low introductory prices are offered.

The Contemporary Review for November from George Munro, publisher, 17 Vandewater street, N. Y., $2 25 a year.

Contents: On Freedom, by Max Muller; Mr. Gladstone; Two Studies Suggested by his "Gleanings of Past Year;" The Ancient Regime and the Revolution in France, by Prof. Von Sybel; What is the Actual Condition of Ireland? by E. S. Robertson; The Deluge; Its Traditions in Ancient Nations, by F. Lenormant; Suspended Animation, by R. A. Proctor; John Stuart Mill's Philosophy Tested, by Prof. W. S. Jevons. Also "White Wings," from Cornhill Magazine.

Scribner's Monthly.—Contents for December; The Capitol of New York; Brother Antonio; Two Visits to Victor Hugo; Poems, by American Women; The Johns Hopkins University; Confidence; Coffee Culture in Brazil; Success with Small Fruits; The Grandissimes; Waiting for Winter; and many others. Scribner & Co., New York.

The Nursery for December—choicest of periodicals for the very little ones—is at hand. Price $1 50 a year. J. L. Shorey, Boston.

Wide Awake for December is so good that the Christmas number can hardly be better—however, something very fine is promised for the holidays. Sammy Sealskin's Enemy, with which the number opens, is one of the best of Rev. Edward A. Rand's stories, this is followed by Mrs. Celia Thaxton's story of Bergetta's Misfortunes, for which J. G. Frances has made one of his irresistible cut pictures—two pictures for which alone anyone can well afford to buy this number. A Model Sewing School, by Mrs. Lillie, is written from the English point of view. Palmer Cox gives one of his fine animal pictures, a whole Æsop's Fable in itself, and there are puzzles, and letters for little folks, and a piece of Christmas music. Only $2 00 a year. Now is the time to subscribe.

Ella Farman, editor. D. Lothrop & Co., publishers, Boston.

Vivian the Beauty, by Mrs. Annie Edwards, is a novel of the Handy-Volume Series, from D. Appleton & Company. From the list of contents we think it must be very entertaining. Price 30 cents.

The Sunday School Quarterly, an aid to the Study of the International Sunday School Lessons. By Rev. F. N. Peloubet. First Quarter, 1880. From W. A. Wilde & Co. Boston.

Well arranged, with pictorial illustrations, commentary, doctrines and duties, in convenient quarto form of 40 pages.

ECLECTICISMS.

THE RELIGIOUS NEWSPAPER.

Presbyterian:

The power of a religious newspaper is far wider than its circulation or the number of its subscribers. It is an imponderable agent, diffusing itself all along the lines of thought. Men grasp its teachings, they know not how. Its thoughts find their way into the secular press, and are also brought forth in the unconscious utterances of the pulpit.

STUDY THE BOOK.

Presbyterian Journal:

Do you wish to be eminently successful in winning souls to Christ? Study THE BOOK. This is the two-edged sword that pierces to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, joints and marrow, and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart. Machinery has been invented which, worked by skillful hands, can furnish to order a greater number of nominal converts, manufactured in a given period; but "the truth" alone makes children of God and heirs of immortality.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

SOUTHERN.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Mr. E. G. Smith, who has for several months been supplying the churches of Horeb and Aiswell in Fairfield county, S. C., has been invited to supply Hopewell church in Marion county, S. C., recently made vacant by the removal of the Rev. W. T. Thompson to Shelbyville, Tenn.—Southern Presbyterian.

Dr. Charles H. Read, pastor of Grace Street church, Richmond, Va., has returned home from a visit North. His visit was for the purpose of obtaining aid for his church, and he was encouraged by receiving $2,300. Pledges and payments in Richmond make the whole amount contributed $5,000, and about as much more is needed to complete the church as proposed.

Rev. A. N. Wyckoff was installed pastor of Canal Street Presbyterian church in New Orleans on Sabbath, 16th inst. Rev. James Beattie presided, Dr. Palmer preached and the charges to pastor and people respectively were delivered by Dr. Markham and Dr. H. M. Smith.

At an adjourned meeting of East Hanover Presbytery on Friday, 14th inst., at Portsmouth Presbyterian church, licentiate L. E. Scott was ordained to the full work of the gospel ministry as an evangelist, to labor in the eastern portion of this Presbytery.—Central Presbyterian.

Rev. W. S. Thompson has had charge of Trinity church, New Canton, Va., for thirty seven years. At the late communion five persons were added to the church.

A correspondent writing to the Central Presbyterian from Bethel church, Augusta county, Va., November 17th, says: "At the recent communion of this church, Rev. J. J. Murray pastor, there were eight additions. One week before a series of sermons was begun at an outpost of the congregation, and yielded good results. Rev. W. E. Baker assisted and preached excellent sermons. Those at the church on Friday and Saturday were particularly striking."

The address of Rev. W. W. Houston has been changed from Salem, Roanoke county, Va., to Lexington, Va.

The boys of Tabb Street Presbyterian church, Petersburg, Va., have formed themselves into an association for the purpose of improving their Sunday school library. They have issued a prospectus announcing that on Saturday next they will issue the first number of a weekly journal, to be called The Cheirogram, to be edited and published by them. Each number will contain a condensed but accurate report of Dr. Witherspoon's sermon of the preceding Sabbath night, prepared by Dr. Witherspoon, and to appear as an exact fac simile of the handwriting of the contributors. The boys hope by this means to obtain a fine library for the Sunday school.—Cor. Dispatch.

Rev. O. F. Rogers writes to the Texas Presbyterian from Coleman, Texas: "By appointment of the Presbytery of Central Texas I organized a church here last Saturday, Nov. 8, to be under the care of Central Texas Presbytery. We have eleven members and others are expected to unite with us soon. On Sabbath we had one of the most delightful communions it has been my privilege to enjoy in Texas." The are going to build a cheap but comfortable church, and need help.

Under date Nov. 8, 1879, Rev. W. P. Hall writes from Bryan, Texas, to the Texas Presbyterian: "By invitation the Rev. J. W. Sexton recently visited us and preached two excellent discourses. After the close of service we held a congregational meeting and gave him a unanimous call to become our pastor. A postal received from him to-day informs us of his acceptance, which gives us great joy, as we have been so long thirsting for spiritual nourishment. We expect him the first of December and a cordial welcome awaits him."

The revival in New Providence church, Ky., in which reference was made last week, resulted in twenty additions to the church on profession. Rev Barbee Betts was assisted by Rev. R. Council. The interest continues.

Rev. S. D. Hogg, pastor of Hopewell and Clintonville churches, writes us, under date of Paris, Nov. 14th: "We closed a pleasant meeting at Hopewell last week, with three additions, two by letter and one on profession. The Rev. Jerry Witherspoon assisted the pastor. The meeting of Ebenezer Presbytery at Clintonville was followed by several days' preaching. Rev. J. M. Evans assisted the pastor. There were three additions, two by letter and one on profession.—Christian Observer.

The new Presbyterian church at Belle Haven, Va., was dedicated on Sunday, Nov. 9th. The building cost $1,200, is gothic in style, and of suitable dimensions.

The new Presbyterian church at Mitchell's Station, Culpeper county, Va., is nearly completed, and was dedicated on Nov. 6th. On the day of dedication nine members were received into this church on certificate.

Rev. Thomas Ward White's postoffice address is changed from Greensboro, Ala., to Charleston, Tallahatchie county, Miss.

A new church was dedicated at Wesson, Miss., Nov. 2d.

Rev. Alex. Sprunt was, last Saturday, installed pastor of the Old Stone church, Rev. T. M. Boyd delivered the charges both to pastor and people.—Staunton (Va.) Vindicator, Nov. 21st.

On Saturday evening, Nov. 9, an impressive scene was witnessed in the Presbyterian church in this city. The ordination of two ruling elders of the new colored Presbyterian church. The colored congregation met on the previous Wednesday evening and elected Luke Lowry and Davenport Grant ruling elders, both of whom are highly respected and pious men. Sunday evening the session, as a presbyterial committee, proceeded with the ordination of the candidates by prayer and laying on of hands. Rev. Mr. Mackin, the Assembly's professor in the Institute, gave a lucid Bible warrant for the office, with an explanation of its duties and the character befitting it. Dr. Stillman also made forcible remarks, and proceeded with the ordination prayer, which, for fervor and eloquence, must have been indicted by the Spirit. The colored brethren seemed deeply impressed, and we venture that a more intelligent membership, though small, can scarcely be found anywhere. They will soon procure a house of worship, and, by the assistance of the white elders and the colored students, they will launch their little boat, and may it follow in the wake of the "Old Ship of Zion," free from storms and reefs, and prove a blessing to their branch of the human family.—Tuskaloosa Gazette.

NORTHERN.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Rev. Ariel M. Master, lately in charge of a Congregational church, has come back and accepts an invitation to the Presbyterian church at North La Crosse, Wis.

The Presbytery of Solomon was very weak when formed three years ago. Now it has 53 churches and 27 ministers.

Thirty two Presbyterian churches have been organized in Kansas during the past year, with an average membership of fifteen persons.

Chief Joseph's band of captive Nez Perces is a group of Presbyterian people. A full blood Indian by the name of Archie B. Lawyer, a licentiate of Presbytery of Oregon, came from his distant home in Idaho to preach to them. He reports over one hundred who profess to be Christians, and wish to be connected with the Presbyterian Church.—Presbyterian.

CONGREGATIONALIST.

The church in West Medway, Mass., Rev. J. M. Bell, pastor, has just issued a new manual. It is a remarkable fact that in a period of 129 years this church has dismissed but two of its ministers. Rev. Jacob Ide, D. D., who still holds the relation of senior pastor, was ordained in 1814. He has been very feeble for many months past.—Christian Intelligencer.

METHODIST.

Rev. T. R. Taylor, expelled from the Baptist Church in Texas for teaching the doctrine of sanctification as understood by the Methodists, has united with the latter body.

The liabilities of the Missionary Treasury of the Methodist Church have decreased during the last year from $141,922 to $63,037 16.

PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL.

At a recent meeting of the General Board of Missions in New York $25,000 was raised in a single hour for the support of Bishop Riley's mission in Mexico.

REFORMED EPISCOPAL.

The Episcopal Recorder gives the following news of the Second Reformed Episcopal church, Philadelphia, Rev. Dr. Nicholson's: "At the time of Mr. Powers' death there was a mortgage upon the ground on which this church was erected to the amount of $36,000. This mortgage executors of Mr. Powers' will maintained they were unable to assume, though the intention of Mr. Powers was proven, and in conversation they expressed themselves as satisfied of that fact. A very generous friend of the church has now legally and irrevocably assumed the principal and interest of the mortgage, so that the church is now out of debt."

BAPTIST.

On Sunday morning, Nov. 9th, five persons were baptized in Philadelphia, one of whom was a Presbyterian minister, Rev. Henry Lesch of the Central Presbytery of Philadelphia.

The New Jersey Baptist Anniversaries were lately held at New Brunswick. President Campbell made a short address at one of the meetings. There are 32,000 Baptists in the State.

LUTHERAN.

Brobst's Lutherische Kalendar for 1880 has been issued, and it gives the grand total of all divisions of the Lutheran Church in America as containing 3,087 ministers 5,376 congregations and 689,195 communicant members.

INDEPENDENT CATHOLIC.

The Independent Catholic Church consecrated the Rev. Father McNamara its first bishop at a service held in Standard Hall, New York city, last Sunday night. There was a large audience in attendance, and on the platform were a number of Protestant clergymen, including the Rev. Drs. Prime and Philip Schaff. After a sermon by Father O'Connor, chancellor of the church, the ceremony of consecration was performed in accordance with a ritual adopted by the Independent Catholic Church. At the close of this ceremony the communion was administered after the Protestant manner. The services of this new church are said to be largely attended and several priests have united with it.—Christian Union.

SECULAR MISCELLANY.

A fire broke out in Wilmington on Saturday morning before day, by which the planing mills of Messrs. Colville & Taylor were destroyed, as were also the sash and blind factory of Messrs. Altaffer & Price and a naval store shed of Messrs. Alex. Sprunt & Son. A large quantity of lumber and naval stores was destroyed. The total loss amounts to about $40,000. We learn that Messrs. Altaffer & Price expect to order new machinery and hope in a short while to resume operations. We presume Messrs. Colville & Taylor will also rebuild.

The American Health Association held its sessions at Nashville last week, and discussed measures looking to the prevention of the incipiency and spread of yellow fever. An advisory council was appointed. The Southern members are Drs. Webb of Alabama, Cobb of Florida, Campbell of Georgia, Johnston of Mississippi, Halliday of Louisiana, Clapp of Tennessee, Joyner of Virginia, Wood of North Carolina, Lebby of South Carolina and Rutherford of Texas.

Sixty-five farmers and their families left Liverpool for Texas on 21st inst. They are mostly Englishmen, but a few are Irish and Scotch.

The new telegraphic cable between France and the United States has been formally opened for business.

In the course of the cholera epidemic in Japan there have been over 90,000 deaths.

The Cumberland fair is said to have been very successful.

The King of Holland has the largest private conservatory in the world. It contains two immense palm-trees, the smaller of which weighs two and a half tons, beside a wonderful collection of tropical plants. The glass dome of this huge greenhouse is ninety feet high and one hundred and eighty feet in diameter.

A friend writes from Reidsville that "Mr. Leach, with a class of eleven orphans, raised between $30 and $40 for the Orphan Asylum."

Prince Gortchakoff is now in his eighty-second year. The Czar himself is nearly sixty-two. Lord Beaconsfield is seventy-four. Bismarck is sixty-five; and Von Moltke, who "can hold his tongue in seven languages," is seventy-nine. The Emperor William is nearly eighty-three.

"Lies! Big Lies!"

Not so fast my friend; for if you would see the strong, healthy, blooming men, women and children that have been raised from beds of sickness, suffering and almost death, by the use of Hop Bitters, you would say "Truth, glorious truth." See "Truths," in another column."

CHAPLAIN RANDOLPH MACON COLLEGE, VA.
Messrs Polk Miller & Co:
Many cases of Dyspepsia within my knowledge have been cured by VEST POCKET CURE Cramps, Colics, Headaches, and all sorts of pains from indigestion yield promptly to it. The cures of this sort are innumerable.

25c. buys a pair of Lyon's Patent Heel Stiffeners and make a boot or shoe last twice as long.

IF SUCCESS be the true test of merit, it is certainly a settled fact that "Brown's Bronchial Troches have no equal for the prompt relief of Coughs, Colds and Throat troubles.

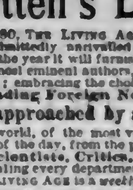
"THE PRINCE AMONG MAGAZINES."—N. Y. Observer.



THE GREATEST LIVING Authors, such as Prof. Max Muller, Rt. Hon. W. E. Gladstone, Jas. A. Froude, Prof. Huxley, R. A. Proctor, Edw. A. Freeman, Prof. Tyndall, Dr. W. B. Carpenter, Frances Power Cobbe, The Duke of Argyll, Wm. Black, Miss Thackeray, Mrs. Mulock-Craik, Geo. MacDonald, Mrs. Oliphant, Jean Ingelow, Thos. Hardy, Matthew Arnold, Henry Kingsley, W. W. Story, Turguenief, Ruskin, Tennyson, Browning, and many others, are represented in the pages of Littell's Living Age.

In 1880, THE LIVING AGE enters upon its thirty-seventh year, admittedly unrivalled and continuously successful. During the year it will furnish to its readers the productions of the most eminent authors, above-named and many others; embracing the choicest Serial and Short Stories by the Leading Foreign Novelists, and an amount

Unapproached by any other Periodical in the world, of the most valuable Literary and Scientific matter of the day, from the pens of the foremost Essayists, Scientists, Critics, Discoverers, and Editors, representing every department of Knowledge and Progress.

THE LIVING AGE is a weekly magazine giving more than double-column octavo pages of reading-matter yearly. It presents in an inexpensive form, considering its great amount of matter, with freshness, owing to its weekly issue, and with a satisfactory completeness attempted by no other publication, the best Essays, Reviews, Criticisms, Tales, Sketches of Travel and Discovery, Poetry, Scientific, Biographical, Historical and Political Information, from the entire body of Foreign Periodical Literature.

THREE AND A QUARTER THOUSAND

The importance of THE LIVING AGE to every American reader, as the only satisfactorily fresh and COMPLETE compilation of an indispensable current literature,—indispensable because it embraces the productions of

is sufficiently indicated by the following

Opinions.

"The last volume of THE LIVING AGE presents a fresh example of the judgment in selection and adaptation to the demands of the best popular literature, which have secured so wide a circulation to that periodical."—N. Y. Tribune.

"It covers the whole field of literature, and covers it completely, thoroughly and impartially."—Times, Cincinnati.

"It affords the best, the cheapest and most convenient means of keeping abreast with the progress of thought in all its phases."—North American, Philadelphia.

"It is, by all odds, the best eclectic published."—Southern Churchman, Richmond.

"It is the embodiment of the truest and purest literature of the age."—Am. Chr'n Review, Cincinnati.

"With it alone a reader may fairly keep up with all that is important in the literature, history, politics and science of the day."—The Methodist, New York.

"To read it weekly is a liberal education."—Zion's Herald, Boston.

"There is no magazine published that gives so general a knowledge of what is going on in the literary world."—Presbyterian Weekly, Baltimore.

"Gives the best of all at the price of one."—New York Independent.

"It holds the palm against all rivals."—Commercial, Louisville.

"There is no other way of procuring the same amount of excellent literature for anything like the same price."—Boston Advertiser.

"It supplies a better compendium of current discussion, information and investigation, and gives a greater amount and variety of reading-matter, which it is well worth while to read, than any other publication. . . . It is simply indispensable."—Boston Journal.

"Ought to find a place in every American home."—New York Times.

"There is nothing comparable to it in true value in the whole range of periodical literature."—Mobile Register.

Published WEEKLY at $8.00 a year, free of postage.

☞ EXTRA OFFER FOR 1880. ☜

To all new subscribers for 1880 will be sent gratis the numbers of 1879 which contain, besides other interesting matter, the first chapters of "HE WHO WILL NOT WHEN HE MAY," a new story by MRS. OLIPHANT, now appearing in THE LIVING AGE from advance sheets.

Club-Prices for the best Home and Foreign Literature.

["Possessed of THE LIVING AGE and one or other of our vivacious American monthlies, a subscriber will find himself in command of the whole situation."—Phila. Even'g Bulletin.]

For $10.50 THE LIVING AGE and either one of the American $4 Monthlies (or Harper's Weekly or Bazar) will be sent for a year, both postpaid; or, for $9.50 THE LIVING AGE and the St. Nicholas, or Appleton's Journal.

TARRANT'S SELTZER APERIENT

Tarrant's Seltzer Aperient.

May properly be called the "Hercules" of medicine, for it cleanses Nature's augean stables, and allows the recuperative powers of the system to do the work of restoration to health. No medicine cures; Nature alone cures. The aperient opens the proper avenues, the functions are permitted to resume their work, and the patient gets well.

TALBOTT'S PATENT SPARK ARRESTER.
The Invention of the Age.

It does not destroy the draft.
It does not interfere with cleaning the tubes.
It will not choke up, and requires no cleaning.
It requires no direct dampers to be opened when raising steam (dampers being objectionable, as they may be left open and allow sparks to escape)
It requires no water to extinguish sparks, which, by condensation, destroys the draft. Besides, when water is used, if neglected, the efficiency is destroyed by evaporation of the water, and the boiler is kept in a filthy condition.
It is simple and durable and can be relied upon.
It can be attached to any boiler.
No planter should be without one of them. Insurance companies will insure gins and barns where the Talbott Engines and Spark-Arresters are used at same rate as charged for water or horse-power.

GREAT SUCCESS Once more I am permitted to send forth my Holiday Greeting. Never before has my enormous business been so large as it is at the present moment, now nearly a hundred thousand of my celebrated instruments have found their way to happy firesides in all parts of the civilized world. Upon the strength of this great success, our citizens have chosen me their Mayor, by the largest majority ever before cast. So great has been the demand for my world renowned instruments (many of which I saw while traveling in Europe last year.) I am compelled to erect the largest factory (that is selling direct to the public) on Earth. Situated as it is on one of the finest locations in N. J., at Washington, Cor. Railroad Ave., and Beatty St., (Name of street changed to Beatty, by act of council in honor of the great enterprise,) and within one hundred yards of the Junction of four different railroads, leaving for all parts of the country. Some idea of this immense structure can be gained from the following viz., in its construction over three hundred tons of lumber were required, thirty tons of slate were used in its roofing. It contains nearly four hundred widows an Engine of sixty horse-power, drives over $9,000 worth of the finest wood working machinery. The above cut gives but a faint discription of this mammoth building. ☞ Labor and Material is Advancing. If you ever intend to buy an instrument, Now is your Opportunity. If you do not want one for your own fireside, buy for a Holiday Gift for your friend. ☞ Latest Illustrated Newspaper, (Holiday Edition) Sent Free. ☞ Please show this Holiday Offer to your Friends.

BUFFALO LITHIA WATERS

The case of a son of Dr. B. S. Hardy, of Hookerton, Green County, N. C., stated by him. Extract from Letter dated 22nd, of Oct., 1879.

"My son has been for several years afflicted with stone in the bladder, which frequently occasioned intense suffering, and resulted in the breaking down of his general health, and in complete nervous exhaustion. The most approved remedies accomplishing nothing beyond an occasional mitigation of its symptoms, a little more than a year ago I put him upon the Buffalo Lithia Water, Springs No 2, the use of which for some three weeks caused the discharge of a number of gravel of small size giving inexpressible relief, and about a month after my letter to you of last November, he discharged a stone weighing twelve grains, the largest I am confident that I ever knew to pass through the urethra, which proved upon application of test to be of a mixed character, consisting chiefly of Calcium, Carbonate and Phosphate. He has since experienced but little trouble, and whenever there has been any unpleasant symptom, it has been promptly relieved by a few goblets of the water. The discharge of the stone was soon followed by improvement in his general health, which has been fully restored. The action of the water in this case has been truly wonderful."

FOR THE FAMILY.

Shaping the Future.

We shape ourselves the joy or fear
Of which the coming life is made,
And fill our future's atmosphere
With sunshine or with shade.

The tissue of the life to be
We weave with colors all our own,
And in the field of destiny
We reap as we have sown.

Still shall the soul around it call
The shadows which it gathered here,
And, painted on the eternal wall,
The past shall re-appear.

Think ye the notes of holy song
On Milton's tuneful ear have died,
Think ye that Raphael's angel throng
Has vanished from his side.

Oh no! we live our life again;
Or warmly touched, or coldly dim,
The pictures of the past remain—
Man's work shall follow him!

—John G. Whittier.

Docks.

As for me, I wanted Robinson Crusoe—that large, fine edition down at Hemmens' book store, with the colored pictures. I wanted it for my own—not to return to somebody else when I had read it through. What was one reading for such a book as that?

Dick didn't want Robinson Crusoe. Not a bit of it; nor any other book. The less he saw of a book the better he liked it.

He was my brother—my twin brother, too—but we weren't any more alike than—well, than two honeysuckle blossoms one yellow and the other red, on the same stalk.

What Dick did want was one of Tony's black puppies. Tony was Mr Lesseps' hostler, and he was raising the dogs to sell. Mr. Lesseps was our next neighbor, and his little Alice was the sweetest blue-eyed, golden-curled beauty that ever ran with her arms reached out to meet two admiring young playfellows like us. Dick thought all the world of Alice, but I do believe he saw even more loveliness in the tawny velvet hide, the turbid blue eyes of either one of the little fat trio cuddled asleep a greater part of the time on the straw in Mr. Lesseps' stable.

Robinson Crusoe was two dollars and a half. The best puppy was two dollars and a half. They might as well have been a million. How were we two youngsters to have five dollars pocket money all at once? and how long would it take us to save it?

Our father had only the year before bought our summer home in the country. He was a busy merchant in New York, and knew very little about farming. Mr. Lesseps' place was beautiful and elaborate, for he had owned it a long time, but ours was still in the rough, and there remained a great deal to be done in every part of it, ploughing, grading, planting and what not. Father used to come out and spend a day or two in the week with us, and how he did enjoy getting on his farm clothes and going around watching the work and supervising his men here and there, seeing things come more and more into shape.

But I was telling you how much Dick and I wanted five dollars. We wanted it so much that one morning when father had gotten on his duster and was waiting for the carriage to come round to take him to the station, we went to him, and Dick, who was generally the spokesman for the two, acquainted him with our desires. I said nothing, but the petition in my eyes seconded the motion.

You ought to have seen father's face. "Five dollars! Well, well! that's a tall want for little shavers like you! What do you want to do with five dollars?"

We told him. He listened to us, looking from one to the other as we severally expatiated upon the merits of our desiderati.

"Well, now, let's see," said he. "I have to work for my five dollars; and it needs a great many to take care of you two little chaps, and all the rest of it, don't you see?"

Yes, we saw.

And would we "be willing to work for our five dollars?"

"Yes, yes"

"Well, what do you want to do most?" he asked, his merry eyes twinkling. "Will you pull weeds?"

"Yes, sir," we eagerly responded.

"Come along, then," he said, and taking us each by the hand he led us into the lawn yet to be, now merely a grass-grown pasture field, and up to a tall plant with great leaves, and a plumy head of great seed-vessels stirring softly in the summer air.

"There!" says father. "Now, there are about ten thousand of these things on the place, and for every one you'll pull up I'll give you a penny; so you can be rich, boys, if you like, both of you. You can buy all Tony's pups, Dick, and Hal here, he can get books enough to start a library. Hey? How's that?"

Well, we thought that was delightful. We thought we could have our hearts' desires—say next morning—and father left us looking back and laughing from the carriage to see us pulling with all our might at the big dock.

We might as well have pulled at one of the stone pillars of the carriage porch. We looked at each other in blank disappointment, and we also looked at our hands; they smarted already.

"This one is so big," says Dick, "let's find little ones that will come up easy."

It wasn't a hard matter to find them—all we wanted—but, alas! the little ones held on harder than we could.

Jim Holt, our farmer's son, was passing by, with a rake over his shoulder. He looked at us, smiling dryly.

"What you doin'?" he asked. We tugged away, flushed and determined.

"Don't you know you can't pull docks?" said he. "Why, them things has iron bars for roots, and they go through to the other side of the yairth, and then they're clinched in!"

"Poh!" we said, "no such thing."

"Fact!" says Jim, looking at us soberly as he walked away. "that where the iron comes from; that's the way they raise it."

"Father was making fun of us," said I, "he knew we couldn't do it."

Dick was looking at the inside of his hands and rubbing them against his trousers' legs. "Let's go to Tony's and see the puppies," said he.

Tony's white teeth grinned as he saw us. He was polishing a set of harness; and in an empty stall near by, in the corner, on a pile of straw and old horse blankets, lay three little buff roly-polys snuggled together in warm, panting slumber. They lifted their sleepy heads as we smoothed them, and looked at us drowsily out of their dark-blue clouded eyes, and then down they heavily dropped again into slumber.

We told Tony our experience of the morning. But what was our surprise before we had proceeded far to see him suddenly pause in his work and listen to us with attention, and when we had finished throw his head back and burst out laughing, and then keep slapping his knees and laugh on, rolling his head from side to side! We could not help laughing heartily in sympathy, though what in the world it meant we didn't see. "Oh ho!" he chuckled at last "Now dat ar's curus. Ha! ha! Mas'r King he do' 'no' no great 'bout farmin'! Now Mas' Dick, yo' got yo dog, sho'. Yo' tell yo' fader he kin fotch 'long h's ten t'ousan' out o' de back, 'cos yo' go'n to git it now, no mistake 'bout dat ar." And then he proceeded to tell us in his own fashion, which I will translate for brevity's sake, that if we possessed our souls in patience till there came a good rain to wet the soil down to a great depth the dock roots would pull nearly as easily as turnips, and we could pile them, so to speak, Pelion upon Ossa.

There is no need to say how often, after this, our gaze was directed toward the heavens, nor how suddenly we became interested in the weather article in father's Tribune. Father would sometimes ask, "Well, boys, how about those weeds? When shall I bring out the five dollars?" And he would merely look at each other with a smile which we understood well enough, but which to him meant our enlightenment as to the staying power of the common dock.

At last there appeared ominous lines in Prof Probabilities' diagram. There came a day when winds and gusts and gathering gloom darkened and deepened, and then a storm broke over the earth such as people tremble to see. We were not selfish enough to be glad, either, when we heard of all the ruin and death the tempest was bringing on sea and land. The rain fell in sheets, the streets ran torrents, the winds roared and raged. When at last the storm ceased and the sun appeared once more, nature scarcely seemed rejoicing, but exhausted, drooping, broken, as if its strength were gone and it had no heart left.

But although we had been half frightened at the fury of the test, and wholly sorry at its violence, there had been space enough for us to remember our own special enterprise. We had gone out the first few hours after the rain set in, and essayed a sturdy dock. It seemed just as firm as the first one which had defied all our effort. We went to Tony to ask an explanation. He answered us by letting a hose pipe discharge itself for ten minutes or so on a stalwart root growing near, and then showing us how easily our united strength could dislodge it. "Groun' got to be soakin'—jes like sponge;" he said, "den yo' do it—jes's I tell yo'."

The morning of the day it cleared we went to him. He grinned when he saw us afar off, and began a pantomime of stooping and pulling which we well understood. "Ebbery ting reddy now," he said, "yo' kin git yo' ten t'ousan', if yo' wan' to. Tell ye chil'en," he continued, "keep um all in a heap, out o' sight, som' 'er, till yo' git all yo' want; 'n 'en pile um up, de whit roots inside, nice—so' fader can count 'um easy."

We pulled docks two hours, and by that time we had emptied four hand-cart loads under the woodshed, and piled them neatly, one hundred and fifty strong. But we could do no more—at least that day. Our backs ached; our fingers were blistered—to say nothing of boots and clothes stiffened with the mud of the soaked soil, and drenched from the dripping weeds.

When father came home on the third afternoon, we took each one of his hands, and led him out—silently, in reply to his questions, but with giggles and capers he was at a loss to understand—till we walked him in front of the white bristling piles in the wood-shed.

"There they are," said one of us.

"Five piles—a hundred in each," added the other.

"A penny a piece, father."

"I'm going to start a library."

"I'm going to have the best puppy."

Father looked from one to the other as we spoke.

"How did you get them?" he asked.

"We pulled 'em."

"Pulled 'em! You pulled 'em?"

"We pulled 'em."

When we had sufficiently enjoyed our triumph we explained. He regarded us with wide opened eyes of comic astonishment meanwhile, and then he gravely drew his port-monnaie from his pocket and counted us out each two dollars and a half.

"Well, boys," says he, "I don't know but I've got my five dollars worth as well as you. Jim! Here!" he called. "Tell your father to set all you fellows to work on dock roots all over the place; don't leave a single one, if it takes all day," and before he had finished talking we were already on our way to Tony, and Dick gathered up his own especial favorite into his arms, looking at it as if it were a package of Hope's candy and he were hungry. The next day father brought me out my Robinson Crusoe. —Mrs. E. C. Gibson, in Christian Union.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Burns in Edinburgh.

Burns set out on his first visit to Edinburgh on a pony he had borrowed from a friend. The town that winter was agog with the ploughman poet." Robertson, Dugald Stewart, Blair, "Duchess Gordon, and all the gay world," were of his acquaintance. Such a revolution is not to be found in literary history. He was now, it must be remembered, twenty-seven years of age; he had fought since his early boyhood an obstinate battle against poor soil, bad seed, and inclement seasons, wading deep in Ayrshire mosses, guiding the plough in the furrow, wielding "the thresher's weary flingin' tree," and his education, his diet, and his pleasures had been those of a Scotch countryman. Now he stepped forth suddenly among the polite and learned. We can see him as he then was, in his boots and buckskins, his blue coat and waistcoat striped with buff and blue, like a farmer in his Sunday best; the heavy ploughman's figure firmly planted on his burly legs; his face full of sense and shrewdness, and with a somewhat melancholy air of thought, and his large dark eye "literally glowing" as he spoke. "I never saw such another eye in a human head," says Walter Scott, "though I have seen the most distinguished men of my time." With men, whether they were lords or omnipotent critics, his manner was plain, dignified, and free from bashfulness or affectation. If he made a slip, he had the social courage to pass on and refrain from explanation. He was not embarrassed in this society, because he read and judged the men; he could spy snobbery in a titled lord; and, as for the critics, he dismissed their system in an epigram. "These gentlemen," said he, "remind me of some spinsters in my own country who spin their thread so fine that it is neither fit for weft nor woof." Ladies, on the other hand, surprised him; he was scarce commander of himself in their society; he was disqualified by his acquired nature as a Don Juan; and he, who had been so much at his ease with the country lasses, treated the town dames to an extreme of deference. One lady, who met him at a ball, gave Chambers a speaking sketch of his demeanor. "His manner was not prepossessing—scarcely, she thinks, manly or natural. It seemed as if he affected a rusticity or landertness, so that when he said the music was 'bonnie, bonnie,' it was like the expression of a child." These would be company manners; and doubtless on a slight degree of intimacy the affectation would grow less. And his talk to women had always "a turn either to the pathetic or humorous, which engaged the attention particularly." The Edinburgh magnates (to conclude this episode at once) behaved well to Burns from first to last. Were heaven-born genius to revisit us in similar guise, I am not venturing too far when I say that he need expect neither so warm a welcome nor such solid help. Although Burns was only a peasant, and one of no very elegant reputation as to morals, he was made welcome to their homes. They gave him some good advice, helped him to some five hundred pounds of ready money, and got him, as soon as he asked it, a place in the Excise. Burns, on his part, bore the elevation with perfect dignity; and with perfect dignity returned, when the time had come, into a country privacy of life. His powerful sense never deserted him, and from the first he recognized that his Edinburgh popularity was but an ovation and the affair of the day. He wrote a few letters in a high-flown, bombastic vien of gratitude; but in practice he suffered no man to intrude upon his self-respect On the other hand, he never turned his back, even for a moment, on his old associates; and he was always ready to sacrifice an acquaintance to a friend, although the acquaintance were a noble duke. He would be a bold man who should promise similar conduct in equally exacting circumstances. It was, in short, an admirable appearance on the stage of life—socially successful, intimately self-respecting, and like a gentleman from first to last.

The Home of Plants.

When we find certain plants growing wild in certain localities we are likely to consider these localities their natural homes—we conclude that they prefer such localities to any other. In this, according to the Popular Science Monthly, we may or may not be correct. Plant life is one ceaseless struggle, and as in animal life the weaker is constantly succumbing to the stronger. As the weaker is overpowered it is pursued by the stronger; and thus many plants are driven from the soils they would prefer and forced to take refuge in less congenial soils, simply because these form retreats into which the stronger plants cannot follow. We have many strong points in support of this idea. Take the case of the pine for one of them. We find the pine on poor, sandy soil, and we at once decide that poor, sandy soil fills the natural requirements of the pine; but transfer the pine to a rich soil, remove the deciduous trees from about it, and you find it at once a far more flourishing tree than it was in its sterile sands. This, then, explains how it is. The pine cannot bear crowding as can many other growths, and so it retreats before them until it has reached localities into which they cannot come But for this fact we would have pines growing in every portion of the country.

Then there is the willow, and the cotton-wood, and the sycamore. We find them closely hugging the wet margins of streams and we consider them habitually "water growths," but not so. Give them fair play and they will flourish on the high lands equally as well; hence we must consider that they have merely retreated to the situations in which we find them, not because they like wet soil better but because they are here saved from destruction at the hands of those enemies that are most powerful on dry land, but cannot grow in contact with water.

Then the weeds on our farms afford us another illustration. They are there not always from choice, but because our destruction of the more powerful wild growths has given them a showing for their lives which they could not find in the woods

A Bedouin Horseman.

While climbing slowly up a steep bank on the opposite side, a Bedouin of the tribe of Ben Issacher, mounted on a pretty black mare, overtook us at full gallop. He pulled up and joined our party, and we talked to him for some time through Karam. Alford offered to buy his long spear with silver-bound joints At one end was an iron point to stick into the ground when not in use, and at the other a sharp point of burnished steel. He was a most friendly and affable Bedouin, and showed us all his arms—pistol, sword, knife, and so forth When we arrived at the rocky plateau at the top of the hill, he gave a sort of performance for our amusement, galloping about and whirling his lance with dramatic effect and many loud cries, as he thrust at and parried thrusts from an imaginary enemy. He turned and twisted his mare about with incredible ease and swiftness, only guiding her with a halter, for the bit, which is scarcely ever used except in warfare, hung idly from his saddle all the time. We rode together for some distance, and at parting he took the charm from his horse's neck—a crescent-shaped piece of wood—and presented it to me with a most graceful salaam. Altogether we were rather pleased with our fellow-traveller, until old Hadji Hassan let out that his parting words had been a strongly expressed wish to find any two of us alone in a place where he could use his weapons in earnest. Six together were beyond his ideas, so he made the best of his disappointment.—Fraser's Magazine.

Humorous.

A gentleman doubted his ability to climb a picket-fence, but one growl from a dog gave him the necessary confidence, enterprise and alacrity.

A gentleman was one day relating to a Quaker a tale of deep distress, and concluded very pathetically by saying, "I could not but feel for him." "Verily, friend," replied the Quaker, "thou didst do right in that thou didst feel for thy neighbor; but didst thou feel in the right place—didst thou feel in thy pocket?"

One day a stranger came into the office, looking angry, and inquired for Greeley. I pointed him to the little den where Greeley was scratching away for dear life, and he made for it. As he went in I heard him say: "You —— old hypocrite!" Greeley did not look up or even pause, but kept driving his pen madly on, his nose within a couple of inches of the paper, and his lips whispering the words after the pen, as was his wont. The fellow continued, calling Greeley's attention to an article that had offended him, and denouncing him as a villain, a coward and a liar, with an oath about every other word, meantime threatening to "knock his head off." Greeley didn't stop for a moment, but jabbed his pen into the ink and wrote on unruffled by the blasphemy. At last the intruder exhausted his vocabulary and turned to leave the room, when Greeley jumped up and squeaked out to him, "Say, neighbor, don't go! Stay here and free your mind!"—Oliver Johnson.

The best lawyers always tell the best stories, and with none the less zest when at their own expense. Not long ago Counsellor C—— was before Surrogate Calvin in a case where the question involved was as to the mental condition of the testatrix. The witness under examination, herself an aged lady, had testified to finding Mrs. Seaman failing, childish, and that when she told her something she looked as if she did not understand. Counsellor C——, cross-examining, tried to get her to describe this look, but she didn't succeed very well in doing so. At last, getting a little impatient, he asked: "Well, how did she look? did she look at you as I am looking at you now, for instance?" The witness very demurely, replied: "Well, yes; kind of vacant like."

SECULAR NEWS.

The British government has about satisfied itself of the complicity of the ex Ameer of Afghanistan in the massacre of the British embassy.

Snow storms prevailed on the 19th inst. all along the Atlantic coast, and in some sections well into the interior. In Wilmington there was more snow than has fallen in many years. Turner's Almanac failed us this time.

Hale's Weekly says that a tobacco factory is to be started in Raleigh. Sixteen hands will be employed.

Chief Justice Smith has been discharged by his physicians in New York.

Two Irish speakers have been arrested on the charge of having, in public speech, used language calculated to incite a breach of the peace. There is great excitement in consequence and it is questionable whether the laws can be enforced without the strong hand of government.

The Wadesboro Fair failed on account of the weather, snow a foot deep being on the ground. The prospect was good for a fine showing.

The first State Agricultural and Industrial Fair of colored people in the world was held in Raleigh, commencing Monday, Nov. 17th. It was opened by Gov. Jarvis. The display was highly creditable.

LONDON, Nov. 20.—An Odessa dispatch says about a dozen of the most prominent Russian cotton manufacturers have lately gone to Egypt to buy enormous quantities of raw material, and hire all the plantations on the banks of the Nile. The chief aim of these merchants, who, it is stated, are worth 20,000,000 roubles, seems to be to shake off the yoke of the English and the Liverpool market. All the produce of Russia will not suffice to meet the wants of the Russian cotton factories.

Not a Beverage.

"They are not a beverage, but a medicine, with curative properties of the highest degree, containing no poisoning drugs They do not tear down an already debilitated system, but build it up One bottle contains more hops, that is, more real hop strength, than a barrel of ordinary beer. Every druggist in Rochester sells them, and the physicians prescribe them"—Rochester Evening Express on Hop Bitters.

THIS NEW ELASTIC TRUSS

Has a Pad differing from all others, is cup-shaped, with SELF-ADJUSTING BALL in the center, adapts itself to all positions of the body, while the BALL in the Cup PRESSES BACK THE INTESTINES JUST AS A PERSON WOULD WITH THE FINGER. With light pressure the Hernia is held securely day and night, and a radical cure is certain. It is easy, durable and cheap. Sent by mail, postage paid. Circulars free.

45 Years Before the Public.
THE GENUINE
DR. C. McLANE'S
CELEBRATED
LIVER PILLS,
FOR THE CURE OF
Hepatitis, or Liver Complaint,
DYSPEPSIA AND SICK HEADACHE.

Symptoms of a Diseased Liver.

PAIN in the right side, under the edge of the ribs, increases on pressure; sometimes the pain is in the left side; the patient is rarely able to lie on the left side; sometimes the pain is felt under the shoulder blade, and it frequently extends to the top of the shoulder, and is sometimes mistaken for rheumatism in the arm. The stomach is affected with loss of appetite and sickness; the bowels in general are costive, sometimes alternative with lax; the head is troubled with pain, accompanied with a dull, heavy sensation in the back part. There is generally a considerable loss of memory, accompanied with a painful sensation of having left undone something which ought to have been done. A slight, dry cough is sometimes an attendant. The patient complains of weariness and debility; he is easily startled, his feet are cold or burning, and he complains of a prickly sensation of the skin; his spirits are low; and although he is satisfied that exercise would be beneficial to him, yet he can scarcely summon up fortitude enough to try it. In fact, he distrusts every remedy. Several of the above symptoms attend the disease, but cases have occurred where few of them existed, yet examination of the body, after death, has shown the LIVER to have been extensively deranged.

AGUE AND FEVER.

DR. C. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS, IN CASES OF AGUE AND FEVER, when taken with Quinine, are productive of the most happy results. No better cathartic can be used, preparatory to, or after taking Quinine. We would advise all who are afflicted with this disease to give them A FAIR TRIAL.

For all bilious derangements, and as a simple purgative, they are unequaled.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

The genuine are never sugar coated. Every box has a red wax seal on the lid, with the impression DR. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS.

The genuine McLANE'S LIVER PILLS bear the signatures of C. McLANE and FLEMING BROS. on the wrappers.

Insist upon having the genuine DR. C. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS, prepared by Fleming Bros., of Pittsburgh, Pa., the market being full of imitations of the name McLane, spelled differently but same pronunciation.

INSTITUTE FOR TRAINING OF COLORED MINISTERS
Under the care of the General Assembly.
Located at TUSKALOOSA, ALA.

THE FOURTH SESSION, of ten months, will commence on the 1st day of September next, under the instruction of Rev. D. C. Rankin, Professor, who has the best testimonials of fitness for the work, in his deep interest in the colored people and his past labors in their behalf, his ample scholarship, and his aptness to teach.

All the branches necessary to fit candidates for the Gospel Ministry will be taught. Some acquaintance with the early branches of English will be required for entrance. Candidates must come recommended by their Presbyteries or Committees of Education; and if of other denominations, must have similar credentials.

No charge for tuition. Board can be had on reasonable terms.

PRESBYTERIANISM DEFENDED.

I know that the phrase "Presbyterianism defended" will be considered by some as synonymous with the phrase Methodism attacked. Against this idea I do most earnestly protest. Those who understand what are the distinctive doctrines of the Presbyterian Church, and who sincerely embrace and love them, must of necessity have very decided objections to many of the sentiments expressed, and to many of the measures used, in promoting a work of grace by those who reject those doctrines. In extremely rare instances have these objections been expressed from the pulpit by Presbyterian ministers: and they have refrained from doing so, although they have seen the injury resulting from the prevalence of these objectionable sentiments and measures, for the sake of peace. Presbyterian ministers have conscientiously stood aloof from, or at least by refusing their co-operation have tacitly manifested their disapprobation of those religious meetings in which certain measures are used, and certain instructions are given; and on this account have been charged with opposing a work of grace; and they have refrained from giving their reasons for what is considered as strange conduct, for the sake of peace. So that the advocates of these objectionable measures and instructions have always held the vantage-ground. By reason of this silence so generally observed, the mass of the people, especially in those localities where the members of different denominations are mixed together, see but one side of the subject, and remain in absolute ignorance of the reasons which influence the conduct of the Presbyterian clergy. To give publicly their reasons would be construed into an attack of the doctrines and methods of the Methodist Church. But notwithstanding the fact that such a construction will be put by some upon what I shall write under the title at the head of this article, I affirm that I am seeking only to defend what I believe to be truth, and truth of great practical importance. I shall condemn not men but measures, and will avoid every expression inconsistent with that charity which Christians should have towards those who differ from them in religious opinions. The charity which is from above is "peaceable" as well as "pure," but it is "first pure." To have such a charity towards those who hold religious errors as will induce the endeavor to correct their errors, is to have the spirit of Christ. To have charity for what is believed to be religious error, is to have the spirit of the father and lover of lies.

It should not be forgotten that Calvinistic divines are put upon the defence of what they believe to be the truth, by reason of the charge made against them that by refusing to co-operate with their Methodist brethren in the use of these objectionable methods of conducting religious meetings, they are hindering the conversion of sinners.

It is a fact that more souls are led to make a public profession of religion in the use of the methods alluded to, than by the simple preaching of the gospel without the use of these methods. Those Churches which adopt them are outstripping in numbers those which do not adopt them. If they are lawful; if a greater number of souls are converted, and a greater number, being self-deceived, are not injured, by the use of them; then the facts alluded to above is true. And it becomes the imperative duty of the Presbyterian clergy either to withdraw from their present position of disapprobation, or defend it.

The methods objected to have recently been brought prominently to view in many portions of our State in connection with the public preaching of females. I will therefore, in the first place show the grounds of objection to this method by which it is sought to advance the cause of religion.

The doctrine that a woman may, with the approbation of the Head of the Church, exercise the function of preaching which belongs to the minister of the Gospel, seems to the minds of most thoughtful Christians, when it is at first presented to them, so new, so absurd, so plainly opposed to the proprieties of social civilized society, and to the teaching of the word of God, that many are led to conclude that a studied effort to agitate it will give it a prominence before the public which it does not deserve; and that it is treated with silent contempt, it will soon die an ignominious death. I am not of this opinion. There are thousands of persons in North Carolina to-day who within the few years have become converts to the doctrine that God has set the seal of His approbation upon the public ministration of the gospel by women. And thousands more will soon be led to embrace the same opinion in localities not yet visited by that class of enthusiasts. Notwithstanding the reaction, and the revulsion from the movement that will take place, and notwithstanding the fact that those who will not become converts to the new doctrine will be more decided in their rejection of it, yet the errors concomitant with such a movement that will be embraced by multitudes, will not be easily eradicated. The love for that kind of religious excitement which is brought into existence by appeals to the emotional nature is similar in its intensity and tenacity to the love for strong drink. The self-deceived especially, will, as a general rule, and under favorable circumstances, suffer a recurrence of the spiritual intoxication. Besides this movement, unconsciously to the minds of many well meaning people who advocate it, is a potent auxiliary of infidelity in its present phase and mode of attacking the Church of God. Those who adopt the the opinion that men and women may lawfully preach the gospel, though they should not be chosen and set apart to the office of the Gospel ministry by an organized visible Church of Christ, are in danger of coming finally to the belief that the visible Church with its divinely appointed ordinances is an institution which may be dispensed with.

If all the ministers of the Gospel who believe that this woman movement is a positive violation of the commands of God, and therefore must be deleterious to the spiritual interests of man, would publicly present the arguments in proof of that position, and use all their influence to persuade their people that it is wrong for them to indulge their intense curiosity to witness an act forbidden by the word of God, the movement will not be likely to be so extensive. It is the encouragement given to it by good men who do not think that it is right, that greatly helps it forward. If it be a movement approved of God, let us help it forward by all means. If it is not, then let us openly and fearlessly denounce it.

With these preliminary remarks, I will proceed in my next article to give the arguments found in the Bible against women preaching.

P. T. Penick.

INTERESTING INCIDENTS.

The following, which refers to the Missionary Work in Siam, is an extract from a letter of Rev. Daniel McGilvary, received by his daughter, to whom it was written, last July. The young lady kindly gives permission to publish it:

Yesterday was one of our delightful communions which are getting to seem like real communions. It used to be hard to reconcile it with our youthful ideas of a communion to have only Mr. and Mrs. Wilson, Wannno, Loong Nan and one or two others, but we began to feel strong when we had any beside ourselves. Now with our little church of thirty-three adults, and a congregation of eighty, it really does seem as if it were no longer a day of such very "small things" as it once was.

We were sitting at the table yesterday morning when Nan Inta came up gesticulating, "Good news! Good news!!" Our dear old Chew Phya See-hanat, from Lakann, had arrived at an out village and would be in to communion as soon as he could, and if he should be a little late to please wait for him. But he got in an hour or two before time. If he had rained down from the sky we would hardly have been taken more by surprise. When we bade the dear old man good-bye last year, when he was so unceremoniously sent off by the second king. I had a special communion for him, and told him that we would go to see him, but we hardly expected him ever to come to us again. Just think; he is 74 years old, and left his home, over fifty miles away, on Thursday morning last, on foot, and walked over the mountains until Saturday night, when he reached a village about ten miles from here, weary and worn, with feet perceptibly swollen, hoping to get here on Saturday night. There he met a friend who kindly let him have an elephant to ride in on Sabbath morning. He was thus enabled to get here in time and save some extra suffering, as the last ten miles would have been very hard for him. We had a general rejoicing, you may imagine. He believes that he was enabled to get here in answer to prayer. He says he prayed for the rain to be stayed, and had not a shower on the mountains. You know he was sent off from here last rainy season, and he prayed that he might be protected from rain. Once or twice he could hear it, but he was kept dry. A happy accident, Tiudal would say, but may it not have been something more? I sat and listened at the man's simple faith in that and in many other experiences of his there alone, and I felt that I ought to take lessons from him. At any rate I did not tell him that the rain was accidental, for I do not believe that it was. This morning he was telling me about blessing those who kindly received him, in a way that made me fear it might be misunderstood for a Buddhist ceremony of the same kind, when he said, "Why, Jesus told his disciples when they entered a house or city and were received to let their blessing rest on it; if not to shake off the dust of their feet." He knows a great deal about the Bible which he had been reading twenty years in the one given by your dear grandfather. Of course he has some wrong ideas, but it is interesting to see the freshness of some of his ideas gathered from the fountain head. We have some disadvantages by our early training, with our many advantages, but you will be sure to see the good old man some day. I have no doubt that Chew Phya See-hanat will one day drink new wine in the Father's kingdom without a walk of fifty miles over mountains and forests to reach it. The excitement of the day kept him up yesterday but he had quite a fever last night. What made it better was, he did not certainly know till Sabbath morning that it was our communion Sabbath. As it was he met all the Christians, who were all glad to welcome him, and it seemed so nice that he met the one of all others most interesting.

We had the largest regular congregation that we had ever had. A prince who seems as if he were about embracing the Gospel, was among the number. Dr. Cheek performed an operation on him last year which relieved him, and he learned to read and we hope will be converted. Another old man, Mun Chammam—do you remember him?—was with us yesterday. He used to write Laos manuscripts for us. Mr. Wilson and I met him on our first visit, and he has always been a friend, but always relied on the stock of merit that he had made by building a temple when young and in better days. He has been an invalid for three or four years, and has spent most of his property except his house. Of course his priest friends that he used to feed, and but few others have much to do with him. He is now 76 years old, and never until the last month has he shown any evidence that his afflictions had humbled him. He seems convinced at last that he has no merit. His knowledge of our books is quite extensive as he both reads and has written some of them. He walks about the house and I had our young men to go after him in a boat. He seemed to enjoy the day, and when leaving wanted to know when we would baptize him.

But I must not forget another one of our special causes of gratitude yesterday. Quite an interesting young man, who had been living with us almost a year, and had learned to read the Siamese and our Sunday School books and the Shorter Catechisms, appeared before the session and stood a very satisfactory examination and was baptized with the child of one of our members. It was my day to conduct the services and I was aided in them too, for which I am also thankful. How easy it is to preach or speak when God's Spirit is seriously present with us.

For the N. C. Presbyterian.

REV. WM. PERKINS ON JUDE v: 10, 16, 18.

"The second point is how intemperate persons in these things corrupt themselves: namely, four ways: 1st, in regard of their bodies, upon which, by their sin of intemperance, they call sundry sicknesses, diseases, yea, and hasten their death; 2d, they disgrace God's image, making themselves worse than the beasts; 3d, they destroy their souls, for no drunken or riotous person shall inherit heaven; 4th, they overthrow their families in wasting their substance to the maintenance of their intemperance, and so bring ruin to the places where they live.

In these sedncers we have a glass wherein to behold the state of our days and times; in which intemperance has taken place, not only in profane houses but even in religious places, and where religion is professed.

A common practice is to drink with glasses without feet, which must never rest; also by the bell, the die, the dozen, the yard and other measures, and then use tobacco or other means to sharpen appetite still. An horrible sin. First carried to England, 1586, thirty years before, exceeding this sin of these seducers themselves. Seeing intemperance bringeth just corruption, and in the end destruction, upon the offenders, we must make conscience of sobriety and temperance. This is the end of God's grace, which has appeared to teach us to live soberly. And whosoever cannot obtain thus much of himself to deny abuse of the creatures will never attain to the denial of himself for Christ's sake, and is as yet a man of no religion." E. F. R.

THE REFLEX POWER.

The great work that our churches and various missionary societies are doing is seen in its abundant fruits. The day is past when it is plausibly said that nothing comes of missionary effort, and that money expended in fostering and carrying it on is wasted. If we take up one of our own missions and look at the results of it, we will be led to acknowledge that it of itself sets at rest the question as to whether it is profitable to send men and women to preach the Gospel to the heathen.

But sometimes we forget to think of the value of this work upon the Church at home. Mr. Spurgeon said a year or two ago that we need not so much ask if the perishing can get along without us, as whether we can live without trying to save them.

And if a Church will but rightly think of it, it will enter into its work of beneficence impelled by the feeling that the reflex influence of what it does for others will be an infinite compensation for its labor and expenditure. The great enemy which Christians have to fight is selfishness, and it may assail them in their churches and worship as well as in business and social life. Their provision for their own enjoyment and comfort in worship being ample and on a liberal scale, they would be astonished, and insulted perhaps, to be told that they were in danger of injury from excessive regard to their own private interests. "Are not these," they would say, "are not these arrangements we have made for worship proof of our generosity and that we are thinking more of doing good than simply of our own gratification?" And they will be honest in their belief. After all, they have but provided for themselves and their families accommodations for religious services, and have possibly thought but little of the wants of the world around and beyond them. We may make even our Psalm singing and preaching a means of cultivating selfish self-love, and for shutting up the fountains of our souls that ought to be open and flowing for the refreshing and rejoicing of our fellowmen.

It is for this reason that we need the exercise of training in missionary effort. For our own souls' good we need to look beyond ourselves and give to those who are in need. Our piety requires that we shall expend our means and strength in seeking to promote that which will bring to us no earthly advantage, and which will be in its intention and character a real charity to persons towards whom our hearts may be directed. The church which restrains its sympathy from the world in its neighborhood and farther off, no matter how generous it may be towards itself, will dwarf and perish under its own inconsiderate spirit. An appeal to our heart of benevolence is as much an offer of blessing to ourselves as an expression of a want and claim on the part of those from whom it comes.—United Presbyterian.

CLERGYMEN'S SONS.

I think that of all sections of mankind the clergymen are those to whom, not only for their own sakes, but for the sake of the community, marriage should be most commended. Why, sir, are you not aware that there are no homes in England or Scotland from which men who have served and adored their country have issued forth in such periodical numbers as those of the clergymen of our church? What other class can produce a list so crowned with eminent names as we can boast in the sons we have reared and sent forth into the world? How many statesmen, soldiers, sailors, physicians, lawyers, authors, men of science have been the sons of village pastors? Naturally, for with us they receive careful education, they acquire, of necessity, the simple tastes and disciplined habits which lead to industry and perseverance; and for the most part they carry with them through life a purer moral code, a more systematic reverence for things and thoughts religious, associated with their earliest images of affection and respect, than can be expected from the sons of laymen, whose parents are wholly temporal and worldly.—Lord Lytton.

FROM DARKNESS INTO LIGHT.

BY S. S. PHILLIPS.

A dying Christian upon being asked, Do you know me, can you see me now? replied, No; all is dark, but it will be all bright soon.

Through the gathering gloom of night,
Comes there no celestial ray,
Never a single gleam of light
Lends its aid to cheer my way.

But the midnight gathers o'er me,
Rushing waters round me flow,
Nothing can I see before me,
Nor eye marks where footsteps go.

But there's One who's e'er beside me,
And upon His arm I lean;
Now my fears no longer chide me,
Though His form is yet unseen.

For His voice is softly saying,
"It is I, be not afraid;"
My alarm still more allaying—
"I'll protect, be not dismayed."

So though earth-friends be not near me,
Still I'm safe by His dear side;
In His arms secure He'll bear me,
E'en o'er Jordan's rolling tide.

Hark! I catch the sweetest singing,
Singing of the saintly band,
And I hear the anthem ringing,
As it rolls along the strand.

See! the darkness now is parting,
And the shadows flee away:
Oh! the golden light is darting
Into an eternal day.

On Him rests the glorious light,
Who hath brought me to this place,
And in its effulgence bright,
I behold Him face to face.

'Tis; Oh, 'tis, my great Redeemer!
Father, Friend, and Crucified,
King of Kings, and Lord forever,
Risen God, and Glorified.

LIVE FOR SOMETHING.

Thousands of men breathe, move and live—pass off the stage of life and are heard of no more. Why? They did not partake of good in the world, and none were blessed by them; none could point to them as the means of their redemption; not a line they wrote, not a word they spoke could be recalled, and so they perished; their light went out in darkness and they were not remembered more than insects of yesterday. Will you thus live and die, oh! man immortal? Live for something! Do good, and leave behind you a monument of virtue, that the storms of time can never destroy. Write your name by kindness, love and mercy, on the hearts of thousands you come in contact with year by year, and you will never be forgotten. No, your name, your deeds, will be as legible on the hearts you leave behind as the stars on the brow of the evening. Good deeds will shine as brightly on the earth as the stars of heaven.—Dr. Chalmers.

NEAR TO CHRIST.

"Never is the believer so near to Christ's heart, and the Spirit's comforts, and heaven's joys, as when the flood of dark and broken waters is surging beneath and around him, lifting him upon their crested billows.

The higher the ark which bore the church of old rose upon the flood, the nearer it mounted towards heaven.

As earth receded heaven approached, and the vessel, floating away upon the bosom of the swelling deep, mounted higher and higher.

Is it not so with the believing soul when floods of great waters come upon it?

As these waters rise and swell, sinful follies, worldly vanities, carnal pursuits, pride, self and ignorance disappear, and the soul gets nearer to heaven."

MIRTH AT HOME.

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

A merry heart doeth good like a medicine, but a broken spirit drieth the bones, declares the wisest of men. Fanny Kemble once advised a friend to cultivate in the young people she taught an equal love for the good, the beautiful and the absurd, defending herself from the charge of frivolity in commending the last of the three, by telling, how, in a day of deep depression, she had been cheered and brightened for hours, by the exquisitely droll scuttling away of land-crabs from her horse's feet.

A swift appreciation of the ludicrous is the happy birthright of some fortunate people, but there are those who never see a joke quickly, and who cannot comprehend why it makes others laugh, even after it has been duly explained. If, as the proverb says, laughter is medicinal, they are much to be pitied. They are not cushioned against the sharp corners and hard knocks of life. There is a coarse wit which is allied to buffoonery, and may descend to indelicacy, and the less we have of that the better. Some of our American humorists have defaced their pages by scenes and stories which only blunt the fine sense of purity and take off the bloom of modesty. There is fun enough of an innocent and wholesome sort, without accepting this. The brightness and buoyancy which make the dull day cheerful, which lift the wearied and the ill from their depression, and which impart courage when disaster seems imminent, are priceless gifts. The merry-making the best of things, seeing the silver edge along the thickening cloud, remembering how much worse misfortunes might have befallen, and being cheery when others are disconraged, how noble are these qualities when put in practice, and how brave they may be. I agree in a measure with the brilliant French woman, who said that "The joyousness of a spirit is an index of its power;" words true for all time. It should be a matter of conscience with us to maintain serenity of outward appearance under all circumstances, and never to monopolize the conversation with accounts of our pains, perplexities, or grievances.

I have been thinking much lately about fun and frolic, as educational and beneficient in the home. I think we take it too much for granted that if we go to church, pay our debts, send our children to school, and are generally courteous and well-behaved, good times in the household will follow of course. Would it not be well to arrange a little for them? You live in an agreeable neighborhood, and have families around you whose relations with your own are satisfactory and mutually pleasant. Could you not, once a week, or once a fortnight, this coming winter, have a neighborhood sociable where there could be readings, and recitations, music, and sprightly conversation? And, while naturally the young ladies and gentlemen would be the chief actors and performers on the occasions, it would not be my idea at all to have the maturer people left out. As we go on towards middle life, we are apt to draw ourselves too much from society, and become too devoted to mere work and manifest duty. The boys and girls should not have all the pleasure and cheer. They would be happier, and safer, if fathers and mothers shared with them more of the festivities which are appropriate to their age.

We are often thoughtless in our reproofs of children for their incessant motion, playfulness and vivacity. The bubbling-up of mirth from their youthful natures is like the effervescence of a mineral spring. Yet the children are ill-taught, and ill-bred, if their noisy games and riotous sports are constantly destroying the chance their elders have for rest, recreation, and quiet thought. There is no need of this, nor are they the happier if unrestrained in this regard. The world out of doors is large and roomy enough for romping, climbing, running, chasing and shouting, and every healthy lad and blooming little maiden needs and should have a full share of this active exercise and wholesome frolic. What can you expect of them, however, unless you provide rational amusement suitable for their stage of development, and unless you include them in what is going on in the household? Every intelligent family should have its books and papers, its games and puzzles for the children, but it should have, too, its volume of history or travels, for reading aloud to the whole circle, the younger ones listening, silent and interested, even though they do not understand all they hear. We cannot overstate the culture which young people unconsciously absorb from paying attention to good reading. Their vocabularies are enlarged. They become familiar with good authors, and their respective styles, and they have something to think and talk about far better than the small gossip of the village.

Do not let us think that reading and music are the only factors we can impress into the service, if we would have mirth at home. The winter apples in the bins, the nuts in the bag, the occasional candy pull, the extra dish on a stormy night, the keeping of home anniversaries, remembering each birthday, and distinguishing it by gifts and tokens, and the thousand nameless little courtesies which may be woven into the weeks and months, have each and all their place in binding hearts together and in making life beautiful and benignant. Home should never be dull, insipid, or flavorless. It may be shaded by sorrow, it may be darkened by anxiety, and it may be hedged in by poverty, but if love is there, and tact and unselfishness, there may be mirth and gladness, like rifts in the clouds, every day. It is sometimes a rare heroism to be cheerful in the face of calamity, but there are brave souls who, trusting in the Lord, achieve it. Flowers grow on Alpine cliffs, and the sweetest home blossoms may spring from cold banks of adversity.—Christian Intelligencer.

WHAT A WOMAN CAN DO.

As a wife and mother she can make or mar the fortune and happiness of her husband and children. By her thrift, prudence and good management, she can secure to her partner and herself a competency in old age. By her tender care she can often restore him to good health. By her counsel and her love she can win him from bad company, if temptation, in an evil hour, has led him astray. She can do as much as man, perhaps even more, to degrade him, if she chooses to do it. As a wife she can ruin her husband by extravagance and folly; by want of affection she can make an outcast of a man who might otherwise have become a good member of society. She can bring bickerings and strife into what has been a happy household. She can become an instrument of evil instead of an angel of good. As a mother her words and her ways should be kind, loving and good. If she reproves her language should be choice and refined. The true mother rules by the laws of kindness, and to her children the word "mother" is synonymous with everything pure, sweet and beautiful.

DAVIDSON COLLEGE.

At its recent meeting in Statesville the Presbyterian Synod of North Carolina unanimously approved and adopted the following paper:

Your committee appointed under the resolution "to prepare a paper setting forth the importance of Davidson College to the Church and the country, and urging the friends of Presbyterianism and learning to increase its patronage and to aid in its endowment, respectfully report the following:

Davidson College, dear to all Presbyterian hearts, was established forty-two years ago in Mecklenburg county, in one of the most pleasant and easily accessible parts of North Carolina, and one of the most healthy portions of the United States. It is the child of many earnest prayers, many liberal gifts, and much self-denying and lofty philanthropic labors. After watching its course for many years and through sore trials and serious pecuniary losses, we to-day thank God for its present healthy and stable condition, its past invaluable services to our Church in this State, and in all the States of the Southern Atlantic slope, and for its superior equipment with a noble faculty, equal to that of any other institution of learning in ability to train our sons for active business and professional life.

We know of no institution within our reach that can surpass or even equal Davidson College in these respects, viz:

1. In the ability of its faculty to impart a thorough and effective education.

2. In the high moral tone always prevailing among its students, and the large proportion of them who are candidates for the Gospel ministry in the various churches.

3. In its grand benevolent work in offering tuition free to the sons of ministers of every denomination; and farther, in giving the tuition fees, in the shape of a loan, to any poor but deserving young man.

4. In the cheapness of its boarding ranging from $5 to $10 per month.

Whether therefore the superiority of the education afforded, the moral influence, the generous service for those that need, or the reasonable rates at which such advantages may be obtained, be considered, Davidson College is eminently deserving of a wide and hearty patronage, as the best and safest place for our sons, where the best and safest education may most cheaply be secured.

In view, farther, of these facts, while the college is now on a solid foundation, it yet needs a far more munificent endowment to enlarge its faculty, and to make every desirable improvement in its facilities for doing the best educational work that can be done anywhere in this country.

We therefore second any appeal made by this institution for an increase of its endowment. Its endowment ought to be increased from its present amount to at least $500,000. No lover of sound education and of the cause of our blessed Lord can do anything that will be more effective in promoting these high aims for generations to come, than by bestowing on this loved college the most liberal gifts, both by immediate bestowments, and by generous arrangements for future donations in any effective way.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

FOREIGN.

Gleaned from the London Weekly Review:

A new bridge across the Tiber at Rome, the first built during a thousand years, has been opened without the presence of Pope, cardinal or priest.

The Pope has presented his likeness, by the Hungarian painter, Soldatics, to the Austrian Emperor, and Cardinal Newman has ordered a duplicate of it.

The Pope has given 8,000 francs for the purpose of establishing economic kitchens for the use of the poorer classes in Rome during the coming winter.

On the 1st of January next will appear the first number of the Aurora, a daily paper planned and issued by the Vatican, as a more authoritative exponent of the Pope's views than the existing clerical paper.

The pilgrim's caravan to Mecca, which has hitherto been provisioned at the expense of the Turkish Government, is unable this year to get any assistance, a circumstance which, it is said, has never before occurred since the establishment of the Ottoman Empire.

In a pastoral letter to his clergy, appealing for funds to promote ecclesiastical education, Dr. Vaughan, the Roman Catholic Bishop of Salford, states that the cost of the education of a priest may be estimated at £1,000. During the last seven years he has had to find no fewer than 108 priests, and there are now seventy-five exercising the ministry in the diocese who were not in it seven years ago.

The Church Missionary Society is desirous of establishing a sanatarium on the West Coast of Africa. Mount Cameroons was selected, and an exploring party found a suitable site at an elevation of 7,500 feet; but to build a house and cut a road is more than the society can afford at present, so the missionaries must do the best they can. The idea is quite a new departure in missionary work, and certainly never entered the heads of the old Portuguese missionaries.

A contemporary says that the Senatus of the University of Oxford has, by a majority of nineteen to eleven, refused to accept a bequest of £40 per annum, which was to be given as a prize for the best essay on "The Protestant Christian Religion as Established in this Country by Law." Had the word "Protestant" been omitted the gift would have been accepted, as the Senatus regard the country as essentially catholic.

The Earl of Shaftsbury, speaking at a meeting held at Willis's Rooms to hear an address from the Rev. Dr. Jessup, for twenty-five years missionary in Syria, strongly urged the claims of the American missions to support. He observed, however, that for these missions to identify themselves with any direct aggression upon the Mahommedan religion would be to incur the risk of getting into difficulties, not only with the Turkish Government, but also with our own Government.

Lord Bute has been translating the Breviary, and is evidently inclined to translate the Bible. He cannot use the "Protestant version," for it is admittedly incorrect, and is being revised. Nor can he use the Roman Catholic version, for it is more imperfect than the Protestant. This confession has led to a demand from the Holy See for a new translation. The Weekly Register, however, thinks that the Pope might direct a revision to be made of King James's book. Then it would become "orthodox." Fancy having to make a Bible orthodox.

A ceremony once general among sportsmen, the Mass and blessing of the Dog on St. Hubert's Day, the 3rd of November, has now fallen into disuse. The Duc d'Aumale, however, keeps up the tradition, and at four in the morning he and his guests assembled in the parish church, where his chief huntsman Houvari held in a leash, Rabagas, the oldest member of the pack. Gravely seated on the steps of the altar, Rabagas seemed to receive with some surprise the holy water and the Orleans cockade which was attached to his neck, but he committed no indecorum like his predecessor Corbean, who last year devoured a wax candle. At the elevation of the host, the six huntsmen sounded on the trumpet the blast of St. Hubert, and on leaving the church they gave the "Reveil du Veneur, the "Conde," and the "D'Orleans."

Ritualism in Ceylon.—The Ceylon Observer says: "It was with a feeling of disgust, rather than surprise, that we heard at Kalutara of a characteristic action on the part of Father Dothy, the Anglican 'priest' placed there by Bishop Copleston—and an intolerant action, too—with which some of his own congregation are naturally indignant. It appears that Mr. H. H. Cameron, Assistant Government agent, wished the priest to perform the marriage ceremony which would make that gentleman the partner of Miss Macleod, daughter of the late Dr. Norman Macleod, one of her Majesty's chaplains for Scotland, and of world-wide fame as editor of Good Words; but of course the priest was not going to disgrace his exhanlted office by performing a ceremony in which a Presbyterian should be one of the actors! Refusal was made, and a journey of twenty-six miles had to be made, and another and more liberal minister—a Church missionary—had to be obtained to tie the knot at Galeeface Church, Colombo. It will, perhaps, come to her Majesty Queen Victoria's ears how the daughter of her former favorite minister was refused to be married to a Churchman by one of the priests who receive part of their stipends from the general revenue of this colony—a revenue raised largely from Buddhists, Hindus, and Mohammedans. 'O tempora, O mores!' Even the local Times, the supporter of the Bishop and his priests in many of their pranks, cannot stand this last exemplification of the manners and ways of the extreme Ritualistic school, and roundly calls for a censure from the Bishop on one of his own favorite clergymen, specially selected and imported by himself!"

HOW MUCH BETTER.

How much better were it that thou shouldst even lose something for thyself, and win others thereby, than thou shouldst remain on thy height, and let thy brother perish! Like the servant who hid his Lord's talent, though thou fastest, sleepest on the earth, strewest thyself with ashes and ever mournest, if thou art of no use to others, thou doest nothing great.—Chrysostom.

He who climbs above the cares of the world and turns his face to his God has found the sunny side of life. The world's side of the hill is chill and freezing to a spiritual mind, but the Lord's presence gives a warmth of joy which turns winter into summer.—Howard Crosby.

The Presbyterian.

JOHN McLAURIN, - - - Editor.

WILMINGTON, N. C.:

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 3, 1879.

The Synod of North Carolina, at its late meeting, passed the following resolution:

"The Synod commends the N. C. PRESBYTERIAN as a paper worthy of the confidence and liberal patronage of our people, and hereby encourages its ministers and elders to aid in extending its circulation, until every family is supplied with a copy."

LIBERALITY—FALSELY SO CALLED.

There is a great deal of nonsense indulged in under the name of liberality in religion. We are gravely told that sentiments, beliefs, practices, however contrary to the teachings of Scripture, must be tolerated, if only those who entertain, or who exercise themselves in them are 'sincere.' But religion, restricting the term to its precise signification, is obligation to God, and it necessitates that state of the affections, that exercise of the reasoning powers, and those employments of the energies of mind and body, that are consonant with his revealed will. The only liberality allowable is with regard to such questions of faith or order as are not clearly made known in God's Word. No one, then, may set aside the fundamental doctrines of Christianity, and demand that the hand of fellowship shall be extended as to those who are enrolled in the army of the living God.

Under this false notion of liberality men have been found, Christian teachers and Christian laymen, occupying Jewish synagogues and carefully avoiding the name of Christ lest they should give offense to a part of their auditors. Shame, upon all these who would thus sell the truth! Presbyterians, we rejoice to say, have never been found so recusant to the principles of right and common sense; this while they, of all denominations of Christians, are foremost in tolerating opinions which do not compromise those truths of the Gospel which are essential to salvation.

Yet it is a sore evil even in the Presbyterian Church, that its members are frequently disposed to regard as of little consequence the doctrinal truths which their Church has adopted, fully believes and should unstintedly teach.

Let us extend to all who accept vital faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, as the truth essential to salvation—let us extend to all such our heartiest aid and sympathy; but let us as Presbyterians hold firmly to those doctrines taught by the Apostles under the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, as a most important part of what man is to believe concerning God, and as full of the most comforting assurances to the believer.

The growth of our Church cannot be facilitated by setting aside or ignoring any part of Divine revelation. It owes its power in the past, and will be indebted for its prosperity in the future, to the tenacity with which it intelligently holds, and fearlessly teaches, those much derided doctrines first announced by the Apostle Paul and afterwards formulated by Calvin. Fearful will be its degeneracy, if pandering to a false sentiment of liberality, it obscures those blessed truths which it is its mission to proclaim.

INTRODUCTION OF CHRISTIANITY INTO GREAT BRITAIN.

Some time ago a friend suggested that we should give our readers the historical account of the introduction of Christianity into Great Britain. The special subject, like that of the profane history in general of so many centuries since, is involved in some uncertainty. We can only present opinions which have been advanced and have been entertained in various quarters. Nothing that can be presented will be new to such of our readers as have studied church history, but the presentation may prove not uninteresting to the general public. It will be well if what is written shall lead to general inquiry into the continuity of succession of Presbyterianism, not from the days of the Apostles merely, but from the very foundation of the Church in the family of Abraham.

England was invaded by Julius Cæsar in the year 55 B. C., and in the following year he obtained a firm foothold in the country. The Roman power was not fully established, however, until A. D. 61, when Suetonius destroyed numerous Druidical temples in the Isle of Anglesea and overthrew the British princess Boadicea. About this time, A. D. 63, it is claimed by some that the Apostle James first published the Gospel in Great Britain. Others attribute the first publication of the Gospel to Simon Zelotes, another Apostle, and yet others to Aristabulus, to St. Peter, &c. William of Malmesbury, and after him many other monks, maintained that Joseph, of Arimathea, and twelve others were sent into Britain from Gaul, by St. Philip, A. D. 63, were successful in establishing Christianity, and spent their lives there. Clemens Romanus states that St. Paul travelled to the utmost bounds of the West, and this, in connection with the statement of Eusebius and Theoderet that the Apostles visited Great Britain, is taken to maintain the assertion that St. Paul proclaimed the Gospel in that country. It is likewise urged that among the many thousands of Romans who passed over into Britain in the reign of Claudius and his successors, there were doubtless some Christians who spread the knowledge of Christ. But the principal reliance has been on the reported application of King Lucius to Pope Eletheurus for Christian teachers about A. D. 150-176. (See note of Dr. Murdock on Mosheim.)

Dr. Mosheim considers the balance of probability in favor of the supposition that some of the Apostles, or companions of the Apostles, visited Great Britain, though the fact cannot be established. That Joseph of Arimathea visited that country is altogether improbable. Lucius, Dr. Mosheim agrees, was a restorer and second father of the English churches, and not their original founder. His name is Roman, but he was not a king, as Britain was a Roman province. We quote literally: "His application, I can never believe, was made to the Bishop of Rome. It is much more probable that he sent to Gaul for Christian teachers. The independence of the ancient British churches on the See of Rome, and their observing the same rights with the Gaelic churches, which were planted by Asiatics, and particularly in regard to the time of Easter, show that they received the Gospel from Gaul, and not from Rome."

We have given the above at some length to present one side of the question, but the account of the introduction of Christianity into Scotland, not through the Romish Church but directly from the churches of Asia Minor through Gaul, with which country there was active commercial intercourse, is much more satisfactory. "In confirmation of this view is the assertion of Baronius, the Romish historian, on the authority of Vatican manuscript, that Christianity was carried to Great Britain A. D. 35, thus several years before the death of the Apostle John, which occurred about A. D. 100. Tertullian, born about 60 years after the death of St. John, asserts that 'those parts of Great Britain that were inaccessible to the Romans (i. e. Scotland) had become subject to Christ.' Such a result could only be accomplished, requiring, as it would, the overthrow of the powerful Druidical religion, after many years of labor, and this renders it highly probable that the Gospel was proclaimed during the lifetime of the Apostle last mentioned. But the probability, amounting almost to certainty, is established by the fact that "Scotland was occupied, in part at least, by a branch of the great Celtic race, which, taking its origin in Asia Minor, extended its migrations through Asia Minor, across to Northern Italy, and Southern Germany, to Gaul, Iberia and the British Isles, giving its indelible characteristics to the Celtic people of France, Scotland and Ireland. A branch of this race occupied Galatia, and it is very easy to see from the Epistle to the Galatians that these Gauls of ancient times had precisely the same characteristics of the Gauls of modern times, and would be likely to act from the same impulses. The blood relationship of the Celtic tribes would naturally lead to missionary efforts from the Celtic or Galatian Christians of the East among their brethren of the West, and these efforts would be likely to extend to the Celtic tribes of Britain, Ireland Scotland, by the ordinary channels of intercourse which were open throughout the Roman empire. Hence, we find the origin of that Celtic Christianity which is as distinct a type of the Church as the Greek, Latin or Teutonic Christianity. The type of Christianity introduced into Scotland, let it be remembered, was not that of Rome, but that of the Eastern Churches."

Neander says that "the peculiarity of the later British Church is evidence against its origin from Rome, for in many ritual matters it departed from the usage of the Romish Church, and agreed much more nearly with the Churches of Asia Minor. It withstood for a long time the authority of the Romish papacy. This circumstance would seem to indicate that the Britons had received their Christianity either immediately, or through Gaul, from Asia Minor, a thing quite possible and easy by reason of the commercial intercourse." Other authorities are quoted by Dr. Moore in his little book entitled the "Culdee Church," but our limits do not admit of further extracts.

We have quoted much of the above verbatim from Dr. Moore's work above mentioned, and in conclusion advise our readers to procure the book from the Richmond Committee of Publication, not only for information on the subject to which our remarks are necessarily restricted, but to show to them that Presbyterianism can be established as a continuous succession from the Apostolic Church.

COLLECTIONS FOR THE ASYLUM.

We have little doubt that the suggestion to take up collections for the Orphan Asylum at Oxford, on Thanksgiving Day, was generally followed.

In Raleigh churches of various denominations held joint services and collected for the purpose.

In Wilmington joint services of Methodists, Baptists, Lutherans and Presbyterians were held in the First Baptist church. The audience was very large, and Rev. E. A. Yates, of the Methodist Church, delivered a discourse which could not be surpassed in its appropriateness to the occasion and its general merit. After the sermon, Rev. J. B. Taylor, pastor of the Baptist church, very happily presented the needs of the orphans, and furnished information as to the past usefulness and the present facilities of the Asylum. The collection amounted to $116 25.

A collection among the merchants of Wilmington, without general personal appeal, realized $36.

These collections throughout the State, we trust, will amount in the aggregate to a sum sufficient to help on the orphans for sometime to come.

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

We beg attention to our premium offers, which will be found on the third page.

On Sabbath evening, 16th, as we are pained to learn, through a correspondent, died little Mary Walker, an infant child of Rev. James M. Wharey. Such announcements always cause a sympathetic thrill in hundreds of hearts, but those who know the parents will feel for them most deeply.

The article "Presbyterianism Defended" on first page is the first of several which will appear. It seems hardly necessary to state that they will be clear, firm and positive expressions of the truth from a Presbyterian standpoint.

The Assembly's Executive Committee on Foreign Missions are so much encouraged by an increase of receipts in October that they have ventured to appoint three missionaries for the fields most urgently needed. We give the information from the Missionary:

At the last meeting of the Executive Committee of Foreign Missions, Rev. B. F. Thompson, of the Synod of Nashville, Mr. A. Sydenstricker, of the Synod of Virginia, and Mr. Joshua Phipps, of the Synod Nashville, were appointed foreign missionaries. Mr. Phipps and Mr. Sydenstricker, are members of the senior class in Union Seminary, Virginia, and they will not be ready to engage in the work until their studies are completed, which will not be until next spring. Mr. Phipps is expected to join the Greek and Mr. Sydenstricker the China Mission. Mr. Thompson graduated at Union Seminary something more than a year ago. He is expected to reinforce the Pernambuco Mission, and it is hoped he will be ready to sail by the first of January next, if not before.

The Essex County (N. J.) Bible Society proposes to celebrate in 1880 the semi-millennium of the English Bible, and invites Bible Societies throughout the State of New Jersey to unite with it. The Wickliffe translation of the Scriptures was finished in 1830.

We had intended to note last week, but it was overlooked, that Rev. J. B. Converse, one of the editors of the Christian Observer had retired from his connection with that journal, giving place to his brother, Rev. T. E. Converse.

A writer in the Christian World, a Baptist paper, proposes the following:

"I wish to throw out a suggestion. Paul speaks of some who were 'baptized for the dead;' why should we not have baptism for the infirm? It seems to have been considered right that all in some form or other should be baptized; if any was prevented by death, another was baptized for him. What objection can possibly be raised against baptizing by substitute those prevented by infirmity? Of course it would be needful to take stringent precautions against any who 'may well endure it' claiming that they are 'weak;' but, on the other hand, I would remind my Baptist friends that, if immersion cannot be made in some form or other applicable to all believers, whatever their bodily state, that is strong argument against it."

What next?

So much clear, sound, solid sence is contained in the remarks of the the National Baptist, as given below, on the subject of ministerial support, and the comments of the Christian at Work are so appropriate, that we adopt the whole and give it to our readers:

"The National Baptist takes up the subject and comes to the conclusion that 'the man who preaches for a church gratuitously does them a harm, fosters in them a spirit of niggardliness, and defrauds to pastor who comes after him. All over the country are churches that have been ruined by cheap or gratuitous preaching. They give nothing; they do nothing.' And it tells the story of what occurred in Indiana:

"'A minister moved into the State at an early day and took up a large tract of land. He worked on it through the week and on Sunday preached to four churches. He had no salary; O, no; he was none of your hireling ministers; the people turned out and did his plowing and his harrowing, and his mowing and his reaping; 'and,' said he, 'I have seen thirty teams on my land at a time.' Meanwhile the land was rising, and he became quite a rich man. He rarely preached that he did not cast scorn and reproach on 'salaried ministers;' but it is very safe to say that, in proportion to the labor he bestowed, not a minister in the country got a better salary. Before he died he set up each of his sons with a fine farm. It is proper to add that before his death this brother saw his error and frankly confessed it. 'I have been soundly converted,' he said, in public. Let us have done with this folly of preaching without pay for those who are able to support the Gospel.'

"The minister fared better than most ministers who get no salary. One of the most acceptable of ministers and pastors we ever knew was possessed of a very handsome fortune yielding a large income. But he obliged his church to pay him a decent salary, which, let us say, he expended in charity. In this way his church was brought up to the high water mark of Christian giving. If they had had their preaching for nothing, they would have considered it a cheap article, to be valued accordingly. Except in case of the extremest poverty, it is a great mistake to preach to any church gratuitously; besides which, a Gospel supplied gratis, with the minister supporting himself, is pretty apt to prove seed sown on stony places, which, because it has no root, withers and dies away. Old Satan, no doubt, would like to establish a few of these don't-pay-your-preacher-a cent churches. Clearly he has nothing to fear from them. The Apostle Paul was alike the greatest preacher of his time and one of the most disinterested of men. Yet he would have his earnings. As a rule, the clergy will do well to be satisfied to follow the great apostle's example."

NEWS NOTES.

We specially invite news from all quarters for this column.

Correspondents will please note that the address of Rev. P. P. Winn is changed from Taylorsville, Alexander county, N. C., to Statesville, Iredell county, N. C.

The ladies of the Home Missionary Society of the First Presbyterian church of Raleigh held a dime party last week. The entire proceeds will be given to aid in building a Presbyterian church in Wilson, N. C. We have not heard the amount realized.

The following refers, we feel quite confident, to Moore's Creek church. Our kind brother failed to give the name:

"On the first Sabbath of this month at our regular communion we received into the full communion of the church two persons. Bro. D. B. Black was with us, and preached two good sermons for us on the Sabbath. May the Lord add unto the Church such as shall be saved." K. McDONALD.

BETHANY CHURCH.

We have just closed an interesting meeting at the old Bethany church, which continued one week. Mr. Rumple did good service and preached fourteen times with great power. The church was much refreshed, and many were deeply impressed, though only four of our precious youth professed conversion.

E. F. R.

Cool Springs, Nov. 20, 1879.

The following, sent us by Capt. W. J. Potter, colporteur for the American Tract Society, we publish with pleasure:

"Dear Bro: It was good to see a crew of shipwrecked sailors of the Norwegian brig Prosperity around their boats praying and giving thanks for their deliverance after being stranded on the beach. When I came up to them they were singing the Gospel Hymns in their own tongue. I made the proposition to hold prayer, and led first, and they all followed audibly."

"Smithville, N. C., Nov. 26."

Swedish and Norwegian sailors are generally Lutherans, and frequently have a pious element in their natures that is sadly wanting in the seamen of other nationalities.

INSTALLATIONS.

Rev. W. B. Arrowood was installed pastor of the churches of Hoge's Chapel, Pearsalling and Walker's Creek, in Giles county, Va., on Friday, Saturday and Sunday, the 21st, 22d and 23d of November. Rev. W. W. Dinwiddie preached the sermon and delivered the charges on each occasion. Rev. S. R. Preston, who was appointed to assist, was not present.

Dear Presbyterian: It is many a day since I sent you an article from my pen, but yesterday was such an interesting day to many of us that I feel constrained to give you some account of it; and though I am "only a woman" and not even a member of the church of which I write, I still dared to claim, and felt that I received, a part of the blessing that came to Grassy Creek church in the installation of their pastor, the Rev. John W. Primrose.

The day was very cold, but the sunshine of heaven seemed to beam upon us with unusual brightness as we wended our way (six miles) to the old church which has passed through so many vicissitudes, but now once more lifts up its venerable head and bids Presbyterianism "arise and give thanks," for a new era is commenced in our midst. Not only Grassy Creek, but our dear old Shiloh, whose closed doors have looked so silent and sad, are now awake to the voice of a shepherd, and soon, we hope, to be united into one pastorate.

Well, having arrived at the end of our six miles, we were glad to see that the coldness of the weather had not reached the hearts of the people, as the church was soon filled, not quite to overflowing, but with a goodly number of earnest and attentive listeners to the faithful preaching of the Rev. John S. Watkins, who conducted the entire service, both Mr. Jordan and his alternate being unavoidably absent. I wish I could tell you of that fearfully truthful and solemn sermon, but will only give the text, which was, "And let him that is unjust be unjust still, and he that is filthy let him be filthy still." I hope that Mr. Watkins will preach that sermon many times, and that I may hear it again and again, if not from his lips yet from the Spirit which brought it home to our hearts and consciences. Truly, many of our ministers, of other denominations as well as our own, are preaching with greater power and unction than in days past. What does it portend? May it not be the dawning of the glorious kingdom of our Lord?

The charges, both to the pastor and people, were most solemn, earnest and faithful. A year ago I heard the charge given to him (Mr. Watkins) on his installation at Raleigh, and it seemed peculiarly appropriate that the one who received it on that occasion should perform the same office for his brother minister on this. We of the Shiloh church hope to participate in a like service a year hence in our own little church.

There are other things of interest to us that I would like to write of, but I must not trespass further upon your time and space.

Very truly, B. R. S.

For the N. C. Presbyterian.

E. & O. E.

MR. EDITOR: In two places in the Abstract of the Proceedings of Orange Presbytery, published last week, your types make blunders, which I should not care to notice in this public manner, but for the reason that they are likely to mislead people interested in the proceedings of that venerable body, and who will read even the dryest sort of ecclesiastical documents.

The first error is in the 1st line of the 1st resolution under the head of Sustentation, &c. The word warmed should read warned. Though encouraged in some respects, the brethren of Presbytery did not feel specially warmed by the "experience of the past" in regard to sustentation. They felt warned, however, by the points that menace the life and progress of the Church through inadequate ministerial support.

The second error is likewise a literal one—letters are little things, but they can make a big difference. It occurs in the paragraph on Routine Business, in the 4th item. The word raise should have been revise. The "Committee on Assessments" was not empowered after the manner the word raise suggests in the connection. There would be a mighty tempest raised in the next Presbytery if this had been so. It is a very difficult thing to keep assessments and apportionments to the mark at which they now stand. Their specific gravity is very positive, and heavier than lead. It is not contemplated, I believe, to raise them any higher.

Yours fraternally,

F. H. JOHNSTON, S. C.

For the N. C. Presbyterian.

TO THE CHURCHES OF THE PRESBYTERY OF MECKLENBURG:

DEAR BRETHREN: In addition to the fields already occupied by evangelists and missionaries, there is an urgent call for an increase of the number of our workers. The fields now served by the Rev. R. A. Miller and Rev. J. P. Gammon, need two more men. And for the counties of Rutherford, Polk and Cleaveland our cause needs another earnest minister in addition to those already in that field.

In order to make this arrangement so necessary for further development and growth of the churches of those fields, it will require enlarged contributions to the Evangelistic and Sustentation Funds. Seven hundred dollars from all our churches to each of these causes will sustain the men already employed and enable us to place three more men at important posts. Now this much can be raised by earnest effort on the part of the elders and deacons of our churches. An average of fifty cents per member for both cases or twenty-five cents for each one, will enable us to accomplish the work. And is it asking too much of any member of our churches to bring an offering of fifty cents for Christ and His cause? I could give you the names of poor children in my church who are giving more than this. Remember God's unspeakable gift of Christ for your present and eternal welfare; remember that though He was rich, for your sake He became poor that you might be rich; and then under the constraining love of Christ it will be your joy to give for the honor of His name and the good of His kingdom. What you do, do promptly; for this is the time of year when there is most money in the hands of our people, and now is the time for earnest work in securing what is so much needed. May God help you in good work and give great success to your efforts.

Fraternally yours,

G. D. PARKS, Ch'rman Com.

MONTHLY REVIEW OF MISSIONS.

From Matamoras we have intelligence as late as the 3rd of October. Miss Hattie Longbridge, daughter of Rev. R. M. Longbridge, for many years a missionary among the Creek Indians, has recently been installed as assistant teacher to Mrs. Hall in the school for Mexican girls in Brownsville, Texas, and there is now reason to believe that this school will become very efficient in promoting the cause of evangelical religion in this whole region of country. Mr. Hall's letter, published in our present issue, shows that vital religion is still making encouraging progress, some fifteen persons having been received to the communion of the two churches during the month on a profession of their faith, and about the same number of children have been added by baptism. Mr. Hall was on a missionary tour up the Rio Grande.

From China, we have letters as late as the 1st of October. Mr. Davis under this date makes the following remarks about the want of laborers, which ought to be seriously pondered by every member of the Church: "We do need laborers so sorely. It is absolutely necessary that another missionary should be sent at once to Hangchow. The brethren in that city are carrying heavy burdens, and if either of them should break down, and there is great danger of it, it is difficult to say what would be the consequences. It is simply heart-rending to see men labor for ten years, and when just ready to stretch out their hands to gather the rich fruits of their toils are cut down or crippled and nobody at hand to take their places and gather the rich harvest." Mrs. Randolph and Miss Safford were both expected back to Soochow about the 1st of October, from their recruiting tours to the north. Mr. Davis was still engaged in getting his translation of the Gospel and Acts through the press.

We have a letter from Dr. Kalopothakes to the 2nd of October. He had just returned to Athens from Salonica, where he had been on a visit to the missionary brethren of that place. Dr. K's health is a good deal impaired, and he much needs relaxation from his onerous labors. He speaks of the imperative necessity of sending an American missionary at an early date to occupy the stations of Volos and Salonica, the former in the province of Thessaly and the latter in Macedonia.

We have letters from Campinas to the 2nd of October. So far as mentioned the missionaries were all well and were prosecuting their labors as usual. Mr. Lane is very much encouraged in the prosecution of his evangelistic labors.—Missionary.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

Milton's Paradise Lost. Books I. and II. With Introduction, M. A., Ph. D.; 65 cents post paid. From Ginn and Heath, Boston, 1879.

Study and parsing in Paradise Lost was dry work to us in boyhood. A book like this would have been a joy indeed. The explanations, literary, lexicographical, and grammatical; the classical parallels, and diagrams with text to unfold Milton's cosmography, are all tersely arranged, and calculated to awaken interest, and stimulate thought and teach true appreciation of true poetry. 'The book is the outgrowth of teaching, and will help students, and be a welcome companion to the general reader. Teachers should send for and examine this book. Lycidas is added, with introduction and notes.

The Primary Teachers' Monthly, Evangelical Undenominational. Mrs. W. F. Crafts, editor. 60 cents a year. December 1879. Western S. S. Publishing Co., John Fairbanks, Manager, Chicago, Ill.

For 1880, this choice magazine will be changed to a quarterly, and the price reduced to 35 cts. a year. Those who try it will hold on to it.

The Fortnightly Review for November. 20 cents a number, or $2 25 a year. George Munro, publisher, New York; contents: A German View of the British Army; Winter Quarters; The Austrians in Bosnia; Men and Women; Arnold's Wordsworth; An Indo-Mediterranean Railway; Fiction and Fact; The Conflict of Laws, II.; Assurance Investments; Home and Foreign Affairs; also, Young Mrs. Jardine, by Miss Mulock, from Good Words.

The Oriental Church Magazine, devoted to religion, science, literature and art. Edited by Nicholas Bjerring. Quarterly. $3 per annum. The American News Company, 39 Chambers street, New York.

Contents: Russia's Great Poet, The Fortunes and Influence of Hellenism, by D. N. Botassi; Modern Spiritualism; Russia's Contribution to Arctic Research, by E. Vale Blake; Yakoob Beg; How the President is Chosen, by W. H. Forman; The Baptismal Service.

This is the third number of this Quarterly, somewhat delayed. It is a valuable enterprise in bringing before English-speaking people the Russian view of their literary, national and ecclesiastical affairs. The publication of the Church's Liturgies is most acceptable, as illustrating the faith of millions who adhere to the Greek Church.

Geo. Munro, 17 Vandewater street, New York, sends his cheap republication of the English Monthly, The Nineteenth Century, November, 1879, $2 25 a year.

Contents: Public Business in the House of Commons, by Henry Cecil Raikes, M. P.; The History of Money, by Sir John Lubbock, Bart, M. P.; Is Typhoid Fever Contagious? by Dr. T. J. Maclagan; Alsace-Lorraine Since 1871; Cinderella; The Noxious Gases Bill; Experiments in Punishment, by Sir Edmund F. Du Cane; Compulsory Providence—a reply to Mr. Blackley—by the Rev. W. Walter Edwards, M. A.; The Book Language of China, by Herbert A. Giles; The Unity of Nature—a speculation—by the Rt. Rev. the Lord Bishop of Carlisle; The Spoilt Child of Europe, by R. W. Hanbury, M. P.; Splendid Misery, by Miss M. E. Braddon, chapters xviii to xxi.

The South Atlantic for November is on our table. Contents: Theirs, by Th. Von. Jasmund; Carmelita—continued—by W. H. Babcock; Ah, Pictured Leaves—a poem—by Jno. Henry Boner; Athens, and its environs; Frank Benson's Love Story, by E. W. L.; Editorial—Our Common Schools.

Subscription $3 a year; single copy 30 cts. Mrs. Cicero W. Harris, Wilmington, N. C.

St. Nicholas. The promise of Scribner & Co. that the December number would excel is amply fulfilled.

Art in the Nursery. Price 50 cents. Boston: D. Lothrop & Co., Publishers. It has indeed been a very long time since we have seen a book so well calculated to please the children. The Pictures are irresistibly droll, and may well amuse even older persons. For a Christmass present for the little ones we can think of nothing better.

Every Day Songs. By H. C. Schoeller. Published by R. W. Carroll & Co., Cincinnati. Price 30 cents.

ECLECTICISMS.

WEIGH THIS.

Nashville Advocate:

A mercenary preacher is a sad spectacle; but no layman can, with any propriety, denounce such a preacher until he has done his whole duty in the matter of supporting the ministry. The observance of this rule would silence many censorious tongues.

SEEK THE HOLY SPIRIT.

United Presbyterian:

To keep good seeds in a condition where they cannot germinate, is a sure way to prevent them from producing fruits and flowers. And if we fill our minds with seed-thoughts without seeking the vitalizing power of the Spirit, what good result can we expect from them? Unblessed knowledge is at best but unproductive.

STUDY THE BOOK.

Presbyterian Journal:

Do you wish to be eminently successful in winning souls to Christ? Study THE BOOK. This is the two-edged sword that pierces to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, joints and marrow, and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart. Machinery has been invented which, worked by skilful hands, can furnish to order a greater number of nominal converts, manufactured in a given period; but "the truth" makes children of God and heirs of immortality.

DILIGENCE.

Exchange:

We find in Scripture that most of the appearances which were made to eminent saints were made when they were busy. Moses kept his father's flock when he saw the burning bush; Joshua is going round about the city of Jericho when he meets the angel of the Lord; Jacob is in prayer, and the angel of God appears unto him; Gideon is thrashing and Elisha is plowing when the Lord calls them; Matthew is at the receipt of custom when he is bidden to follow Jesus, and James and John are fishing. The Almighty Lover of the souls of men is not wont to manifest himself to idle persons. He who is slothful and inactive cannot expect to have the sweet company of the Saviour.

ELECTION.

Examiner and Chronicle:

Multitudes of people hold the doctrine of election in abhorrence. But Rev. H. M. Sanders, in a sermon preached the other Sunday evening from his own pulpit, spoke of it as one of the "precious" doctrines of the Bible, and couldn't see why any one should not hail it as the open door to his salvation. Why should any man hold the electing love of God to be his obstacle? Better do as the aged woman did, who said that if she knew there were but three to be elected, she would go straight to Jesus and find out if she wasn't one of them. So far from being the foe of any one's salvation, the doctrine of election is the only pledge given among men that any person will be saved. Therefore the doctrine was to be received as one of the precious truths of God, full of his own boundless beneficence, and not as an arbitrary hindrance set in the way that leads to life.

THE RIGHT NAME.

Sunday School Times:

A good and efficient Sunday school class without any name is better than a dull and lazy one with the noblest of titles. But if your class does boast some distinctive name, let its members be worthy of it. "Little Lambs of the Flock" does not afford a wholly satisfactory designation of a half-dozen loud-voiced and unruly boys; neither does "zealous workers" befit a class of girls who never work any more than they can help, and who do not even study their lesson before they present themselves in the Sunday school room. If you have a name, fight for it as bravely and as constantly as a soldier fights for his battle-flag; if you cannot do this, the name is not worth printing on your next anniversary programme. It ought to be both a record of past endeavors and an incitement to new triumphs.

NOT THIS WORLD.

Pacific Christian Advocate:

Completed satisfaction is not attainable in this life. God has made the soul so vast in its desires after good, so unlimited in its capacity for the enjoyment of himself, that not anything in this life, even in the economy of grace, will fully satisfy its every want. After the blood of atonement has washed away every stain that sin has made, there is a forgetting of those things that are behind, and a reaching forth unto those that are before. He into whose heart has shined the light of the glorious Gospel of Christ, will not be content until the uncreated splendor of the upper sanctuary shall burst upon his enraptured vision. He who has been permitted to sit together with Christ in heavenly places here will not be satisfied until he be permitted to sit down with the Master upon His throne on high.

RICHEST AND POOREST.

Selected:

Richest are they
That live for Christ so well,
The longest day
Would scarce suffice to tell
In what wide ways their benefactions fell.

Poorest are they
That live to self so true,
Their longest day
Brings but such good to view
As they may need self's service to pursue.

ABILITY AND AVAILABILITY.

Zions Herald:

There is a wonderful difference between ability and availability. Many a minister, without conspicuous self-conceit, is conscious of his ability—natural and cultivated. He knows he can both write and preach better than certain other ministers who are unaccountably popular. He is a gentleman in his manners, and is thus recognized by men of all denominations in the vicinity of his public labors. But strangely enough, his services are not eagerly sought after by the churches. Inferior men, of certain sensational and magnetic abilities, are preferred before him. He cannot condescend to the modes that seem to secure the popularity and success of these men. He does not believe in cant, in effusive exercises and demonstrative performances. But still, in every church, there will be seen this broad distinction between ability and availability. The former will oftentimes fail to impress the masses, while the latter sweeps everything before it. Happy is he who is both able and available; but God has a place for every one; the great secret of life is to find it and be satisfied with it.

At a school house a few miles from Lexington, Ky., a protracted meeting of about ten days resulted in nine additions to the church.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

SOUTHERN.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Rev. R. B Morrow, who has been acting as stated supply of the Presbyterian church at Brandon, Miss., for the past two years, announced to the congregation that on January 1st his labors with them would cease. On the 21st ult. a congregational meeting was held and resolutions complimentary to Mr. Morrow and expressing regret at his decision were passed.

Lexington Presbytery will meet in the chapel at Millboro Depot on December 3d, at 7 p. m., to consider the call from Windy Cove church for the pastoral services of Rev. G. L. Brown for all his time, to consider the missionary ground adjacent to the churches in Bath county, and to effect such changes in the pastoral relations in Bath county, as may seem wise.—Staunton (Va.) Vindicator.

Rev. L. B. Cheney writes to the Texas Presbyterian from Weatherford, Texas, under date of Nov. 20th: "Since you last heard from us we have had two additions on profession of faith. Our church is growing steadily in numbers and piety, and in favor with the people. We confidently expect eight or ten more additions very soon."

We noted last week, through the kindness of a friend, that Rev. Dr. Smoot would not leave Austin in response to a call from the church at Houston, Texas. We copy from the Texas Presbyterian; "His church so earnestly protests against his removal that he feels it his duty to remain with them. His further considering the call would cause them to carry the matter to Presbytery and protest against it. In view of the fact that the church has doubled its membership, the debt be found against the church has been largely reduced, and that the general prosperity of the church is now so encouraging he is compelled from a sense of duty to decide adversely to the call. The Houston church will be disappointed in the decision and the Austin church will be gratified."

The Synod of Texas, at its late session at Fort Worth, adopted a request to the General Assembly to divide the Synod. The Presbyteries of Dallas, Paris and Eastern Texas to be called the "Synod of Red River," and the remaining Presbyteries, viz: Western Texas, Brazos and Central Texas to constitute the Synod of Texas. The new Presbytery of Paris was formed from Eastern Texas.

In the Synod of Memphis the subject of Sabbath desecration was very prominent, and strong recommendations for action were sent down to the Presbyteries.

At the session of the Presbytery of Eastern Texas, Nov. 15th, Churches of New Hope, Alston and Freewill (colored) were reported as organized since last meeting. Alex. Turner, the colored candidate at Tuskaloosa, was reported as making good progress. Presbytery, after examination, decided to ordain Mr. W. M. Viney (colored) as an evangelist to the colored people. The ordination will take place on Saturday, December 6.

At Dallas Presbytery, meeting Nov. 18th, Wise County Church was reported as organized by the evangelist. Rev. R. S. Burwell was granted permission to retain the call from Denton church till next Presbytery. Rev. Dr. R. T. Baird was received from the Presbytery of East Hanover.

Rev. M. L. Frierson, pastor of the church at Florence, writes us under date of November 17: "I have just returned from a series of meetings in the country, about ten miles from Florence. A church known as Middle Cypress church, was organized, with eleven members. Messrs. Jacob Potterfield and James Simpson were chosen as elders, and Dr. J. D. Yeiser and Mr. Wm. Hull, deacons. One member was received on profession of faith, and several more will join at our next meeting, who were hindered by sickness and other causes at this meeting.—Ib.

Four additions were made to the church at New Providence, Va., recently. Rev. J. E. Booker of Staunton, aided Rev. Dr. Junkin, the pastor.

Correspondents are requested to note the change of address of Rev. James Shearer, from Liberty Corner, N. J., to Huntington, W. Va. Mr. Shearer takes charge of the Presbyterian church at Huntington.

Rev. Dr. John D. Matthews, late pastor of Portland Avenue church in Louisville, Ky., has accepted a call to the Presbyterian church in Denison, Texas.

Rev. Jerry Witherspoon, of Maysville, Ky., has received a call to the church at Jackson, Tenn.

The Christian Observer says: Ten communicants were recently added to the church at Columbus, Miss., under the pastoral care of the Rev. J. D. McClintock.

The Reid Memorial church, in Summerville, Ga., is to be supplied by Rev. W. S. Bean, formerly pastor of the Presbyterian church at Washington, Ga.

Rev. J. A. Armstrong has returned to his charge at Shepardstown and Kearneyville, W. Va. He has been absent recruiting his health, which is much improved.

Rev. J. M. Clymer writes that an interesting work of grace is in progress in his church in Keyser, W. Va., in which he has had the assistance of Rev. H. M. Woods, of Martinsburg. Fifteen persons have presented themselves at the inquiry meeting, while others seem deeply impressed. He will continue the meeting, praying that the Lord will grant them an abundant harvest.—Christian Observer.

Rev. A. W. Milster writes to the St. Louis Presbyterian from Caledonia, Mo., Nov. 17: "I spent a week, including the second Sabbath in this month, with Rev. J. B. Rubey, bishop of Wayne county, in a meeting at the Water Valley church, which is under his care. We had, in many respects, a delightful meeting. Christians were revived, and six persons were brought out from the world to confess Christ as their Saviour. The Lord be praised and to Him be all the glory. It turned home last Saturday and found, to the joy of my heart, that a precious work of grace had begun here. It came without any preconcerted plans on our part. It began with the Methodist quarterly meeting, but has been from the first, virtually, though not in name, a union meeting between the two churches—Methodist and Presbyterian. The entire community seems to be aroused. More than a score have confessed Christ, and many more are anxious about their souls."

NORTHERN.

PRESBYTERIAN.

The Rev. Dr. Charles F. Schaeffer, senior Professor in the Lutheran Theological Seminary, Philadelphia, died in Philadelphia on Sunday, Nov. 23d.

INDEPENDENT CATHOLIC.

The Rev. J. V. McNamara, formerly a Roman Catholic priest, was, on last Sabbath week, elevated to the office of Bishop of an "Independent Catholic Church," in the city of New York. The movement has been led thus far by the eloquent "Bishop" and one or two ex-priests who were converted through his preaching.—Presbyterian Journal.

BAPTIST.

The Worcester Academy, in Massachusetts, is a Baptist Academy. It is free from debt, has a very commanding location, a fine building valued at $100,000, and an endowment of $56,000. Lately the President of the Board of Trustees, Hon. J. H. Walker, said to the Trustees: "If you will raise $20,000 I will add $10,000 to it." The condition has been met, and $30,000 have been added to the endowment. He has given in all $16,000.—Presbyterian

Within a few days $5,000 have been paid into the Treasury of the American Baptist Publication Society, for the Bible work of the Society.—Presbyterian.

METHODIST.

There is a new Methodist church. It budded in the 10th of February last, and has more recently taken a name, "The Annual Conference of the Methodist Church. Its chief strength is in Philadelphia. Its features are no bishops, no time-limit of the pastorate, and the English Wesleyan system of making appointments. This church has twelve appointments, ten of which are in Philadelphia.—Presbyterian.

We recommend MESSRS. R. B. ANDREWS & Co., of Raleigh, to any of our readers needing clothing. No house in the State we feel sure, enjoys a better reputation.

THE UNKNOWN.

Messrs. Howell & French, Tar Heels, as they style themselves, have laid before us their amateur paper, The Unknown. It is very creditable for the first copy and we wish our young friends abundant success.

SECULAR MISCELLANY.

Paris is again established as the legal capital of France. M. Gambetta congratulated the Chamber of Deputies on the restoration.

Three more Roman Catholic bishoprics are to be established in the United States under the jurisdiction of the Archbishop of New York.

Mexico is again revolutionizing. The Mexican army is being depleted by desertions and the government finds difficulty in procuring men to oppose the insurgents.

There are twenty-one artesian wells in Fort Worth, Texas, fourteen of which yield from 300 to 1,500 barrels of water per day. This water is conveyed to all parts of the city in water tanks on wagons, and delivered at ten cents per barrel to consumers.

A fire occurred on the west side of Cape Fear river, at Wilmington, on the night of the 29th inst. The damage was not serious, though the stills of Mr. Alfred Martin and of Mr. Alex. Johnson were seriously imperilled. A few barrels of rosin and tar and a dross still belonging to Mr. Martin were consumed, and Mr. Johnson lost his cooper shop and tools, and a lot of staves. The property of the latter was fully insured.

Oranges, lemons, olives and almonds are to be cultivated in Florida soon by a large number of Italian colonists, on their way to that State.

Dr. D. L. Phares of Wilkinson county, Miss., has discovered a process by which he can make sorghum syrup equal to the finest Louisiana golden syrup. It is claimed, also, that from good sorghum cane two hundred barrels of molasses, or eight thousand pounds of sugar, can be made to the acre.

The whaling barque Helen Mar arrived at San Francisco, Nov. 26th, from the Arctic ocean, bringing the crew of the barque Mercury, abandoned in the ice October 24th, north of Herald Shoals, where the barque Vigilant was also fast when the Helen Mar left. The captain of the latter fears the Arctic exploring yacht Jeannette will be frozen up in the ice pack, in which case there is little hope of her getting out.

On Monday night, 17th ult., at 12 o'clock, MAY, wife of W. Harriss Northrop, aged 35 years.

We know not now, but we shall know hereafter.

Near Beatty's Bridge, Bladen county, N. C., on the morning of the 25th ult., Mr. WILLIAMS GAYLOR departed this life, in the 51st year of his age.

Mr. Gaylor was a member of Black River Chapel, and died in the full assurance of a blessed resurrection. He was a devoted husband, an indulgent father and a kind and obliging friend and neighbor. He leaves a widow and seven children to mourn their loss. But they sorrow not as those who have no hope.

IN MEMORIAM.

In the death of Mr. DUNCAN MALLOY, on the 2d of November, we mourn the loss of an esteemed relative, a valuable member of the community and an example of the believers, in word, in spirit and in faith.

Born on the 20th of July, 1803, he was brought up in the Laurel Hill neighborhood, Richmond county, N. C., where also he died. Endowed with fine mental faculties, possessing remarkable conversational powers and an unusual tact in imparting his knowledge, he engaged at different periods of his life in the business of teaching, with good success. In his early manhood, following the steps of thousands of others seeking the earthly good, he searched through all the West, and down into the foreign regions of South America. But his kind Protector and Guide, reserving a better thing for him, withheld this from his grasp, and, leading him by ways that he knew not of, brought him back to set his face heavenward, and his affections upon a more enduring substance, and to start anew on the journey to the home of his heart and his portion forever. Now, when his Heavenly Father says to him, "Seek ye my face," his heart replies, "Thy face, Lord, I will seek." And in response to the mercies that followed him all his days, he was heard to say, "I shall be satisfied when I awake with Thy likeness; I shall be perfectly, perfectly happy." He found the supreme good, and desired nothing beside it, but with the insatiable ambition that religion inspires longed to know his Lord more clearly, resemble Him more closely, and enjoy Him more fully. Experiencing the enlarged views and feelings of the subjects of Divine grace, he soared by all that mortals idolize, and keeping on the wing, continued the search till he reached the rest and the prize, so satisfying, so infinite. He felt all the sentiment of the poet—

"He, by Himself hath sworn,
I on this oath depend,
I shall, on eagles' wings upborne,
To heaven ascend;
I shall behold His face,
I shall His power adore;
And sing the wonders of His love
Forever more."

Such is the excellency of the soul. Other creatures partake of the present good suited to their natures, and seek no farther. Man alone is capable of such sublime satisfaction. He was made for it. Without this hope his greatness would be unaccountable. As it has been forcibly expressed, "He would seem a vessel freighted at an incalculable expense for an important enterprise, designed to sail an immense voyage, only to cruise a few leagues a few days, then founder and be lost."

Many who, like our friend, have reached the three score years and ten, seem to have run their round, while he just entered the threshold of existence, and now, with capacities amazingly enlarged, and the cycles of eternity to be provided for, what attainments and enjoyments that will yield unwavering satisfaction forever and ever, has he entered upon.
A FRIEND.

MARRIED.
